And their eager feet brought them swiftly, each in something of dishabille, to receive the one who had left them so sadly the night before. He was no longer sad. He greeted them brightly, smiling warm affection upon them.

"What a glum and gloomy old parent I was last night," he began at once. "What a hopeless and sour old curmudgeon you had to put up with!"

"Father, no!"

Then his voice deepened. "Girls, forgive me. I was surprised, and I lost my bearings. But just for a little while."

"You've got them again," crowed Ginger triumphantly.

He smiled at her. "Yes, I've got them again. But I shouldn't have lost them. Sit down, girls—Miss Jenkins—let's talk it over together. You see, it is like this. Years ago, before even Helen was born, I dedicated my life to the Lord's work. I dedicated my service, my time, my money—even my family. Well, what then? He has used me—a blunt and stubborn instrument many times—for all these years. If He has finished with me, what of it? If He wants me again, He will show me where, and how. What have I to do about it? Nothing. See how foolish I was."

"Father," gasped Ginger in a shocked low voice, "do you mean that you are not going to try—even to try—to get well any more? Are you just going to give up—and let go?"

"Most certainly not, my dear child. I am going to stay at Pay Dirt as long as I can, and get just as strong as I can. I shall go to Chicago for all the care we can possibly afford. And I shall pray without ceasing for God to bless the means we use. But the outcome—what difference does that make? None. If I am not to be used in Red Thrush any longer, what difference? Perhaps I shall be of service some place else. If I have completed by labor entirely, that is entirely satisfactory to me. I am perfectly content, I have no fears, not even for my dear daughters, for whom I wished to do so much. Foolish of me! Did I not dedicate my family cares along with the rest of my life? How foolish it was for me to worry."

"Of course it was. For I told you I would take care of you. Don't laugh! I mean it."

"I am not laughing, Ellen, I believe you. When the times comes, I know that you truly will take care of me. And I am glad to have it to be sure of."

Souvenirs From Garden of Eden for Tourists

If, on your vacation you happen to stumble into the town of Qurna at the junction of the Tigris and Euphrates rivers you may not be impressed by the scenery or the city but you will soon be informed that it is the site of the Garden of Eden and to prove it you will be shown the "Tree of Knowledge," says a writer in the Washington Star. The tree is merely a decayed trunk with a few scraggly branches and these will soon be out of business, but the natives have thoughtfully planted another tree nearby and this baby will probably do service as "the tree" when the older one has departed.

Anyone visiting this locality is presumed to have come to see the tree, for there is little else, and the children of the town are eager in their efforts to act as guides to visitors. The new arrival is at once spotted and surrounded by the juvenile guides and almost dragged to the tree. Arriving on the ground the boys will bound into the branches and offer chips as souvenirs.

Pigs as Currency

A traveler who has returned to England from the Pacific has been telling some amusing stories of things that go on in the New Hebrides. Pigs, he says, are not only eaten on a large scale, but they are the standard currency in the island. There are certain ceremonies at which it is very important to have pigs, and they are frequently borrowed. The men who lend pigs are like money lenders, demanding interest on their loan, and when the pig is paid back it must be the size the pig that was loaned would have grown to during the time it was borrowed.

WARNINGS AND PROMISES

(TEMPERANCE LESSON)

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 7:1-23 (Print vv. 1-12, 15-27).

GOLDEN TEXT—Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down and cast into the fire.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Obeying Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Keeping the Law of Christ.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Truth About Alcoholic Beverages.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Cutting Down the Corrupt Tree.

I. Concerning Censorious Judgments (vv. 1-12).

1. The sin and folly of (vv. 1-5).

This prohibition should not be so construed as to forbid our making an estimate of the lives of those about us, for "by their fruits ye shall know them." Neither should it prevent us from administering rebuke to those who deserve it. It is not wrong to condemn the errors and faults of those who are in the way of sin. It does not mean that sin should go unrebuked until we ourselves are perfect. It rebukes readiness to blame others and to magnify their weakness and error.

2. The duty of discrimination in dealing out holy things (v. 6).

The Gospel should be preached to all. We should turn from those who reject and treat with contempt the Gospel message.

3. Qualification for discrimination (vv. 7-12).

(1) A life of prayer (vv. 7-11). Only those are able to rightly divide the word of truth who live a life of prayer. (2) A disposition to treat others as one would be treated (v. 12). It is not merely to refrain from doing injury, but positively to do for others that which we would desire to have done unto ourselves under similar circumstances. No man can live this rule unless he has been born from above and abides with Christ.

II. Entrance Into the Kingdom Urged (vv. 13, 14).

There are two ways only before each one—life and death, heaven and hell. The narrow gate is the way of life. While the gate is strait and the way narrow, it is an open gate and the only gate to life, and all are invited to enter. The gate which opens to every good thing in life is strait—restricted. The way of Jesus Christ is not the way of the crowd.

III. Warnings Against False Teachers. (vv. 15-20).

1. Their real existence (v. 15).

Ever since God has had a people, false prophets and teachers have appeared among them.

2. Their nature (v. 15).

(1) They are hypocritical. The devil does his most successful work by masquerading as an angel of light (II Cor. 11:14, 15). His ministers appear in this way and turn people from the narrow to the broad way. (2) They are destructive. This is suggested by their being ravening wolves. It is when the wolf is in sheep's clothing that it does its most destructive work. False teachers are doing their most deadly work while pretending to be loyal to the Bible and Jesus Christ.

3. The unfailing test (vv. 16-18).

"By their fruits ye shall know them." Every tree bears its own kind of fruit. One may search the universe in vain for an exception to this rule. It is equally true in the spiritual world—there is a vital connection between faith of heart and fruit of the life.

4. Their ultimate end (v. 19).

Although God has infinite patience and bears long. He will see to it that this evil work does not go on forever.

IV. The Dangers of Empty Profession (vv. 21-23).

1. Merely calling Christ Lord will not answer for doing his will (v. 21).

2. One may do supernatural works and not be saved (vv. 22, 23).

Not all supernatural worlds are divine. There is a supernatural world of evil. It is the business of every believer to test the Spirit (I John 4:1, 2).

3. Separation from God (v. 23).

One may have been a Sunday school teacher or a minister and have performed many mighty works and yet hear from Christ the awful words, "I never knew you; depart from Me."

V. The One and Only Safe Way (vv. 24-29).

1. Hear the sayings of Christ (v. 24).

To do this one must give attention to reading the Word of God.

2. Do what Christ commands (vv. 24-29).

Hearing and doing the teachings of Christ is building upon solid rock. Hearing and not doing Christ's sayings is to build upon the sand.

Properly Protected

If a man have Christ in his heart, heaven before his eyes, and only as much of temporal blessing as is just needful to carry him safely through life, then pain and sorrow have little to shoot at.—William Burns.

Faith

By faith we understand that the worlds have been framed by the word of God, so that what is seen hath not been made out of things which do appear.—Epistle to the Hebrews.

Fish and Game Club Information

After ten years efficient service as superintendent of fisheries and game, George N. Mannfeld died on January 8th, a victim of pneumoia. The state, this department and conservationists generally have lost a faithful servant. His official record will long stand as a monument to his achievements and as a safe guide to his successors in office. His influence, so strongly asserted upon the principles of conservation, has done much to insure that those principles will be maintained in perpetuity.

On January 25th, the conservation commission appointed Walter Shirts, as superintendent of fisheries and game, who solicits the support and co-operation of the citizens of the state, particularly he conservationists.

The severe weather in January made necessary the continued feeding of quails and other birds. The wardens and many clubs and individuals have kept up the work. Reports show that while a few quail may have perished in some localities, generally the birds have come through in good condition. However, should extreme weather be further prolonged, the birds may become weak, and food and shelter will be necessary.

The season is now closed on all hunting and trapping. The last open day for rabbits was January 10th, for waterfowl anr fur animals January 15th.

In December 128 prosecutions were filed for violation of the fish and game laws, resulting in 118 convictions and 10 pending cases. The fines and costs amounted to $2,412.35.

For the new Jasper-Pulaski game reservation the Division purchased 1,531.36 acres of land in December, at the price of $26,-605.80, making the total of 3,871 acres now in the reservation at the total price of $65,988.85.

Scottish Abbey Holds Relics of Robert Bruce

Subject to the fulfillment of certain conditions, the trustees of Professor Noel Paton handed over the following articles to the kirk-session of Dunfermline abbey: 1. A portion of the skeleton of King Robert the Bruce, namely, the metatarsal or bone of the great toe. 2. A small portion of the outer leaden shroud of King Robert the Bruce. 3. A small portion of the tolle d'or in which the body of King Robert the Bruce was wrapped. 4. The remains of one of the iron nails which were found among the remains of the coffin in which the body reposed. 5. The remains of one of the six iron rings, or rather handles, which had been filled in with lead into the largest of two stones protecting the vault of the Bruce when first discovered on February 17, 1818. 6. Twelve fragments—white marble and calm stone—"believed to be portions of the magnificent monument of King Robert the Bruce at Dunfermline destroyed by the Lords of the Congregation." The relics are preserved in an oak glass-fronted cabinet placed alongside of the abbey pulpit erected immediately above the vault of the Bruce.—London Mail.

Washington Stirred Up Over Van Buren's Coach

Van Buren arrived in Washington toward the end of the second week of the session, it being traditional for the Vice President to absent himself until the senate committees had been appointed. On taking the chair on Monday, December 16, he made his first public utterance as the second officer of the land. It was short and one such as others before and after him have made; totally devoid of significance. It provoked no comment; but the coach he had brought over from England did. The adverse journals described it as an English coach of state—"a very splendid carriage, drawn by two beautiful blooded horses, their heads and tails full of a great deal more of intellect, passion, feeling and sublimity than their owner. . . . It is of a dark-olive hue, with ornaments elegantly disposed, shining as bright as burnished gold" and "far more superb than the equipages of royalty."—From "An Epoch and a Man" by Dennis Tilden Lynch.

Wide Use of Amulets

Amulets, writes Frank H. Vizetelly, editor of the New Standard dictionary, were used once not only for the protection of men and women, but also of cattle. The so-called Antonius medallions were very much in demand for this purpose, and were hung upon horses, asses, and oxen, for Antony of Padua had been the patron of the horse and the ass in his day. Cowbells, like bells hung upon infants, were intended originally to frighten away evil spirits, and their use in later times to help the herdsmen to trace the cattle or identify their beasts is a much later idea. Charms against charms also were worn.

Nothing Now

The young son of an Indianapolis physician is intensely interested in moths. He reads everything that comes to hand concerning them. One day when his father saw him poring over a big volume in the library, he said:

"What are you reading, son?"

The son replied: "Oh, about moths, but they don't tell me anything I don't already know about them."

The interested parent asked: "Well, what is the name of your book," when son answered:

"What All Moth-ers Should Know."

Apparently a Highway Victim

Bobbie, aged four, had accompanied his mother on a visit to the home of an over-nice maiden great-aunt. Cautioned for days and days beforehand, he was careful about everything he said and did—until dinner time came. Then he became eager, for he was told that chicken was on the menu.

When this delectable fowl was served, and Bobbie observed that there were no "drum-sticks," but instead were shredded patties, he exclaimed:

"This chicken must have been run over!"

Growth of Sand Dunes

The sand dunes along the shores of lakes are formed by the wind. A stiff breeze blowing along the beach carries some sand with it. It meets some obstacle, a piece of driftwood or perhaps merely a tuft of grass. Some of the sand is deposited and a tiny dune is formed. More and more sand is added until a large mound is formed, sometimes rising to a height of 300 feet. The wind not only builds up dunes but tears them down, so that the sand dunes are constantly changing in form and position.

Not Through

Billy, age five, was invited as a guest with his mother and father to take dinner at a hotel. He was greatly impressed with the service and was especially appreciative of the finger bowl. He had paused in the process of washing his fingers, and the alert waitress started to remove the bowl. This time, however, her attempt was halted, for Billy remonstrated in an unmistakable tone of command: "Don't take the washpan! I want to wash some more dirt off of my hands."

Stricter Law Demanded by Congressman Hogg

(Special to St. Joe News)

Washington, D. C., February 3, 1930. — "Millions of pounds of fraudulent imitation of butter are being sold on the American market," declared Congressman David Hogg in the House of Representatives today in urging the immediate passage of an adequate oleo Bill.

"These compounds are often advertised as butter and they take the place of butter. They are colored to imitate butter, put up in cartons like butter, taste and smell like butter and spread on bread like butter. The manufacturers are not under Government regulation and do not pay the tax required to protect real butter.

"Children fed on oleo products soon show signs of under nourishment and may develop ricketts and numerous other diseases. Japanese and Chinese children have no butter fat. Feed one of these children butter and he will grow larger than any of his ancestors. cestors.

"It costs ten cents a pound to produce oleo. It costs five times as much to produce a pound of butter. The interests of the public demand that socalled cooking compounds shall be brought under regulation. The dairy industry provides vital and essential foods. Its markets must not be encroached upon and disorganized in cheap products sold under deceptive conditions for practically the same price as butter."

WHAT IS A PERMANENT WAVE?

No woman wants her permanent wave to be so obvious that others will know that she has one. You want others to see what wonderful wavy hair you have--natural wavy--not artificially wavy.

A perfect permanent wave is a duplicate of a natural wave- Unskilled operators and poor equipment will usually produce a permanent kink that will give your hair a cheap artificial appearance. You will naturally consider the price but think first of your hair. You would rather pay more and be assured a perfect wave than pay less and run the risk of having your hair damaged and getting a poor wave besides.

A TRIBUTE TO ABRAHAM LINCOLN

Abraham Lincoln was born in the State of Kentucky, on the twelfth of February, in the year 1809. He lived during his early youth in a cabin of one room under conditions of the most abject poverty and ignorance. When his mother died his shiftless father moved to Indiana. Another log cabin was erected which had neither partitions nor floors, and scarcely windows or doors. A few acres were cleared to get the bare necessities of life, and when almost at the period of young manhood, Lincoln had no education whatever.

At the age of 17 he had attained his full height, and a terribly muscular clodhopper he was—tall, raw-boned, with large features, dark, shriveled skin and rebellious hair that stood up so straight that you could count each particular hair on his big, round head. His arms and legs were long and out of proportion; the latter were covered with deerskin trousers, and those trousers were supported by one suspender, strung over a coarse, ill-fitting home-made shirt.

His head was covered with a coonskin hat, without a band, in summer.

There he stood—his knees out of

"Let us have Faith that Right makes Might and in that Faith Le us to the end Dare to Do our Duty as we understand it."—Abraham Lincoln.

joint, his pants shrunk up so high and his shoes shrunk down so low that several inches of dark, bare skin showed out between.

But, my friend, there was
IRON in his blood,
LIME in his bones,
COURAGE in his nerve,
DETERMINATION in his will,
ENDURANCE in his constitution,
GENIUS in his brain,
INTELLIGENCE in his eye,
INTEGRITY in his character,
KINDNESS in his heart,
STRENGTH in his sinews,
RELIGION IN HIS SOUL,
COMMON-SENSE in his make-up.

He had faith in God and humanity, and if Abraham Lincoln be measured by what he did, he was truly great.

The Lordship of Jesus

The Lordship of Jesus is perfect,
Omnipotent Diety, He;
Creator, Preserver and Sovereign
Of man, of the land and the sea;
He maketh the earth His own footstool,
And heaven the place of His throne;
And yet, in the realm of His Lordship
He rules in the hearts of His own.

The Lord of my life is my Savoiur,
He died and arose from the grave,
He liveth to make intercession,—
I know he is mighty to save;
The Holy Ghost now beareth witness
That I have been born from above,
With joy I repeat the glad tidings
Of Christ and His infinite love.

The Lordship of Jesus my Saviour
Is not a mere dream of the mind,
No fanciful imagination
Nor anything else of the kind;
The Lordship of Jesus is Holy,
Eternal in truth and in power,—
So personal, glorious and real,
Each moment of each passing hour.

Some day my Lord Jesus, appearing,
Shall shout and His dead shall arise,
The living saints, caught up so quickly
Shall meet the dear Lord in the skies;
With judgment and great tribulation
This age to an end He then brings,
Establishes His perfect Kingdom
And reigns as the King of all kings.

The Lordship of Jesus my Saviour
Is now and forever the same,
With never a change in His Lordship,—
All praise to His glorious Name;
O' what shall it be to see Jesus,
Behold my dear Lord on His throne,
Forever abide in His presence
With all His redeemed and His own.

—J. C. McCaslin, St. Paul, Indiana.

OBITUARY

Franklin Sechler, son of Levi and Barbara (Kistler) Sechler, was born on April 28, 1859 on the original Sechler settlement in Concord Township. He was a life long resident of this township living in or near St. Joe. During September 1882 he was united in marriage with Mary C. Widney. He departed from this life Saturday, February the eighth, 1930, at the age of 70 years, 7 months and 10 days.

When a youth he received Catechetical instruction at the Lutheran-Reformed Church in Springfield Township, Allen County, and affiliated with St. Mark's Lutheran Church in St. Joe soon after its organization some fifty years ago.

He is survived by his wife, and six children with ten grand-children: Leon Sechler of Butler, John Sechler of Kendallville, and Ralph Sechler, Mrs. Grace Dilley, Mrs. Avis Staman, and Mrs. Agnes Monroe of St. Joe. One brother and two sisters also survive, Henry Sechler of Butler and Susan Sechler and Mrs. Martha R. Widney of St. Joe.

Let his life be his eulogy. He was a friend to all, and charitable in all his relations with man. To the family and those intimately acquainted there remains an imperishable memory of one who was not entirely unsuccessful in following the Christ-like way of life.

The funeral services were held on Tuesday afternoon from the Lutheran Church, with Rev. Stoll, officiating. Interment was made in Riverside Cemetery with E. R. Kinsey in charge.

CARD OF THANKS

Our sincere thanks is hereby extended to our many friends for their kindness shown during the illness and death of our husband and father and for the beautiful floral offerings.

A TWISTER

A city visitor, from one of the windswept states, gazed intently at the spiral fire escape that wound its way down the rear of a thirty-story building.

"Gosh," he exclaimed. "That must have been a danged long ladder before the cyclone hit it."

Rev. G. D. Stoll left Tuesday evening over the B. & O. for Evans City, Pa., to spend a few days in his parental home, returning for Sunday.

Ecclesiastes 12, quoting verses 1-7:

Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them; while the sun, or the light, or the moon, or the stars, be not darkened, nor the clouds return after the rain:

In the day when the keepers of the house shall tremble, and the strong men shall bow themselves, and the grinders cease because they are few, and those that look out of the windows be darkened, and the doors shall be shut in the streets, when the sound of the grinding is low, and he shall rise up at the voice of the bird, and all the daughters of music shall be brought low;

Also when they shall be afraid of that which is high, and fears shall be in the way, and the almond tree shall flourish, and the grasshopper shall be a burden, and desire shall fail: because man goeth to his long home, and the mourners go about the streets: or ever the silver cord be loosed, or the golden bowl be broken, or the pitcher be broken at the fountain, or the wheel broken at the cistern.

Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was: and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it.

SLEEP MORE IMPORTANT THAN FOOD

Although people have been sleeping ever since the beginning of the world, even our most learned medical authorities still differ on the scientific difinition of it. Beyond telling us that it is an unconscious state during which we relax our muscles, breathe more slowly and deeply, have a slower pulse and less pressure in the blood vessels, the physician isn't able to explain what sleep actually is.

Have you ever stopped to think that sleep is so important that we may go without food for a much longer time than without sleep. Even the loss of a single night of rest has a marked effect upon most persons, while any of us may fast for several days at a stretch without harming the body. In fact, many authorities claim that short, regular fasts are very beneficial because of the rest that they give to the overworked digestive system.

There are some persons who are able to get along on a small amount of sleep, but the great majority of people require the normal eight-hour rest to be at their best. Napoleon, Wellington, and Frederick the Great kept going with very little sleep, while Edison has spent a most strenuous life with only four or five hours of slumber each night. The few times during which Edison has varied this programme were when he was concentrating upon his inventions. Then he often went without rest for two or three nights, but after the invention was perfected he would immediately retire and go into a sound sleep for twenty or more hours.

Sound sleepers require fewer hours of sleep than light sleepers, but even those who sleep soundly should get eight hours of rest. As people in good health usually sleep very soundly, and with a minimum of dreams, this indicates that persons in ill health should get all the sleep possible. Strange to say, those in poor physical condition most often suffer from nervousness and sleeplessness; so persons who really need the greatest amount of sleep get very little of it.

The different parts of the body do not sleep with the same degree of soundness. It is well known that it is much easier to awaken a person by scratching his toe than by tweaking his nose. The head sleeps more soundly than any other part; so it seems natural that parts farthest from it would be less unconscious and more able to send their sensations to the brain during sleep.

If you are in perfect health it should be easy for you to awaken at any required time without the assistance of an alarm clock. All that is necessary is to make up your mind just when you want to arise and then actually believe that you can do it. By having regular hours it should become just as easy for you to make your mind wake you at a regular time every morning. When such regularity becomes a habit you'll find it a simple matter to adjust the habit to any desired time. This may seem rather far-fetched but it's sound psychology, just the same.

People show their strength of mind by the manner in which they arise in the morning. The indecisive person may awaken at the desired time, but prefers to loaf in bed awhile. This has a depressing, weakening effect on the human body. Cuitlvate a decisive mind by arising at exactly the appointed time, and you'll always feel better for having done so.

DO YOU WISH TO HELP?

A call is made locally, for the relief of the flood sufferers in Indiana, as coming from the DeKalb County Chapter of the Red Cross. The survey of our own state shows that one hundred thousand acres of land are effected and two thousand families effected with nine hundred families being left homeless. Relief funds are now needed to care for many of these families. Churches and newspapers are asked to make the appeal for support. The county treasurer is Harry Casebeer, Auburn, Ind., and persons wishing to contribute can leave same at News Office or send remittance direct to treasurer.

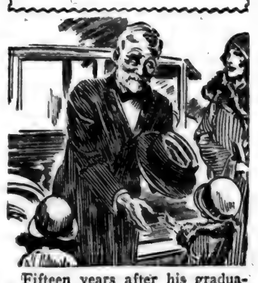
FAMILY DOCTOR MADE MILLIONS OF FRIENDS



Fifteen years after his graduation, Dr. Caldwell became famous for a single prescription, which now, after forty years, is still making friends.

Today Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is the world's most popular laxative. Millions of people never think of using anything else when they're constipated, headachy, bilious, feverish or weak; when breath is bad, tongue coated, or they're suffering from nausea, gas, or lack of appetite or energy.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is made today according to the original formula, from herbs and other pure ingredients. It is pleasant-tasting; thorough in the most obstinate cases; gently effective for women and children. Above all, it represents a doctor's choice of what is safe for the bowels.

Alaskan Bears' Winter Quarters Steam Heated

Lured into the valley of many smokes by volcanic warmth, some of Alaska's big brown bears delayed going into hibernation over two months, reports a hunting party returned from the Alaska peninsula.

Just as dogs pick for their beds the hottest place behind the coal range, tracks and signs showed plainly that bears likewise selected warmed rocks in the steamed area for lounging quarters.

Ground around the moist fumaroles held the claw marks of the big bruins when the hunters passed them. It was not unusual to find bear tracks leading straight up to one of the large open vents. In one place the hot ground apparently excited a bear's curiosity, for he had clawed away the cast-off minerals about the hole, leaving deep claw marks.

It is believed many bears have taken up winter quarters in the steam-heated region.

The SANDMAN STORY

ABOUT THE RICH BOY

STEPHEN'S father was a very rich man. Oh, he was an enormously rich man.

Stephen lived the life of a very rich little boy. His father had several automobiles, and when Stephen wanted to go anywhere it was simply a question of which automobile would be used and whether the chauffeur named Tucker would take him, or whether the chauffeur named Simpson would drive the car.

He went to the seashore for two months of the year, and to the country for another two months, and South for two of the winter months, and to a northern city for another two months.

The rest of the year he was taken traveling or to the family home in a small place which was just like a village during the week, but which became a rich little city for the week-end.

Stephen had often thought it would be nice to be in this place during the week. He had been told of the good time the children had.

He had been told, too, of the school and of the fun they had in the different school teams.

But the family never had stayed anywhere long enough for him to get to know the boys and girls in the place.

Of course they had houses in these different places, but not one of them seemed just exactly like home.

There wasn't much fun in buying anything because there was always so much money that everything seemed too easy to get.

There wasn't much fun when he got anything as he has never had to earn little sums of money or save toward anything.

And he always had a governess with him. He couldn't go to school except in an automobile, and he had to have the governess there, too.

She took him to school and came for him, and yet he was not a little boy.

Boys far younger than he went to school by themselves.

More than that—they looked after sisters and brothers younger than they were.

It was just before they went South, when Stephen was spending a little time in the city home, that he had a plan.

It was a beautiful plan, and he worked it all out very, very carefully.

Once during recess he had talked to a boy across the fence from the school yard.

They were building in that lot, next to the school yard, and a number of children had come there to play while the workmen were having their lunch.

Stephen had heard from the boy of the things that he did, and Stephen in turn had told some things of the way he lived.

It was after this talk that Stephen had made his plans.

One day, just as school was letting out, he rushed into the school yard, and it was not until he had disappeared that anyone noticed he had gone.

He had hurried! He had climbed the fence and had lowered himself into the vacant lot below.

Then he had rushed up the street and around the corner. There he had taken a trolley.

As he got on the trolley he pulled a dollar bill from his pocket.

"How much is it?" he asked.

"Five cents," the conductor answered, and gave Stephen a great deal of change.

Then Stephen sat down in the trolley. There were many other passengers, too. There were quite a number of children, older ones alone and younger ones with their mothers and with older brothers and sisters.

The car stopped every time anyone wanted to get off or on at the corners, and every one seemed to have a say in the matter.

It was thrilling. He sat right opposite other people—wonderful people he had never seen before!

He got off at the street nearest his home. He met his mother, who was greatly upset.

What had he been doing? And didn't he know he had worried them, when the chauffeur and the governess had found him gone when they reached his school?

Yes, he probably had been quite bad. And he was never allowed money after this—everything was paid out for him so he would not have the chance to ride in trolley cars, but he had had that ride and he was happy.

For Meditation

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

LINCOLN'S PROMISE

ON THE 22nd day of September, 1862, Abraham Lincoln reached a grave decision—that he would sign the Emancipation Proclamation. In his diary of that day there has been found, written in his own hand writing, these words: "I have promised my God that I will do it."

What a resolution! We can feel those words quiver with nervous energy. What an indomitable conviction! "I have promised my God I will do it." No discouragement can conquer a spirit like that. Those words express a determination which was capable of leveling all barriers. They opened clear passage ways in the forests of tangled problems. A conviction was born that day in the mind of the Great Emancipator; born not only in dreams, but in his imagination already realized in fact.

L. A. Barrett.

The supreme task of realizing one's ideals demands the Lincoln spirit of consecration of self to a great purpose. He was not unconscious of the difficulties he would have to meet. When these difficulties arose he met them with something more than a mere sense of humor. He did that, but also, exercised a spirit of self control which was nothing less than marvelous. Lincoln never lost patience. His mind though brilliant moved slowly. Fortunately it did, for a mind less well poised than his might have proven very disastrous in those critical periods of our national history. Lincoln promised God he would do it. A deep conviction, expressed in a noble resolution, and finally realized by patient waiting and self control.

It is one thing to have an ideal; it is quite another thing to demand its realization. Convictions and resolutions without patience and self control do not carry us very far. An incident was recently related of a prominent business man in New York who every day took a stroll through Central park, usually in the mornings on his way to his office. During these walks this man would say to himself: Let what will come during the day, I must not lose my self control. I must be a gentleman under all circumstances. I must not allow unfortunate moods to waste my energy, but must work it all up into effectiveness. This self-tuning he called a tremendous tonic and since he adopted this self-tuning, the article stated, he has gone ahead by leaps and bounds.

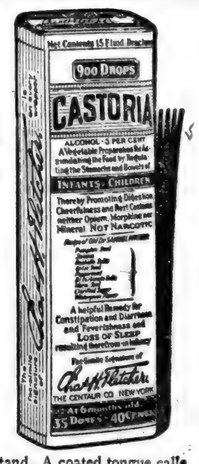
Restless Children



Children will fret, often for no apparent reason. But there's always one sure way to comfort a restless, fretful child. Castoria! Harmless as the recipe on the wrapper; mild and bland as it tastes. But its gentle action soothes a youngster more surely than some powerful medicine that is meant for the stronger systems of adults.

That's the beauty of this special children's remedy! It may be given the tiniest infant—as often as there is any need. In cases of colic, diarrhea, or similar disturbance, it is invaluable. But it has everyday uses all mothers should understand. A coated tongue calls for a few drops to ward off constipation; so does any suggestion of bad breath. Whenever children don't eat well, don't rest well, or have any little upset—this pure vegetable preparation is usually all that's needed to set everything to rights. Genuine Castoria has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper. Doctors prescribe it.

5218 Happy People Give up Their Secret

JUST suppose you could get 5000 joyously happy people together in one big hall and could ask them what made them all so full of pep. Suppose, strangely enough, that all of them had discovered the same way to be happy. You would feel that here, if anywhere in the world, was the secret of how to get joy out of life.

This is just what has happened during the last few weeks. We knew there were millions of people who had found the secret of happiness in the same way, and we asked them in one or two small announcements in the magazines and newspapers to tell us their story. Letters came to us from practically all over the globe.

All of them said "The secret of happiness is health."

How to get this health? The way that all of these people had discovered was not some magic medicine, not some powerful drug, not some difficult course of training—but only a simple, harmless, natural method. It was to keep the body internally clean, sweeping its natural poisons away each day, regularly as clock work—by the use of Nujol.

These people had made a great discovery. They had found out that Nujol contains no drugs; that it is as tasteless and colorless as pure water; pleasant to take and forms no habit; that it cannot hurt you, no matter how much you take; that it is non-fattening; not absorbed by the body; that it is only the internal lubrication your body needs, just like any other machine.

They have found the way to Buoyant, Zestful Health, and the Joy that goes with it

It sounds like a fairy tale, doesn't it, to be well and happy so easily? Well, all you need to do to find out if these people have made a real discovery is to get a bottle of Nujol today at any drug store and take it for two weeks. It costs but a few cents and it makes you feel like a million dollars. The sure way to happiness is through health.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

WHISTLING FOR A WIND

THIS is a widespread superstition among sailors which is translated into practice somewhere on the Seven Seas every day of the year. The sailor on the deck of the coasting schooner becalmed off Cape Cod whistles for a wind in the same manner as did the mariner on the Greek galley becalmed off marbled Ithaca in the days when "Homer swept the lyre."

The heathen of classical times—at least in the lower orders—was always trying to deceive his gods. To "put one over" on High Olympus was considered a proper and rather clever thing to do. Now Aeolus was god of the winds which he loosed from the cavern where he had them confined to swell the lagging sail with favoring breezes or to lash the waves with the fury of a gale. But perchance Aeolus slept and the winds slept with him; or he gloried and drank deep on Olympian heights unheeding of the loitering ships and imprisoned winds. Then the Greek sailor whistled for a wind.

Now when the sailor whistles for a wind he does not really "whistle" but expels his breath from between his lightly closed lips with a peculiar sibilant sound mingled with a slight whistling noise—very much such a sound as the radiator makes sometimes when the steam is just beginning to get up. It is supposed to imitate the first sounds of a breeze beginning to stir in the rigging.

Aeolus heaves. What! Has some one unsurped his functions? Or has a breeze gone out without his permission? He gets on his job at once, and though he may see that he has been tricked, releases the desired breeze—unless he should be in bad humor, when he releases a storm wind and makes the whistling sailor rue his whistling. So through the long ages the custom of whistling for a wind has come down from the sailors of Jason's fleet to the fishermen of the Grand Banks.

If Kidneys Act Bad Take Salts

Says Backache Often Means You Have Not Been Drinking Enough Water

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region it may mean you have been eating foods which create acids, says a well-known authority. An excess of such acids overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood and they become sort of paralyzed and logey. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog you must relieve them, like you relieve your bowels, removing all the body's urinous waste, else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore, water scalds and you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the system, so they no longer irritate, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink. Drink lots of good water.

Fasters Draw Crowds

Men who put on fasting endurance exhibitions have been drawing crowds in England. They are especially popular at seaside resorts. At Blackpool recently three men were living on a diet of lemonade and cigarettes. They were housed in glass cabinets, and in spite of cries of "fake," crowds swarmed about the cabinets. When Sacco, well known for his fasting feats, passed the sixtieth day of his fast the throngs of curious were so large that it was difficult to handle them.

Makes Life Sweeter

Children's stomachs sour, and need an anti-acid. Keep their systems sweet with Phillips Milk of Magnesia!

When tongue or breath tells of acid condition—correct it with a spoonful of Phillips. Most men and women have been comforted by this universal sweetener—more mothers should invoke its aid for their children. It is a pleasant thing to take, yet neutralizes more acid than the harsher things too often employed for the purpose. No household should be without it.

Phillips is the genuine, prescriptional product physicians endorse for general use; the name is important. "Milk of Magnesia" has been the U. S. registered trade mark of the Charles H. Phillips Chemical Co. and its predecessor Charles H. Phillips since 1875.

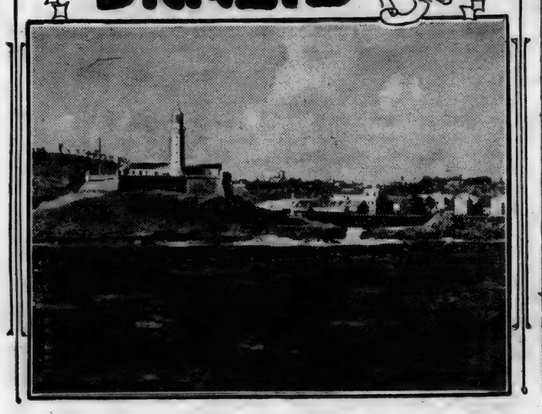
NORTHEASTERN BRAZIL



The Lighthouse at Bahia, Brazil.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

AIRPLANES have made the northeastern corner of Brazil the doorway to South America from the Old World. Repeated flights have been made in recent years from Europe and Africa to South America, and in nearly every case first news of the successful crossing has come from Natal, Pernambuco or Bahia, the three most northeastern cities of the continent. On the latest of the transatlantic flights the two flyers, Major Larre-Borges and Lieutenant Challes, were forced to earth near Natal, not far from the landing place of Major Delprete and Captain Ferrain in 1928. Pernambuco was the first city reached by Commander Francesco de Pinedo in 1927; and Bahia was the port of arrival for Captains Jiminez and Iglesias in the spring of 1929.

Because of Natal's strategic importance in transatlantic flying the recently organized air mail line between Paris and Buenos Aires has established a flying field near the town. Natal has also figured in Brazilian maritime plans, and its harbor is being improved with a view to making it the first port of call for steamships between Europe and ports on the southeast coast of South America.

Cape St. Roque may be considered the real northeast corner of South America. It lies approximately 20 miles north of Natal. The intervening strip of coast is made up of low sand dunes, with here and there a village set among coco palms.

Natal is not directly on the sea but lies about two miles up the river from Potenghy, which is also known as the Rio Grande do Norte. It is from this stream that the state of Rio Grande do Norte, of which Natal is the capital, takes its name. The town was founded by the Portuguese more than three and a quarter centuries ago as a military post. In 1633 it was captured by the Dutch and remained in their possession until 1654. Few traces of the Dutch occupation remain.

Natal a Frontier City.

Natal is far removed from the center of Brazilian activity in the south, and still has some touches of the frontier. Southward, railways along the coast connect it with Pernambuco; but only a short bit of trackage extends toward the interior. For the movement of goods to and from the back country the town still depends somewhat on picturesque troops of pack mules and horses in charge of a tropeiro and his swarthy, hard-visaged assistants.

Sometimes 100 or more mules and horses, each laden with big bags of cotton or other produce from the interior, thread their way through Natal's streets, with bells tinkling, and muleteers shouting — an animated freight train. On the return trip they carry bales of fabrics, food supplies, and household furnishings.

The muleteers of Rio Grande do Norte and the adjoining states must be a rough and ready lot, for the goods they carry are an irresistible temptation to bandits in the hilly interior, and often the drivers must "shoot their way through." The gradually extending lines of steel in the interior of Brazil are slowly bringing the existence of the picturesque tropeiro to an end.

Pernambuco, although not so far to the northeast as Natal, is the easternmost city of the Western hemisphere. The state of Pernambuco and two other states make up the northeastern shoulder of the continent. The capital, Pernambuco, better known to Brazilians as Recife, occupies a small island—Antonio Vas—and a portion of the mainland of Brazil, about fifty miles from the northern border of the state.

Pernambuco is the fourth largest city in Brazil with a population about equal to that of Birmingham, Ala. Many of the people are descendants of the Dutch and Portuguese, both of whom once claimed the city and surrounding country. Pernambuco owes much of its progress to the influence of these races, who fostered agriculture and commerce.

Much Business in Pernambuco.

The old section of Pernambuco shows its Portuguese origin in the varicolored plaster-faced buildings that line some of the narrow cobblestone streets in the downtown section; while here and there steep gabled houses and business structures recall the quarter century of Dutch occupation that began ten years after the Pilgrims landed on Plymouth Rock.

Until a few years ago, large ocean-going boats had to anchor far out in the harbor. Up-to-date docks were constructed, and railroads were built, reaching into the productive hinterland. As a result Pernambuco has become in a short time one of the important gateways to eastern Brazil.

Sugar, tobacco, lumber, fruit, cotton, rubber and coffee that once graced the backs of mules now flow into the city by rail in vast quantities. More than forty sugar mills in the capital city attest the state's sugar production. Textile mills, shoe, soap, and lock factories are also there.

Most of Pernambuco's business is carried on in the old section that occupies the island. The city market, perhaps, strikes the fancy of Americans more than any other feature. An abundance of rich, luscious tropical fruit is everywhere to be seen. On the ground are great piles of pineapples, alligator pears, melons and mangoes of enormous size. In contrast to many South American markets Pernambuco has no noisy venders.

Bahia is the largest of Brazil's air gateway cities. It was the first Portuguese settlement founded in Brazil. According to the letters of Amerigo Vespucci he and his followers spent several months in All Saints bay in the neighborhood of Bahia during the early years of the Sixteenth century. Bahia was not officially recognized by the Portuguese government, however, until 1549 when the first governor general of Brazil set up a colonial government there. Bahia was the capital of Brazil from that time until 1763 when the government was removed to Rio de Janeiro.

While Rio de Janeiro and Sao Paulo surpass Bahia in size, the old port, which lies about 400 miles down the coast from Pernambuco, is a thriving commercial center with about 300,000 inhabitants.

The harbor it faces is one of the finest on the east coast of South America. Vessels from many world ports are anchored offshore while smaller boats with local cargoes come and go like schools of water beetles.

Bahia Built on Two Levels.

The traveler's first impression of Bahia, as he sails up the harbor toward the city, is that there are really two separate towns. A congested settlement hugs the shore line while on a cliff in the background 200 feet above the roof tops the fringe of another settlement is visible.

In the narrow streets of the lower town and among the bordering warehouses half-naked porters, perspiring freely in the tropical heat, spend their days moving cargoes of cocoa, tobacco, cotton, sugar, rubber and fruits, all products of Bahia state, brought to the port by railroad trains and high-wheeled donkey carts.

The customs house, depot and offices of foreign firms interested in Bahia commodities also are in the lower town. Most of Bahia's cocoa, the largest exportable product of Bahia state, is shipped to the United States.

Upper Bahia is reached by elevators, steps and winding roads. Here and there in the narrow streets of this portion of the city, sky blue and delicate pink houses, some of whose plastered fronts are deeply pock-marked, take the traveler back a century or two in Bahia's history. But within a stone's throw of these districts there are wide modern thoroughfares, lined with fine shops, banks, theaters, office and government buildings. A park or a garden now and then breaks the monotony of the solid rows of masonry.

Of the 300,000 inhabitants of Bahia about two-thirds are negroes. Some are pure-blooded negroes, some are a mixture of Portuguese and Indian, and Indian and negro.

In Bahia the mulatto maidens, with erect, well-built bodies wrapped in gaily colored cloth, gold chains about their necks, bracelets covering their arms, and large rings hanging from their ears, gracefully stride through the streets under such burdens as baskets of clothes and pans of sweetmeats perched on their heads.

DATES TOOTHSOME, NUTRITIOUS

The perfect date, colorful, translucent, and altogether delicious, is now an American product, thanks to the untiring effort of our date growers. Arabian dates are still shipped into our country in large quantities, but nothing so far has reached the perfection of the home grown.

It will probably be some time before we can supply the demand with the home product, for the date is so well liked and is used for confections so largely, as well as for ordinary food.

With a handful of nuts and a half dozen dates, a glass of orange juice, one need not worry over calories or hunger.

Dates are enjoyed in bread, cake, cookies, chopped with nuts and molded into bars, stuffed with nuts or preserved fruit or fondant; added to salads they give just the note of sweetness that any salad needs. They take the place of raisins or combine with them in desserts of various kinds.

Date Pie.—Cook one pound of dates that have been pitted, with one cupful of water and one tablespoonful of lemon juice; cook until a thick paste is formed, then add two tablespoonfuls of orange juice and let stand until cold. Bake a pastry shell and fill with the mixture, top with lightly sweetened cream and serve.

As filling for sandwiches to give the children for luncheon, they are perfectly desirable. As stuffed dates, try any or all of the following:

Peanut butter moistened with orange juice and a little cream.

Use fondant to which chopped cherries, ginger, candied peel has been added.

Any drained or preserved fruit such as pineapple, plums, cherries, pressed into dates and the two joined to make a large date.

Marshmallows cut into small pieces, rolled in coconut.

Roll dates in granulated sugar or in powdered sugar if desired.

VARIOUS GOOD THINGS

Chowders are more than cream soups and are so nutritive that they may make the main dish of the meal with croutons or crackers. With a salad and a light dessert it furnishes a most substantial supper or luncheon menu.

Potato Chowder.—Take one quart of diced potato, one turnip also diced, one cupful each of diced celery and carrot, one medium sized onion chopped, one pimento, one-half cupful of diced salt pork and salt to taste. Cook the pork in a kettle until the fat is all tried out and the dice are well browned. Add the onion and stir for two to three minutes, then add the remainder of the ingredients, cover with boiling water and cook until tender. Season well, adding cayenne pepper and a half dozen milk crackers, with a quart or more of scalded milk. Heat hot and serve one cracker with the chowder to each bowl of the soup. A half pound of codfish added (after parboiling and shredding) to this mixture will make a good fish chowder. Add more pork if it is liked with more fat.

All American Bunny.—To one pint of hot milk add very slowly one-half cupful of cornmeal. Cook thirty minutes in a double boiler, add two tablespoonfuls of butter, one-fourth teaspoonful of mustard and two cupfuls of finely cut American cheese. Stir until the cheese is nearly melted, add a little chopped pimento if desired and serve very hot on crackers or on buttered toast.

Scrambled Eggs.—Allow one tablespoonful of butter and one-fourth cupful of milk for each egg. Melt the butter in a double boiler, add the eggs beaten lightly, season with salt and a dash of cayenne or white pepper; stir, cooking over water below the boiling point. Cook and stir with a lifting motion until evenly mixed and jelly-like. Serve at once.

Egg and Fish Loaf.—Take three hard cooked eggs, one cupful of flaked salmon, tuna or any leftover cooked fish, one cupful of cooked rice, one teaspoonful of onion minced, three slices of bacon cut into bits, salt, paprika to taste and milk to moisten. Grease a baking dish. Slice one of the eggs into thin rings and place around the edge. Mix the fish mixture and press into the pan. Bake in a moderate oven thirty minutes. Turn out on a hot platter and serve with tomato sauce.

Personal Service

While the directing of funerals is a business as well as a profession, we do not believe that it can ever be commercialized on a large scale. The mortician's relation to his client is too intimate, his responsibility too sacred, to be intrusted to the impersonal treatment of an outside corporation.

The funeral director does more than sell merchandise. He even does more than give service. He is a confidential adviser and sympathetic friend of the bereaved family, giving them the benefit of his special experience and training. It is distinctly a personal service.

For this reason we have faith in the future of the individual funeral director—the man who owns his own business and lives in the community as a neighbor of the people he serves. In the hour of need, when personal and sympathetic service is the first consideration, he will be remembered.

Chicago is making a drive against their gunmen, and The Tribune gives the following account of the work done: "Robbers were caught in the act, automobile thieves were taken in stolen cars, and pistols were taken from 30 potential murderers. In all, there were 917 arrests between 8 o'clock Saturday night and 8 o'clock Sunday morning. Of the prisoners 271 had criminal records, including nearly all of the 30 who were found to be carrying guns. Because of the great number of prisoners only those with records were taken to the show-up, the others being held at outlying stations or being freed after they had given satisfactory accounting of their activities.

Many Republics Before That of United States

Probably the first government which can be considered republican in form was the ancient Israelitish commonwealth or republic, which lasted from about 1491 B. C. to 1095 B. C. About three centuries after this the Greek states, of which Athens was chief, set up what gradually came to be democratic republics. Ancient Carthage and Rome were for a short period republics. During the Middle ages many of the free cities of Italy and Germany set up republics. San Marino in Italy is now the oldest existing republic, while Switzerland has existed as a republic since 1291. According to an article in the American Cyclopedia, the degree of popular sovereignty in republics has varied very widely in the past, most of the so-called republics having been ruled by an aristocracy which jealously guarded its own rights but treated the multitude as little better than slaves. "Real republican government may be said to date from the American Declaration of Independence, and even in the United States the government was largely one of class until about the second quarter of the Nineteenth century, when suffrage barriers began to break down."

Mennonite Colony in America in Year 1662

Mennonites first appeared in America about 1662, when a band of 24, led by Pieter Cornelius Plockhoy, organized a settlement, but it was not until a century later that the cult became firmly established.

The settlement, which was one of the early plans for the occupation of the Delaware by any of the European sectarians, did not last. Plockhoy, with his 24 followers, made a contract with the Burgomeisters and Regents of Amsterdam, for the founding of a colony "in any part of the district of this Colonie wherever it may please to lie, as they shall be willing to cultivate and pasture."

After adopting various rules and regulations, the colony was broken up by the English under Sir Robert Carr in 1664, and nothing whatever is known of the fate of members of the colony. It is stated that Plockhoy, the leader, and his wife, arrived at Germantown in 1694, after having wandered in the wilderness for 30 years, and were given a home by the Mennonites at that place.

Wise Old M. P.

Among conservation measures of the World war there was a gasless Sunday, when citizens exhibited their patriotism by leaving their automobiles in the garage. In one southern camp orders were issued that gasoline-driven vehicles would not be allowed inside the gates.

A couple of women drove up in an electric auto, and were promptly and importantly stopped by an M. P., who told them it was gasless Sunday.

"But," the lady driver remonstrated, "this car doesn't use gas—it's an electric."

"Aw, you can't fool me, lady," retorted the M. P. with gusto. "Where's your trolley?"—Pacific Power and Light Bulletin.

AS REGULAR AS THE SUN COMES UP

Dear Mothers:

Before I write more about what we eat, I want you to know there are some things other than the kind of food we eat that are important too. We can choose the very best of food but if the body does not use it, it does it no good. Severaal things may have their effect on the extent to which the body uses its food: daily exercise and play, sleep, personal cleanliness, fresh air, sunshine, thorough mastication of food.

The way one stands or sits—that is, the posture of the body effects the completeness with which the body uses its food. Stooped shoulders, caved in lungs, a stomach that is allowed to drop out of place—to "stick out"—crowds the digestive organs, the intestines and much food may leave the body as waste before it has been used. This results in too little food actually going for tissue building, energy giving, regulating and "starting the spark."

Poor teeth too, adenoids, diseased tonsils also lessen the amount actually taken up and used by the body—even tho it be eaten. Not strangely, these same conditions cause a lack of appetite, so that less food is usually eaten when we find any of them present.

It is always interesting to see how physical defects like these effect the appetite and assimilation and general nutrition, because the general condition of nutrition also has its bearing on whether these defects are present. People, and especially children, because they are in the developing period, who have poor food habits, do not eat enough or right kind of foods, are the ones who are most likely to have diseased tonsils, poor posture, poor teeth, and usually adenoids. So you see the thing works both ways—the cause and the effect.

We have found too that meals should be regular. They should be eaten under as pleasant surroundings as possible. Then we must eat not only the right kind of food but enough of it to maintain the best body conditions. But I shall tell you more of this later. For today, let's remember these few things.

Regularly,
EDNA GRABIEL.

WHERE IS YOUR MONEY?

It is interesting to read figures about the financial condition of the country, but some how or other many of us never seem to get hold of our share. We read today where the National wealth is three hundred billion dollars; the National income ninety billion dollars. Saving bank deposits amount to ten billion five hundred million dollars and those of National bank and trust companies, thirty-four billion dollars.

One thing that is a little disconcerting is the fact that one-fourth of our population, the farmers, get only one-twelfth of the National income. Make up your mind to get more and get it—if you can.

Greatest Foe of the Race

I believe that alcohol is the greatest foe to the human race today. I feel that it would not be a serious harm if its use as a medicine were totally discontinued, says Dr. Walter E. Fernald, Clinical Lecturer in Mental Diseases, Tufts Medical College, Boston, Massachusetts.

FARM ROADS NEEDED

A practical method of "farm relief" is for every state to adopt a program of building farm-to-market roads as rapidly as their budgets will allow.

In the past the city dweller has received most of the advantages accruing from the building of highways. The farmer, though one of our foremost taxpayers and producers, has not been given his share of improved roads.

Social and commercial contact with the outside world, through the medium of low-cost, hard surfaced highways, makes for more progressive and prosperous agriculture.

So long as millions of American farmers are kept from their markets during many months of the year, by unimproved roads, there will be a serious farm problem. It is the duty of every state to give agricultural districts roads which are practical for travel all the year round.

Facts for FARM FOLKS

It is desired by all those who purchase baby chicks to develop a uniform bunch of birds whether for broiler, pullet or for egg production in the fall of the year. There are several important things that must be taken into consideration if we are to expect the birds to develop uniformly and get maximum returns for the money invested.

In studying these factors it must be taken into consideration that the greatest thing of importance is that of providing plenty of hopper space for the birds. When the baby chicks are received be sure that you have at least one foot of space for each twenty chicks or five feet of hopper space for 100 baby chicks.

There are several types of hoppers recommended. One that can be easily made is suggeted as follows: Take a 6 inch board for the bottom; on each side of it tack two 4 inch boards and fill in with well fitted pieces across each end; then cut a piece of hardware cloth a little smaller than the inside of the hopper and lay it on top of the mash, having the hopper filled about ⅔ full. This will allow the chicks to feed readily and at the same time prevent them from scratching the feed out and wasting it.

A good many people never think that as the chicks grow they should be provided with additional hopper space. When the birds are six or eight weeks of age at least seven feet of hopper space should be provided for each 100 birds in the brooder house. If we are to expect maximum production from our birds in the laying houses in the fall of the year at least ten or twelve feet of hopper space for each 100 pullets must be provided.

I doubt if there is any other single factor that effects the uniform development of the chick as much as available hopper space. The net income is less when insufficient hopper space is provided; therefore, this phase of poultry management should not be overlooked. Go out to the poultry house immediately and if you do not have hopper space in accordance with the above minimum suggestions, see to it that the hopper space is increased immediately—you will be pleased with the results that will follow.

Fuel for Smoking Meat

The Department of Agriculture says that the best fuel for smoking meat is green hickory or maple wood smothered with sawdust of the same material. Hard wood of any kind is preferable to soft wood. Resinous woods should not be used, as they may give a bad flavor to the meat. Corncobs are a good substitute for hard wood. Juniper berries or fragrant woods may be added to the fire to flavor the meat. The fire should be kept burning slowly, keeping the temperature between 70 and 90 degrees.

Impossible

A certain celebrated actor was stopped as he left the theater one evening and a pretty girl pinned a crimson carnation in his buttonhole.

The actor was very pleased with himself and thought no more about it. On the following morning he received a note from the girl asking him to send her a couple of seats.

With a grim smile the actor wrote to the pretty girl:

"I should be delighted," he said, "but on personal investigation I find all the seats screwed down."

Where There's Smoke

Junior was out walking with his mother one of the first cold mornings of the winter. He looked in amazement at what appeared to him to be smoke coming from his mother's mouth when she spoke.

"Look at the smoke coming out of your mouth," exclaimed the little two-year-old. "You must have swallowed a little piece of fire."

Water Filtration Has Curbed Disease Spread

About 1887 it was announced by Percy Frankland and others that sand filtration removed nearly all the bacteria in water. Five years later came the outbreak of cholera in Hamburg, and a striking demonstration was afforded of protection through filtration. Hamburg and Altona, two cities on the Elbe river, both used the river as a source of water supply. Hamburg used unfiltered water; Altona filtered its supply. When cholera infection of the river water occurred, Altona escaped with only a few cases. Hamburg, on the other hand, had an enormous number.

Following the rapid advance of the science of bacteriology in the '80s and '90s, it was natural to consider the possibility of purifying drinking water by the addition of chemical disinfectants. The first systematic use of chlorine in water is credited to Houston and McGovern in England in 1904 and 1905. The present world-wide use of chlorine disinfectant of public water supplies, however, is due largely to the work of George A. Johnson, who, in 1908, used bleaching powder ("chloride of lime") for the purification of Jersey City's water supply.—New York Times.

Inventions That Would Make Deviser Wealthy

Among the 20 ways of making a million dollars, revealed by Roger W. Babson, economist, in the Forum are: (1) Pills for plants—condensed form of fertilizer, to do away with wasteful spreading. (2) A new gearless automobile which will use a rotary engine, go sidewise as well as forward and backward for convenience in parking. (3) A foolproof helicopter, to lift an airplane directly off the earth, enabling the aviator to light on city streets and building roofs. (4) Gliders for children. Boys will fly around their yards as safely as they now play in their sandpiles. (5) A light that will pierce fog, something greatly needed in the field of air navigation. (6) Talking books—that is, pages that may be fed into a machine and save the bother of reading. (7) Flexible, unbreakable and bulletproof glass. (8) Cold light, to do away with 95 per cent of electric current now wasted on resistance to create glow. (9) Mahogany lumber from native hardwood trees, by inoculating them with dyes and chemicals.

Diet of Lions

Lions in their native habits prey largely upon young antelopes, zebras, buffalos, giraffes and other vegetation-eating animals. For this reason it is often stated that the lion will not eat the flesh of carnivorous or flesh-eating creatures. The fact seems to be that lions will eat the flesh of any animal recently killed, such as animals left by hunters. Certainly lions in captivity are not particular about the kind of flesh they eat. There is also abundant proof that the king of beasts will occasionally attack and eat human beings. Dr. W. Reid Blair, in his book "In the Zoo," tells of two man-eating lions in Africa which carried off 18 men employed in building the Uganda railway.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Small Potatoes

The late Haley Fiske of insurance fame said one evening in a Y. M. C. A. address in Brooklyn:

"It pays big business to be liberal. To save a dollar in a mean small way signifies the loss of hundreds of dollars in good will.

"Whenever a mean, small economy is proposed to me I tell the anecdote about the Scotchman who went into a barber shop and said:

"'Hoo much for a haircut?'

"'Forty cents, sir,' said the barber.

"'Hoo much for a shave?'

"'Twenty cents.'

"'Shave mah head.'"

Luxurious Car for Young Fish of America

A new de luxe all-steel car for the transportation and distribution of young fish has just been put in service by the bureau of fisheries at Washington. The car resembles a conventional pullman and is fitted with tanks which will contain half a million young fish, in addition to living quarters for the crew of caretakers who accompany the finny passengers. The photograph shows E. C. Fearnow, superintendent of distribution of the bureau, examining some of the tanks.

This state believes in keeping roads open the year round, in spite of the blizzards and heavy snow, since the investment in modern equipment to do the clearing job is returned many times over by the auto and gasoline taxes.

CITIES SOON MUST FIT AUTOMOBILES

Country Has Not Adapted Itself to Necessity of More Speed.

Tremendous changes that are coming in the automobile world, will require cities of the future to be built to fit the gasoline age, according to Charles F. Kettering, general manager of the General Motors Research corporation, in an interview in the American Magazine.

Only Scratched Surface.

"There has been endless change in the automobile, though we have only scratched the surface," says Kettering, "but meantime the country has not adapted itself to the uses of the automobile. The auto was born into a horse and buggy world. And by and large, it is still running through a horse and buggy world. Your car may go 60 miles an hour with ease. But make a trip to a town 60 miles away, and see how long it will take you to get there—certainly two hours or more. Why? Because you will have to pass through a dozen small towns and in each one you will be routed through the busiest street. You will slow up your trip and get in the way of townspeople who have legitimate business in the town. If the country were built for automobiles, you would go along an express highway, clear around the busy streets. And you would make your trip in an hour. This will come so quickly that people will be surprised at it.

Changes to Come.

"This is only an instance of the innumerable changes that will be made in the physical layout of our towns in the next ten years. And we must not overlook the new cities which will be built on the 1930 and 1940 models, and because they are adapted to conditions of modern life, they may put a kink in the old model cities."

All these changes, continued Kettering, will be the result of dissatisfaction of automobile customers. "If you want to see plenty of satisfied customers, go to China. A world full of satisfied customers would kill business dead as a doornail."

Office Building Garages Urged as Parking Answer

Solution of the downtown parking problem in large cities by providing automobile storage space in office buildings is urged by Dr. Miller McClintock.

Doctor McClintock, who is director of the Erskine bureau of street traffic research of Harvard university, in a report to the American Institute of Architects said office building garages already had been provided in numerous cities.

He mentioned the Pure Oil building in Chicago, which utilizes what normally would be the court of the building to a height of 20 stories to provide parking space for 600 cars.

Two States Cut Fee for Automobile Licenses

Motorists of Texas and Nebraska will have cause for joy when they apply for new licenses. A new law in Texas will save motorists in that state $11,000,000 in license tax. A new scale, effective in Nebraska since July 25, 1929, has already saved motorists $42,242.

License fees in Texas for 1930 will range from one-half to two-thirds of this year's rate. Prior to July, Nebraska's fees were based on a minimum of $8 plus 50 cents for every additional 100 pounds of weight above 2,000 pounds. The new law lets all cars of less than 2,700 pounds into this class.

THE MOTOR QUIZ

How Many Can You Answer?

Q. What increase in oil consumption takes place when a car's speed is increased from 30 to 65 miles an hour?

Ans. More than twice the amount of oil is consumed.

Q. How often is the content of the crank case pumped through the oil filter in an hour's driving?

Ans. Ten to fifteen times. It is important to renew the oil filter every 10,000 miles.

Q. What should be done if a car figures in a mishap?

Ans. Serious damage may sometimes result even to a sturdily built car from an apparently light blow. Drive the car into a competent service station for a check of alignment of wheels, axles, frames, etc., in such cases.

Q. What bad effect is produced by improper care of the springs?

Ans. Most cars are now equipped with shock absorbers and it is necessary to keep the springs well oiled and tightened to obtain the best results from them.

Definite Warning Given When Water Is Too Low

The indicator illustrated gives definite warning when the water level in the radiator gets too low. This diagram shows only the principle of the device for the contact must be arranged to suit different radiator caps. A cork float on the end of a rod should be used and a short length of copper or brass tubing should be soldered in place against the hole in the radiator cap to act as a guide and keep the float rod in a vertical position.

A disk on the upper end of the rod makes contact with a wire and thereby grounds it when the water level goes too low. One terminal of a double contact indicator bulb on the dash should be connected with the current supply and the other terminal with the wire that makes contact with the float disk. If the cap unscrews arrange the contact wire so that it can be swung out of the way. If the cap turns back on a hinge the contact can be fastened to a piece of fiber or bakelite and connected by a piece of flexible wire.—Popular Science Monthly.

TO THE MOTORIST:

Freshly oiled roads are dangerous—drive slowly.

The battery is weak if headlights are very dim at low car speeds and very bright when going faster.

The engine should be permitted to heat up, even in hot weather, before driving away.

Nearly all car bodies are lacquered these days. Not so fenders. They are enameled. Accordingly, it is well to remember that gasoline never should be used in cleaning them. It dulls the finish.

They did not try to plan for the future, they simply contented themselves with the knowledge that whatever came to them must be good. They did not look ahead to the winter—without a church, without a parsonage, with a meager twenty-five dollars a month to provide food and clothes and a roof over their heads. They merely accepted the present that was given them, and smiled at each other, and strove in every way possible to impress upon themselves the sublimity of their faith, the boundlessness of their possibilities in divine love.

As they went out to the car answering the call of Eddy Jackson's siren, they met the postman coming in.

Ginger ran ahead of the others, and took the mail from his hand.

"Three for father, one for Marjory—mine, mine—the rest is for me."

* * * * * * *

Ginger's watchfulness over Marjory and Hiram Buckworth increased. She intercepted every glance, endured the soft smiles with a glowering grimness, answered every light sally as though it were intended for her ears alone.

One evening, soon after dinner, Hiram Buckworth decided that he must withdraw to his room to prepare his sermon for the following Sunday, and Marjory thought she would go upstairs and manicure her nails. But Ginger was not to be distracted by mere plans for the future. She saw them both upstairs, saw the door of her father's room closed behind Hiram Buckworth's rigid back, saw Miriam ensconced on the foot of her bed with files, orangewood sticks and buffers. Then she went to the studio with a sigh of relief. There she settled down to a complete balancing of her accounts. She counted the dimes in the doll's trunk. She made careful entries in her huge ledger.

Her waste basket she found full to overflowing of discarded letters, little white angels, which had accompanied the contributions to the home. Ginger was systematic and orderly. These angels were to be burned. So with waste basket in one hand, lantern in the other, she made her way carefully over the narrow beams, and down the wabbly ladder.

She noted, comfortably, that the two doors remained closed as she had left them, and a pleasantly soothing stillness pervaded the house. Softly, happily, with waste basket and lantern, she slipped around the curve of the circular staircase and stopped. She stopped aghast, electrified, spellbound. For beneath her, before her very eyes, there lay revealed a scene whose unutterable disgustingness was beyond her power of description.

The wide living room was lighted, dimly lighted, by one small corner reading lamp, and in the shadowy, semi-darkness, Ginger saw two figures—her sister, Marjory, and Hiram Buckworth—whom she had left behind their seperate closed doors not twenty minutes previous. By what strange intuitiveness each had discovered, behind those barring doors, that the other was descending to the common meeting ground of the living room below, Ginger never knew—nor even which had made the initial move. But one fact was evident—there they were.

One of Hiram's arms was about her sister's shoulders, and his free hand was fondling very gently, very caressingly, the soft gold of her hair. Marjory herself, plainly not to be outdistanced in madness, was raising her soft white fingers to his cheek, his lips, his eyes. Ginger's irrepressible gasp startled them. They looked up, at her, gravely. They did not move.

"Excuse me." Ginger's voice was cold and subdued, very small. "I thought you were in different places—doing other things."

She turned short around upon the stairs, and went up to the attic. In the studio she sat herself down, heavily, and fell to deep consideration. She saw clearly that the situation was critical. Marjory was hopeless. She had ogled the grocery clerk. She had almost held hands with Tub Andrews and the ukulele. She even practiced her blandishments on Eddy Jackson, who had the fortitude to withstand her wiles. And now she was flagrantly necking the young minister. Ginger writhed in helpless fury. The minister! Even a grocery clerk may aspire to ownership, a bank janitor may progress slowly upward. But once a preacher, always a preacher.

Plainly, then, responsibility rested upon none other than Ginger, and Ginger squared her shoulders to receive it. Marjory was lacking in strength of character—so much was evident. But Hiram Buckworth, now—he was a minister, he must have some right principle within—an appeal to him, perhaps— Ginger regretted that she could not entirely abandon Marjory to her own misguided ways. The home for the blind was on its way to firm establishment, it was true, but alas, so many dimes went into the purchase of a load of coal, a month's groceries, a delicate operation for the eyes. An appeal, then, to Hiram Buckworth.

The next morning before breakfast, Ginger, alert and watchful, saw him walking down the flagstone path between the rows of flowers, inhaling great breaths of the fresh morning air, his entire manner and countenance reflecting a smug and satisfied contentment with the world at large. She hurried down, and joined him.

"Mr. Buckworth," she began firmly, "excuse me for butting in—and it really isn't a thing against Marjory, you know, for she is just as nice as she seems to be—"

"I should say she is!"

"But I've known her a long time, and really, she is a terrible flirt, though at heart she doesn't mean a thing by it. I don't know whether she has told you— I mean— You see, it is already arranged—"

"Ellen! You don't mean that Marjory—that she is engaged—"

The use of the word relieved her. She was finding it unaccountably hard to express herself in a way that would gain the desired result, without committing herself to falsehood.

"Well, yes, in a way. Not exactly engaged, you understand, but it is all understood, if you know what I mean."

"Yes, I do know what you mean." The bright ruddiness went suddenly out of Hiram Buckworth's face. "I understand entirely too well. You are a good sport for tipping me off. I see."

And then he went quickly indoors, and said nothing else. The appeal to Hiram Buckworth had indeed reaped results after a fashion, but Ginger did not feel very well pleased. Hiram Buckworth, although anything but a romantic figure, was a nice chap. And the shocked look on his face, the strange, hurt, stricken look, had touched her heart. He had looked sorry. Ginger did not enjoy seeing people look sorry, not even disgusting pretenders who pawed and held hands.

Breakfast, usually such a gay and cheery meal, proved an awkward occasion. Hiram Buckworth seemed every inch a minister, unsmiling, grave, and stiffly formal. He talked exclusively to Miss Jenkins, and not very entertainingly. He did not look at Marjory, who had come in a little late with her usual bright morning radiance. But her radiance was of short duration, paling swiftly to startled, wide-eyed wondering. She had no appetite, toyed idly with her fork, and kept her eyes upon his face, curiously, as though her eyes were seeking something, asking questions. But always they found nothing, received no answer. Immediately after breakfast he excused himself, and went quickly out of the room.

Ginger was very uncomfortable indeed. She tried to tell herself that she was merely imagining that these things were so—that it was a mere chance that Hiram had not looked at Marjory, that Marjory could not eat her breakfast. But she was uncomfortable. Not even a trip to the studio, and a painstaking count of her doll's trunk of dimes sufficed to put her in a cheerful frame of mind. Not even the coming of the postman, with sixteen letters for R. Tolliver, made her really happy.

He fished two small packages from his bag and handed them to her. "I see you're getting some more of those samples," he added cheerfully.

"Those are for the twins," she answered, flushing. "Personally, I am not interested in beauty preparations."

The day passed dully, a busy day, as Saturdays always are in parsonages where arrangements are always leading up to the climatic Sabbath. Hiram Buckworth remained down town for luncheon. Marjory, a still, white Marjory, busied herself in a studied way about the work of the house. And dinner in the evening was an increasingly painful repetition of the morning meal.

When the dishes were done, Ginger repaired to the veranda. Miss Jenkins sat there, alone, solemnly rocking.

"Where's Margie?"

"She went to bed. She has a headache."

"Oh, I see." Ginger went upstairs, and knocked gently at her sister's door.

"I'm in bed," called a muffled voice in answer.

Ginger opened the door, and went in. "I just wanted to see if I could do anything for your headache." She gave her sister a sharp look. "You've been crying."

"I think I'm getting hay fever," said Marjory. "My eyes sting. I'm going to sleep now." Ginger, at this dismissal, turned toward the door. "And Ginger, don't you go and talk about it to—Miss Jenkins—or anybody. If I have a headache and hay fever it's nobody's business but my own. Not that anybody would care anyhow."

"I won't talk about it. Go to sleep now, Margie, I'll be very quiet not to disturb you."

And Ginger closed the door softly behind her.

Sunday, ordinarily such a pleasureably hurried day in the parsonage, was no less than a dreary ordeal. Marjory appeared very late for her breakfast. She need not have appeared at all, for she ate nothing.

"Headache all gone?" inquired Ginger.

"M'm."

Hiram, instead of walking companionably to church with the girls, excused himself and went on in advance, explaining that he wished to see somebody about something. Marjory dreamed absent-mindedly during the service, while Ginger, on the contrary, listened attentively to every word, reporting confidentially to her sister, later on, that she didn't think so much of the sermon.

In the afternoon, Eddy Jackson came in the car to take them to Pay Dirt and although Hiram tried to be excused from the party there was no evading Eddy's friendly insistence.

But while there was great gaiety at Pay Dirt, the arrival of the car from the parsonage brought a sudden slump in their high spirits. Alexander Murdock was there, and Ginger's wrath, long slumbering, vented itself upon his unoffending head. Why should he spend all or his spare time at Pay Dirt? What had a mere can grocer to do with the conduct of agriculture? And why, if mere friendship for Eddy attracted him thither, did he so openly ignore his friend in his ardent attentiveness to Miriam? And why, for that matter, should the so-sensible Miriam, be suddenly thus gay and shining?

"What's the matter with everybody anyhow?" demanded Eddy crossly. "That's some grouch of a preacher, if you ask me. Margie's clear at the bottom the dumps, worst thing in the world for her complexion. And even you, Ginger, you're no cheerier than a broken crutch."

"Well, I have a lot of trouble," said Ginger dully.

The one bright moment in the afternoon for Ginger was when Alexander announced that he was leaving the next day for the farther West.

"Walking?" she inquired coldly.

"Oh, no. Business has been quite good. I shall be able to ride quite a little distance before I connect up with another Orange and Black."

"Sort of a can tour."

"Something of the sort, yes."

But if the parsonage group had little to contribute to the day's enjoyment, it was more than compensated by the glad hilarity of the others. Mr. Tolliver laughed like a boy at the bald and ribald jokes of the can grocer. Miss Jenkins and Mrs. Jackson exchanged giggling reminiscences of their own untrammeled youth. Miriam and Alexander were ringleaders in the day's recreation, doing all sorts of absurd young things.

Cultivate Serenity to Fight Mental Fatigue

Mental fatigue cuts down efficiency and spoils happiness. American life with its high-power speed for both work and play produces an unusual amount of mental fatigue. To aid in the cultivation of more serene habits, Dr. Lauren H. Smith, writing in Hygeia Magazine, makes the following sugestions:

1. When we work, let us keep our interest in it and make it pleasurable.

2. When we play, let us enter into it for all it is worth without regard for anything else.

3. When we rest and sleep, let us turn the mind and body loose to themselves and let them do what they will.

Learn to rest the mind by leaving the mind alone.

4. When we think, let us make a decision and carry it out. If we decide incorrectly it can be reconsidered later.

5. When we are very tired, let us not permit a temporary or extreme emotional reaction to drive us into an act that will have permanent results.

Dogs' Jumping Powers

Dogs can usually clear a fence 4½ feet high. However, when they jump up to 7 or 8 feet they usually catch at the top of the fence and pull themselves over.

JESUS HEALING AND HELPING

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 8:1-9:34.

GOLDEN TEXT—Himself took our infirmities and bore our sicknesses.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Healing and Helping.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Healing and Helping.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Jesus the Friend of the Needy.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Jesus Meeting Human Needs.

I. Jesus Heals a Leper (8:1-4).

1. The dreadful disease (v. 2).

Leprosy, the most loathsome and nopeless disease known, in the Jewish ritual, was regarded as a symbol of sin. As leprosy was incurable by man, so only the divine physician could cure sin.

2. The leper's faith (v. 2).

His cry was most pitiable, but his faith was strong. He fully believed that Jesus was able, but not certain that He was willing to heal him.

3. Jesus' power (v. 3).

He put forth His hand and touched the leper, bidding the disease depart, and instantly the man was cleansed.

II. Jesus Heals the Centurion's Servant (8:5-13).

1. The disease (v. 6).

The victim of paralysis is helpless and disqualified for service.

2. The centurion's humility (v. 8).

He first sent the Jewish elders and then his friends (Luke 7:3, 6), because he felt his unworthiness. The case of this servant was so grave that his master brushed aside his timidity and personally appealed to Jesus.

3. The centurion's faith (vv. 8, 9).

He believed that if Jesus would but speak the word, his servant would be healed.

4. The wonderful power of Jesus (v. 13).

He did not need even to see the helpless man, but only to speak the word and it was done.

III. Jesus Heals Peter's Mother-in-law (8:14, 15).

She was sick of a fever. Jesus was invited into Peter's home to heal this woman. Upon entering the home He touched the hand of the patient and the fever left her, and she arose and ministered unto them.

IV. Jesus Casts Out Demons (8:28-34).

After stilling the tempest, Jesus crossed to the other side of the sea into heathen territory.

1. Met by two men possessed by demons (v. 28).

These men were in a desperate condition (see Mark 5:1-17 and Luke 8:27). So fierce were they that no one could safely pass that way. They wore no raiment and no chains were strong enough to hold them.

2. What they knew about Christ (v. 29).

They knew that He was the Son of God and that He had come to destroy the devil and his work. Among the demons there is no doubt as to the deity of Jesus Christ and as to the judgment to come.

3. Christ's power to deliver from the devil (vv. 30-32).

The demons quailed before Him, not daring to dispute His power.

V. Jesus Heals a Woman With an Issue of Blood (9:20-22).

1. Her helpless condition (v. 20).

She had been a great sufferer for twelve long years, not only from the disease, but at the hands of the physicians (Mark 5:26).

2. Her faith (v. 21).

Her faith was so strong that she believed contact with the Master's garment would secure needed help.

3. Her confession (v. 21, cf. Luke 8:47).

She thought secretly to get the blessing, but Jesus perceived that virtue had gone out from Him, and had her make a public confession.

4. Christ's words of encouragement (v. 22).

He told her that it was her faith, not her touch that saved her.

VI. Jesus Opening the Eyes of Two Blind Men (9:27-31).

1. Their persistence of faith (v. 28).

These poor men had heard of the wonderful works of Jesus and desired to be healed.

2. The intelligence of faith (v. 27).

They cried unto Him as the Son of David, which showed that they recognized Him as the promised Messiah. The prophet had foretold such to be the works of Messiah (Isa. 29:18; 35:5; 42:7).

3. The challenge of faith (v. 28).

In reply to His challenge, they gave Him a definite answer.

4. The triumph of faith (vv. 29, 30).

Their faith brought them into touch with the Lord of life who revealed His power by opening their eyes.

Heroes and Cowards

Great occasions do not make heroes or cowards; they simply unveil them to the eyes of men. Silently and imperceptibly, as we wake or sleep, we grow and wax strong, we grow and wax weak, and at last some crisis shows us what we have become.—Canon Westcott.

Faith

Faith is an almighty thing like the Eternal God Himself; therefore God seeks to prove and try it.—Luther.

Japan Comes First in Crusade Against Kiss

The antikissing crusade, which started in Russia some time ago, appears to be spreading. Kansas has now taken up the cudgels against the kiss. "Don't kiss in crowded places or in badly ventilated rooms," is one of the warnings that has been issued to the citizens of this American state. Another is: "Don't kiss a person who has a chill or is fevered." But Japan is still the real paradise of those who want to abolish kissing. The kiss is in such disfavor there that it cannot even be shown on the cinema screen. Some day, perhaps, the anti-kiss crusaders will publish statistics to show that in Japan people are much healthier than anywhere else in the world. That would be a big point in their favor—if the figures could really be interpreted in this way. But perhaps they can't; and, anyway, it isn't likely to make any difference.—Montreal Family Herald.

I had nervous spells until I couldn't do my housework. A lady told me about the Vegetable Compound and it strengthened me. Beside my own housework I am now working in a restaurant and I feel better than I have in three years. I hope my letter will be the means of leading some other woman to better health."—Mrs. Barbara Rivera, 2914 Polk St., Ft. Meyers, Florida.

ATTORNEY SPRINGER ADDRESSES P. T. A.

The Parent Teachers Association met at the Community Gym on Tuesday of this week. As this month contains the natal days of two of America's most loved citizens, it was fitting that the program be of a patriotic nature. C. A. Woodcox directed the singing. America the Beautiful, being the opening number. A play by the sixth grade was the next then given followed by Miss Martha Miser, who gave a piano solo.

C. C. Springer, of Auburn, gave an address, in which he gave reasons for the calling of constitutional convention for the purpose of considering some amendments to same. A motion is largely prevalent, says Mr. Springer, that it is dangerous to tamper with the constiution, but reasons were given, where in some particulars, at least a change would be desirable. The constitution founders, could not see far enough into the future, to realize that the present constitution would in time become archaic. The growth and development of our state, both as to population and improvements, has caused it it adopt different business methods, and for the same reason, necessitates a change in our methods of legal jurisprudence. Among the changes contemplated, is one relating to taxation, in which it is proposed to shift the burden of taxation from the owners of visible property, to those more able to bear the burden.

One judicial system is borrowe! from England, and three different systems are in effect, in different sections of the country. He contrasted our courts of our country with those of European countries, in which our system showed to a disadvantage.

The public is beginning to take notice of these things, and questions are being asked in a manner indicating apprehension and dissatisfaction; especially is this true in regard to cases relating to criminal activity.

It is a dangerous sign when faith in our courts begins to deminish. The faults of our jury system is not in the jury itself, but in the manner in which it is operated and controlled.

Two musical numbers by a male quartette, Merritt Sechler, Roy Koch, Carl Perkins and Ed Storer, were given at the close of Mr. Springer's address which were well received.

Basil Sheffer gave a reading which was very good. "Who gave you the name of Old Glory?" was the title of the reading given by little Miss Louise Sechler. Three little Misses in colonial garb in a patriotic musical number presenting little George Washington and Betsy Ross, this was a pretty conception and the little ones did their parts in a commendable manner.

The citizen's salute to the flag was presented by a group of young pupils of the school, and was word perfect. Announcements and secretary's report, then patriotic song and adjournment.

STRESSING SAFETY IN AUTOMOBILES

To give an idea of the magnitude of the automobile industry and its bearing on employment and general business condition, it is interesting to note a recent report that one manufacturer of steel automobile bodies, in a Philadelphia plant alone, used 140,464.3 tons of sheet steel in the production of all-steel automobile bodies in 1929. This would make a 16-foot wide strip of steel 2,302 miles long.

The use of all-steel bodies has been growing rapidly as a safety feature of automobiles but one can scarcely realize that this much steel can be used by one plant in building one part of an automobile in one year.

American cars, in all price plasses, feature steel bodies. Exhaustive tests and practical experience have proven that this type of construction offers the occupants of a car greatest possible protection in an accident. The trend toward greater automobile safety is unquestionably responsible for saving thousands of lives each year.

DONATES RELICS FOR STATE PARK HOTEL

Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Langley, in preparing to have a sale, through the solicitation of F. R. Leighty, warden, donated to the state deparment of conservation, a large spinning wheel, a flax wheel and yarn reel to be placed in the hotel at the state park at Angola and to be left there permanently. The department will issue orders for their truck to call and remove the relics to the hotel and there to be displayed with the names of the doners and a history of their use and age where possible. This was a fine act on the part of Mr. and Mrs. Langley.

ADVERTISE IN YOUR HOME TOWN PAPER

The Oswego, Oregon, Review runs the following interesting quotation from the American Banker's Magazine, using it as an advertisement:

"No business in any town should allow a newspaper published in his town to go without his name and business being mentioned somewhere in its columns.

"This applies to all kinds of business and professional men. It does not mean that you should have a whole, half or even a quarter page ad in each issue of the paper, but your name should be mentioned, if you do not use more than a two-line space.

"A stranger picking up a newspaper should be able to tell what business is represented in the town by looking at a paper. This is the best possible town advertiser.

"The man who does not advertise his business does an injustice to himself and the town. The life of a town depends upon the live, wide-awake and liberal advertising business man."

CELEBRATE FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY, MONDAY

Mr. and Mrs. John N. Koch celebrated their fiftieth anniversary of wedded life Monday of this week, by inviting Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Shilling, Mr. and Mrs. John Doll and Mr. and Mrs. Waldo Rosenberry and family, in for the day, but when they arrived, practically all their relatives were present to help eat the wonderful pot luck dinner and enjoy the day with the aged couple. Mrs. Koch is now 71 years old and Mr. Koch is 74.

Among the other relatives present were: Mr. and Mrs. Reuben Koch, Dr. and Mrs. J. W. Morr of Albion, Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Johnson, Mrs. Anna Baker of Fort Wayne, Mrs. Anna Koch, Mr. and Mrs. John Draggoo of Montgomery, Mich., Mr. and Mrs. Walter Baker of Spencerville, Mr. and Mrs. Justin Morr and sons, Bobby, John and Jerry Dean of Albion, Mrs. Blanch Mason and son, Jack and Mrs. Otis Fitch and children Elsie and Warren and Mrs. Josephine Clark of Fort Wayne, Mr. and Mrs. George Walter and sons, Dale, George, Lewie and Russell, Mrs. Lela Northrup and son, Curtis, Mrs. Beulah Coburn and children Charles, LeRoy and Eloise.

Mr. Koch stated that they were married at the home of the bride's parents, now known as the John Shilling place, and that they started housekeeping on what was then known as the Bailey farm, just west of the Laux farm. Many years were spent on the farm north of town, when about 25 years ago, they moved to St. Joe.

A part of the afternoon was spent in visiting and singing.

THE BAND COMES TO LIFE

Since the pee wee birds have been chirping the noise that spring is here, the band has stretched out its legs and has been showing signs of life. The organization has been in a state of torpidity during the winter and no one has heard a peep out of it. Practice has been suspended because of the many other school and athletic activities which crowd the calendar during the winter months. But now, with basket ball all but over and the High School term well on its way, the band will now get busy getting ready for the coming season's concerts. This organization is ten years old. There is not many organizations of its kind that have stayed on the job as long as this crew and when the time shall come when the membership of our band has scattered that will kill the organization, then the citizens will see the importance of this band that has in the past seemed so unimportant. Every thing in the community is an asset to that community and what makes communities dead is the losing of some of the important living factors that make a town different from the city down by the river.

Of course, there are those who do not like music; there are those who like music but not well enough to spend any money for its maintenance; there are those who consider music one of the indespensible elements of a well balanced life for both the individual and the community. It would seem evident, however, that whatever verdict the community render about the future maintenance of the band organization, there will remain the fact always that the town can't afford to let this ten year old child die—not this year. Let's show all the signs of life that we can. If we can't give the band any financial aid, give the organization your moral support—that costs nothing. The band will meet on Tuesday night to reorganize. They plan to have a larger band than before. All musicians are hereby notified to come in on next Tuesday night and report for duty. New members solicited. Hurrah for the band.

BUYS MULE TEAM NEAR WOODBURN

O. D. Baker and son, Lester, made the purchase of a span of mules near Woodburn, Monday. They are selling their horses and will use tractor power and mules for their farming. Roy Keller, another of our farmers, puchased a span a week ago at Fremont, and Lloyd Draggoo already has a span, making the total of good mules three spans.

Lots of folks who think they have "indigestion" have only an acid condition which could be corrected in five or ten minutes. An effective anti-acid like Phillips Milk of Magnesia soon restores digestion to normal.

Phillips does away with all that sourness and gas right after meals. It prevents the distress so apt to occur two hours after eating. What a pleasant preparation to take! And how good it is for the system! Unlike a burning dose of soda—which is but temporary relief at best—Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid.

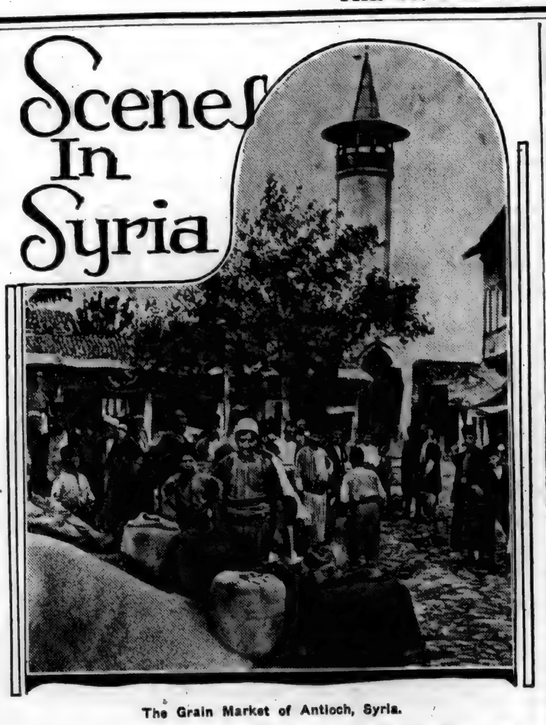
Scenes In Syria



The Grain Market of Antioch, Syria.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

SYRIA, where France, in charge under a mandate, is considering a new constitution for the Republic of Syria, changes little in its life and customs whether it is in control of Turk or Latin. Land in Alexandretta, drive for three or four hours over the hills, and you will find Antioch not greatly different from the Antioch which the Crusaders found 800 years ago. But it is different from the Antioch that Greek kings and Roman soldiers knew more than a millenium before. The present town nestles under the slopes on which its ancient forerunner once stood. "The Crown of the East," as classic Antioch was called, is today a much-battered diadem, traces of a Roman aqueduct and of a city wall, once wide enough for four-horse chariots to drive along the top, alone remaining of her architectural jewels.

Temples and public baths, theater and ampitheater, senate, house and imperial palace—all have followed their architect kings, the Seleucidae, into dusty oblivion.

Antioch's living link with the past consists in that there is still a Christian community in the city where members of the new sect were first called Christians. It was here that they first formed themselves into a community outside the synagogue; also, it is the city from which St. Paul started on his missionary travels. But were St. Paul to return to Antioch today he would never recognize in this drowsy Syrian town that gold-and-marble metropolis whose luxurious citizens must have evoked some of his thunder-and-lightning philippics.

Merely to catalogue ancient Antioch's builders, conquerors, rulers, and religious teachers is to suggest its former grandeur. The list includes the kings of Pesia and Armenia, Pompey, Zenobia of Palmyra, Constantine the Great, Julian the Apostate, the Crusaders, and half a dozen Roman emperors who maintained imperial residences there.

The facility with which a westerner may degenerate under the Orient's spell is proverbial. The Romans succumbed to it at Antioch; and the stalwart Crusaders, having captured part of the city, became too demoralized by it to finish the job. At last, thanks to a salutary earthquake—perhaps nothing less would have roused them—they begrit themselves, invested the city, and instituted a massacre.

Antioch Not a "Genuine Antique."

A truly edifying moral attaches to the decadent Antiochenes. Possessing a scurrilous wit and the gift of inventing objectionable nicknames, they tried their pleasantries on Chosroes, the invading Persian. But Chosroes couldn't take a joke and promptly destroyed their beautiful city.

Though it was rebuilt, successive earthquakes did their part, and the Antiochenes did theirs by using the debris of imperial edifices to repair their homes. Today, Antioch, once the objective of armies, is shunned even by the modern army of tourists; for it is not a "genuine antique," being therein like its bazaars' "Roman" thumb rings and bracelets, which are too often the work of Aleppine copyists, who excel the centuries in producing fine verdigris effects.

Aleppo, which is reached after six hours of motor car travel over a fair road through the plain, is Syria's first reminder to the southbound traveler that he is in the land of white-clad Arabs, of the smiting glare of nearby deserts, of oriental civilization uninterrupted since antiquity.

Indeed, there are Aleppines who will gravely assure you that the city's Arabic name of Haleb-al-Shabba (that is, "the dappled cow has been milked") refers to the fact that Abraham opened a free milk station there in Biblical times. Whether or not this gloss would withstand higher criticism, it is hardly less to be chuckled over than Shakespeare's reference to the good ship Tiger sailing for Aleppo, which is something like seventy miles inland.

It is trade centers rather than sumptuous capitals which endure; and Aleppo, known to the ancient Egyptians long before Antioch sprang into existence, has been carrying on her tradition of "business as usual" for certainly four thousand years. A stranger, entering its great bazaar from the street's blinding, sand-colored vistas, can easily lose himself in the cool twilight of those labyrinthine tunnels. It is veritably a walled town within a city, an almost night-black town, when, at high noon, the air holes in the roof are masked against the sun.

In Aleppo's Bazaar.

Place yourself near an unmasked roof hole, though which falls a twenty-foot column of sunlight, cutting the gloom like a plunged sword. For all you can see outside of its area, the bazaar street might be draped in black; but, by ones and twos, figures emerge from the blackness, pass through the shaft of light, and are swallowed up in the blackness beyond. Thus, in cinemalike "close ups," glaringly illuminated, they flash past, the types of the East.

Here is a donkey bearing two huge jars and led by a patriarchal figure (it might be the ghost of Abraham dispensing free milk). Two swathed and veiled Moslem women, black, phantoms, who are "window shopping" from booth to booth, appear and vanish.

A diminutive bazaar boy, in flapping skirt, bearing tiny cups on a brass salver, darts through the light shaft with complimentary coffee for his master's new customers. A hunch-back beggar, clutching together his verminous rags, poses in the glaring circle with outstretched palm.

A trio of Aleppine dandies, wearing white, tasseled caftans and long-skirted surcoats striped in yellow and black, swagger past, fingering the pommels of their Damascene knives. A bowed, green-turbaned priest, with snowy beard and benign eyes, paces by, the glare illuminating the string of amber beads which hangs from his toying fingers.

Such a mass of tradition has accumulated around Syria and Palestine that one is apt to expect his trip through those countries to be one of continuous interest. To say that they contain great barren stretches of nothing in particular, interspersed with oases of absorbing charm, would be much nearer to fact.

Thus, in an entire day of 223 miles of railway travel from Aleppo southward, one sees little except treeless, sun-scorched plains containing but two considerable towns, with here and there a Kurdish "beehive" village whose unpartitioned mud huts, set closely together, resemble a cluster of large, brown bowling pins.

Southward on the Railway.

It is a relief to the eye, upon nearing Hama, to find that flat-roofed, mud-walled town lying in a stripe of dark-green verdure between the dust-brown slopes, the Orontes river snaking past some great water wheels, at their ceaseless work of irrigation. Such a friend is the water bearer in Syria that, like desert springs, each of these wheels is dignified by its own name.

Black minarets of basalt lift into view, marking Homs, at which station the train halts, so that everyone can enjoy a fifteen minute smoke; or so one gathers from the presence of various small boys, who run along the platform, carrying lighted calabash pipes and shrieking in Arabic, "Get your nargiles before the train starts!"

Brown fingers beckon from train windows, and pipes are handed aboard to patriarchal Arabs, who thereupon sink back to puff away, their eyes half closed, for a blissful session of that half doze which the Turks call kief.

There follow to the south dreary wastes of sun-burned plain, scattered with jagged rocks—a barren belt which mysteriously sustains the shaggy goats and their savage-faced masters, who squat about isolated black tents—on either hand the curved breasts of the Lebanon and Anti-Lebanon hills.

And now the sunset, flooding the barren land, fuses the Lebanon into mounds of barbaric jewels—yellow, pale green, and violet—heaping the horizon. And now it searches out six Greek columns, brooding over the desert, smiting them into reddish gold. The train is at Baalbek.

HOW TO LIVE LONGER

By JOHN CLARENCE FUNK
A. M., Sc. D.

Director of Public Health Education, State of Pennsylvania.

You Are You

A HIGHLY educated man of fifty-two years of age while reading his morning newspaper crumpled up in a heap and promptly expired. The obituary columns were exceedingly flattering and mentioned his many notable and scientific achievements. What they did not say, however, was that in spite of all his book learning he was far from being a wise man.

As a keen observer he was very definitely trained. But for some inexplicable reason he did not apply this gift to his own body. Yet he would have been almost insulted had any one intimated to him that he was not living a sensibly healthy life. As a matter of fact, this unfortunate gentleman lived by rule. He ate, slept, bathed and exercised according to the book. His body was magnificently disciplined. But the point he failed to see was that it was the other fellow's discipline.

If human bodies were made in factories and could therefore be tested for standardized stresses and strains, then perhaps it would be all right to set up rigid rules governing health activities to be strictly followed by one and all alike. However, nature is not made that way at all.

It seems scarcely necessary to indicate that there are thousands of things people can do which every one well knows are harmful. But then again there seem to be many other things that some people can do harmlessly which naturally damage other people.

Inhaled tobacco, cold baths, coffee and even sleep and exercise develop different reactions in different people. It therefore behooves every one carefully to study the bodily response to one's living habits. And this, without over emphasized reference to the effect upon others.

Within a limited extent, every individual is a law unto himself. That is the one thing to remember in connection with this fascinating game of living. Get acquainted with yourself and govern yourself accordingly. You are you!

Forgetting

IT HAS often been said that memory is the real power of great men. Certainly it has played an important part in the lives of many of the world's outstanding figures. And perhaps the opposite is equally true. Forgetfulness is a monstrous handicap to overcome and is one of the main reasons for failure.

Fortunately a poor memory can be noticeably improved. Contrarily a good memory, in some particulars, can deteriorate, or at least, it can be detoured.

As an example of this point, not long ago a brilliant lawyer, known the country 'round for his amazing memory, died. At the time of his death he was but fifty-four years old. But for the fifteen years prior to his decease he had so forgotten the sensible methods of living as to consume a pint of whisky daily, to eat enough food for three average men, to smoke fifteen cigars a day, to sleep only six hours each night and to avoid fresh air and exercise altogether. It therefore naturally followed as an inevitable result that he actually forgot to live!

It is bad enough to lack a good memory, but no matter how weak it may happen to be, it is sufficiently strong not to forget that:

1—Enough, rather than too much food, is one of the secrets of longevity.

2—The body was made for daily exercise, therefore requires it and suffers if deprived of it.

3—Adequate sleep in a properly ventilated room is a necessary requirement.

4—The annual physical examination will promptly discover insidious disease onslaughts.

5—Brains, money, position and fame amount to nothing if health is lost.

Therefore, whether the possessor of a good or bad memory, don't forget these things. One is dead a sufficiently long time without hastening the day through forgetfulness.

Hesitancy Great Foe of Forward Movement

On being questioned as to whether the congregation with which he was identified had started to build a new church, a typically careful Scotchman guardedly replied, "Well, no, not exactly that; but we are beginning to think about starting to commerce." Are not such words descriptive of the attitude some of us assume in regard to the building of our characters and our lives? Often we hesitate to commit ourselves in a definite way to a specific forward movement, desirable though it may be. It may be the dread of criticism on the part of friends and associates; it may be a distrust in our own power and ability, or possibly it may be the fear of sacrifice that deters us. As a consequence, we are still down on the lower levels of life, talking, perhaps, about what we expect to do, but never really doing it. The best we can say of ourselves is that "we are beginning to think about starting to commerce." Why not get to work?—Great Thoughts.

Needless Pain!

The man who wouldn't drive his motorcar half a mile when it's out of order, will often drive his brain all day with a head that's throbbing.

Such punishment isn't very good for one's nerves! It's unwise, and it's unnecessary. A tablet or two of Bayer Aspirin will relieve a headache every time. So, remember this accepted antidote for pain, and spare yourself a lot of needless suffering. Read the proven directions and you'll discover many valuable uses for these tablets. For headaches; to check colds. To ease a sore throat and reduce the infection. For relieving neuralgic, neuritic, rheumatic pain.

People used to wonder if Bayer Aspirin was harmful. The doctors answered that question years ago. It is not. Some folks still wonder if it really does relieve pain. That's settled! For millions of men and women have found it does. To cure the cause of any pain you must consult your doctor; but you may always turn to Bayer Aspirin for immediate relief.

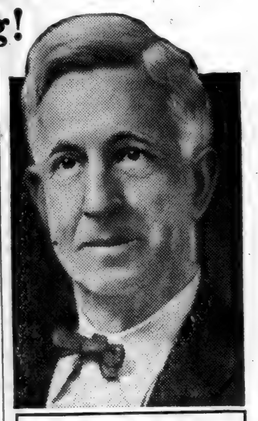
Twelve Years Mayor and Going Strong!



Hon. E. N. Kirby, for twelve years Mayor of Abilene, Texas, who has discovered secret of success.

WHEN a man who has been mayor of a big city for twelve years finds out how to live, his words are worth listening to. Ex-Mayor E. N. Kirby of Abilene, Texas, discovered the simple way to health about ten years ago (he is now 64.)

"I am now a new man, and as active as a boy," says Mr. Kirby. "I feel fine all the time and rarely have an ache or a pain, although for twenty-five years I suffered with rheumatism, and sometimes was unable to stand or walk. I would not give up my simple health discovery—no, not for five thousand dollars in gold!" That discovery was Nujol!

That's the wonderful thing about Nujol. Although it is not a medicine and contains absolutely no drugs, its harmless internal lubrication seems to make people feel better and look on the brighter side of life, whether they are old or young.

Of course you can understand why this is so: we all of us have natural poisons in our bodies that make us feel headachy, sick and low in our minds. Nujol, which is as tasteless and colorless as pure water, helps to absorb these and carry them away, easily, regularly as clock work.

Instead of drugging and irritating your body with pills, cathartics, laxatives, and other habit-forming drugs, give your body the internal lubrication which it needs, just as much as any other machine. After a few days you will be surprised at the difference in the way you feel. You can get Nujol in a sealed package in any drug store. Nujol may change your whole outlook on life. Get a bottle today and give yourself a chance to be well!

When BABIES are upset

Baby ills and ailments seem twice as serious at night. A sudden cry may mean colic. Or a sudden attack of diarrhea—a condition it is always important to check quickly. How would you meet this emergency—tonight? Have you a bottle of Castoria ready? There is nothing that can take the place of this harmless but effective remedy for children; nothing that acts quite the same, or has quite the same comforting effect on them.

For the protection of your wee one—for your own peace of mind—keep this old, reliable preparation always on hand. But don't keep it just for emergencies; let it be an everyday aid. Its gentle influence will ease and soothe the infant who cannot sleep. Its mild regulation will help an older child whose tongue is coated because of sluggish bowels. All druggists have Castoria; the genuine bears Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper.

NEW STYLES IN JUNIOR COATS; FLOUNCES BEDECK EVENING GOWN

WHEN Miss Junior ashopping goes for to buy herself a new spring coat, she will discover that belted and capelet types are the thing this season.

Having established the fact of these stylepoints firmly in her mind, the question of what's smartest in coatings will then arise. First to mind comes tweeds, when chic worsteds are under consideration. Tweeds deserve a paragraph all their own for there are tweeds and tweeds, some of zephyr weight, soft to the touch and of lacy weave, others sturdy and mannish, accessories made of the same material as the coats or if not of the actual weaves, at least related in color.

For Evening Wear.

What a dull prosaic world this would be, now just wouldn't it, if "fickle" fashion should decide to settle down to a year-to-year changeless existence? Which is a word in defense of the startling new silhouettes which have all but created a near-panic among fashion's followers. After all, maybe these long, longer, longest hemlines and short, shorter, shortest waistlines are "blessings in disguise." At least, they give answer to that ever-resounding cry for "something different."

A SMART COAT MODEL FOR THE JUNIOR

And such a flounce, flounce, flouncing as skirts are receiving at the hands of our contemporary stylists. The new frocks almost out-flounce the muchly be-flounced creations which not long since we considered hopelessly old-fashioned and quaint. We may as well, however, from now on and until further notice, give serious consideration to this matter of flounces, for they are most decidedly in the modern style picture, and truly beguiling.

It took yards and yards—plus of black tulle to flounce the stunning all-black formal evening frock herewith illustrated. The bodice top of this exclusive Jenny model being tight-fitting and svelte accents, by way of contrast, the bouffancy of the flounces, thus contriving a silhouette which is new among the very newest.

There is really no getting away from flounces when it comes to the new picturesque evening gown types. The single, wide, circular flounce which develops a tremendous flare at the hemline is a popular version. Then there is the plain old-fashioned row-and-row flounced skirt, and the sort which places narrow circular frills tier upon tier, and the from-above-the-knee circular flounce, which is itself again flounced with myriads of tiny ruffles of tulle.

AN ATTRACTIVE EVENING GOWN

just the thing for school and travel wear. However, the loose woven tweeds are newest. Their lacy texture makes them delightfully wearable.

The girl's coat in the picture is of blue and gray tweed. According to fashion requirements, it is belted at the waistline. The swankiest thing about it is its jaunty little shoulder cape. It shows a new collar line, too, which stresses a flat tailored treatment.

Monotone woolens in soft light colorings are sponsored, wool velvet being one of the newer weaves. Gray green is a favorite color, also grayed blue and yellowish tweeds are exceptionally good. There are quite a few reds on the fashionable color list.

When a coat is minus a cape then it resorts to a novelty collar to give it distinction. Frequently these collared models are enhanced with fur, lapin registering among preferred pelts. These fur collars define cravat styles, johnny types and sometimes small shawl types are featured in conjunction with capes.

While wool jersey is not, strictly speaking, a representative cloak material, yet for the long-coat ensemble it is in high favor. Handsome costumes for young girls include a dress of lace jersey whose openwork patterning makes it very attractive. The one-piece frock is topped with a long caped coat made of the plain jersey.

Other items of interest in connection with junior coats are yokes which are adroitly seamed in, also the use of buttons as a trimming, also hats and

EGG DISHES

The secret of egg cookery lies in the simple principle, which is a rule with all protein foods, that is, never to cook them at a high temperature, as heat toughens and hardens protein foods. Eggs being the most delicate of these foods should have especial care in cooking.

When we speak of eggs as boiled hard or soft, we do not mean boiled at all. Eggs will cook hard at 170 to 180 degrees, depending upon the length of time to which they have been subjected to the heat. Eggs to be cooked in the shell, if desired hard, should be placed in a saucepan, using one pint of boiling water for each egg that is of room temperature when put into the water; if taken from the ice chest, more boiling water will be needed to cook the egg. Cover closely and let stand on the back of the range or in a warm place for 30 minutes. The egg is then hard cooked, but the white will be tender and easily digested. If a soft-cooked egg of various softness is desired, remove at six, ten or twelve minutes. Once the principle is learned for cooking eggs in the shell it is learned for other forms. Low temperature, below the boiling point, is used for poached eggs. When cooking foods with eggs, place the dish in water, especially in the oven cooking. A successful meringue is one that expands by long slow cooking in the oven for 20 minutes in an oven of 250 to 300 degrees.

THIS AND THAT

A good bread maker has reason to be proud of her accomplishment. For the making of good bread is both an art and a science. The knowledge of the materials that go into it, the art of kneading and baking.

One must remember that yeast in any form whether wild, dry or compressed is a plant that needs heat, moisture and food to make it grow. Then after the yeast has been softened it is mixed with the ingredients so that the budding plant may have plenty of chance to work in all parts of it, hence the importance of beating and mixing well. Then the temperature of rising is important. In very cold weather heat is necessary to keep the plant growing, usually the temperature of the kitchen is sufficient. After the rising comes the kneading. This is another process to mix the yeast well with the flour that is added. Knead the loaf, turn, another motion of kneading, turn, keep up this process until the flour and yeast are well mixed. Too much flour makes the bread dry; it cracks while baking. A good rule is to knead the bread until it seems right, then plunge the finger into the mass; if it comes out easily without much sticking the bread is ready to make into loaves and put to rise again.

Cover tightly after beating all together and add about five cupfuls of flour in the first mixing then when it is risen add three more for the kneading. Let rise until double in bulk. Place light bread into a hot oven to kill the yeast at once, or bread will be too light and coarse when baked. One hour for baking the ordinary sized loaf is the usual time. The crust should be brown, thin and tender, dome-shaped and well done to the center.

For those who enjoy an occasional loaf of salt rising bread the following recipe is reliable. Salt rising bread must be attended with more care than the ordinary yeast bread as to warmth:

Salt Rising Bread.—Use graham flour which is said to be the quickest in action, although some prefer a mixture of corn meal and wheat flour. Scald the bowl, add three-fourths of a cupful of scalding water, cool to a heat below the boiling point but much hotter than for other yeast, add one-fifth teaspoonful of salt, a small pinch of soda and thicken with the graham or other flour. Stir, keep warm twelve hours and proceed as follows:

Do not add the salt or soda to the mixture while rising. It is the wild yeast from the air and materials used that supplies the yeast. It is best unless the heat can be uniform throughout the rising to set the bowl in water in a fireless cooker. When light add one pint of warm milk, one pint of water and flour to make a thick batter. Now beat well and place to rise again, in a warm place away from a draft. In two hours the bread will be light enough to handle. Now add soda and salt and knead into loaves. It must be handled much softer than ordinary bread. Let rise and bake as usual, using care not to jar the loaves while baking.

Jelly Pudding.—Take two cupfuls of graham crumbs, one cupful of tart jelly or jam, add a bit of sugar if needed and whip until it is dry. Mold and chill. Serve with whipped cream.

New-type Flour Banishes "Luck" in Baking

They use a new-type flour for all baking purposes—GOLD MEDAL "Kitchen-tested" Flour—that simplifies baking remarkably and banishes the cause of most baking failures.

Failures, experts found, were mostly due to the fact that two sacks of the same flour often acted differently, even with the same recipe . . . it was not uniform in oven action.

So now all GOLD MEDAL is "Kitchen-tested" before it comes to you. As each batch comes through the mill it is tested by actual baking—bread, cakes, biscuits, pastries—in an oven just like yours. Only flour which acts the same perfect way every time is allowed to go out to you. Thus you know in advance exactly what your results will be.

Indiana has a gold rush. Five miles east of Anderson, Cecil Bromenberg discovered that the sand on his farm contained gold and after an analysis it revealed a worth of $30 per ton. Now all the inhabitants are rushing there and are about to carry his farm away in baskets, pans, boxes and bags. No doubt there will be a rush from the north.

The Men's Bible class of the Church of Christ met in the home of Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Wodcox Friday evening. There were eleven present and all enjoyed a good time. Many valuable suggestions were made and discussed. The male quartet sang two numbers and Mrs. Woodcox gave a reading.

Elsewhere in this issue will be found the sale notice of M. E. Storer, who now lives on the Erick farm, south of town. The sale will be held the 25th and everything is selling as Ed is leaving the farm and will move into the Mrs. Alice Warner property, which he purchased last Friday.

As a result of stubbing his toe on the John Koch crossing, Isaac Meese fell Monday afternoon, and hurt his right knee and jammed his shoulders. Warsaw girls under 18 who wish to smoke will find it difficult in the future. Local police warned all tobacco merchants not to sell cigarets to young girls. The action followed complaints that nearly fifty girls have made a habit of lighting cigarets after leaving the high school. In many cases, according to the reports, boys and girls have been seen smoking in automobiles just off the school property.

Sale cards are being printed for Mrs. Alice Warner, for March 1st. Last week she sold her property to Ed Storer, who will move from the Erick farm after his sale, on February 25th. As long as the editor can remember Mrs. Warner has been a resident of St. Joe and we are sorry to have an old standby of St. Joe leave. Mr. and Mrs. Langley, who have been taking care of Mrs. Warner in her declining years, will also sever their connections with our little town, which is also regrettable. Their only idea in making the change is to be where they can have more of the conveniences due one in their latter years, and thus save the drudgery of carrying fuel and water, as Mr. Langley is away from home a great part of the time. Nevertheless, we will say again that we are sorry to have them leave their old home.

Mrs. C. A. Woodcox spent the past few days at Fort Wayne at the bedside of her daughter-in-law Mrs. Byron Woodcox.

Chas. Woodcox ruptured himself while working at the Auburn Tuesday, and it was reported that he underwent an operation on Wednesday.

Chas. Cochran left last Friday, expecting to go to Chicago and Elgin. Mrs. Cochran has charge of the restaurant. Vern Coburn is carrying the mail.

Quantities of Amber Found in Baltic Basin

Amber has been mined for hundreds of years in the so-called blue earth of the Baltic basin. It is classified as a fossil resin and geologists believe that several species of pines have had a part in the formation of the amber of the Baltic basin.

Pieces of amber are torn from the sea floor and cast up by the waves. They are collected at ebb tide by searchers who sometimes wade into the sea and with nets attached to long poles drag to the beach the seaweed containing entangled masses of amber. Dredges have also been used.

Lithuanian raw amber is the property of the government. Each finder has to deliver the pieces to administrators of the state's central depots of amber. Failure to do so leads to a charge of embezzlement.

Amber has found its greatest use in the fashioning of ornaments. Artisans who makes necklaces, bracelets and brooches turn the amber on a lathe and polish it with whitening and water, or with stone and oil, the final luster being imparted by friction with flannel.—New York Times.

When Armies Meet in Battle on Chessboard

The principles of chess are based on the struggle of every-day life. It is a battle between two armies of equal strength, fought on a field of 64 squares. Victory usually perches on the more proficient of the two generals in command. In a technical sense, the capture of the opposing king is not permitted, yet when the capture is inevitable, the game is ended. This fact seems to escape the recognition of many players, who direct their entire energies to the capture of pieces or pawns, when consistent play would indicate an easy road to victory through the medium of a checkmate. The temptation to proceed with the attack before all the pawns are in the field is a great one, but such premature attacks are usually abortive and frequently result in disaster. Chess literature abounds in examples of games in which disaster and defeat were a direct consequence of the failure to develop properly one or another of the pieces.—Exchange.

Blowing Hot and Cold

Doctor Slosson says that heat is measured as time is measured, only by its loss. When you blow through nearly closed lips the breath is expelled so rapidly that passing over the hand it cools it by evaporating the perspiration from the skin, whereas when you breathe upon it more gently from the open mouth the hand is surrounded by the warm air, and hence feels hot. If a thermometer were used instead of the hand, you would find that the effect in the two cases is the same, or often the reverse, because the thermometer has no moist skin and registers the actual temperature instead of merely changes of temperature.

CANDIDATES FOR OFFICE MAKING AN APPEARANCE

With the time for filing for office near at hand, DeKalb county party leaders are beginning to size up the situation with a view of filing their tickets for the primary May 6.

For prosecuting attorney, Richard W. Sharpless of Auburn, the incumbent.

For state representative, Larry Brandon, at present trustee of Union township.

For auditor, Frank Lyons, now trustee of Wilmington township.

For sheriff, Art Zimmerman and Guy Fitzsimmons, both of Auburn. The former is now deputy sheriff.

CARING FOR BROOD SOWS

(By Dr. John M. Evvard)

In order to secure strong, healthy, outstanding offspring at birth and further to promote the strength of the sow so that she may go thru the farrowing season with a minimum of danger it is highly essential that she be fed a suitable ration during the period that the young are being carried or amely the pregnancy period.

We have had some very remarkable results in the feeding of properly balanced rations to sows during the pregnancy period and we have found a vast difference in the weight, size, dimensional measurements, strength, hair coat and general muscling of the pigs produced. By feeding a good ration during the pregnancy and prepregnancy periods we have also succeeded in increasing the number of young that are farrowed.

One year we fed corn alone to a bunch of young gilts and the pigs weighed approximately 1.7 pounds on the average whereas when we fed a good supplemental, protein, vitamin and mineral feed in addition to the corn, the pigs were much heavier, weighing over two pounds and in some cases the average ran up around two and one-half pounds and there were more pigs per sow. Furthermore, we had less difficulty with the sows farrowing when the ration was good than when the ration was poor and naturally we lost less sows in the birth performance. A good ration makes the sows stronger and gives them greater vitality so that when the farrowing time comes, even tho the pigs are larger, they can have them with greater ease.

And then, too, there is another good point about the feeding of a good ration during the pregnancy period and that is that the sows come to their milk sooner than if an unbalanced poor ration is fed. It is just as important that the sows give a sufficiency of milk which is available at the time the pigs are born as it is to have that produce strong healthy pigs fortunately the particular rations hat produce strong healthy pigs are invariably those which also are of the character that produce likewise an abundance of milk.

If one is feeding a lone supplement to his brood sows along with his corn and minerals, then skimmilk, buttermilk, meat meal tankage and fish meal are outstanding favorites. But we have found in our experience that a well blended vitamin and mineral supplement gives better results than does straight tankage feeding. To depend upon linseed oilmeal or soybean oilmeal as the lone supplement to corn or other basal farm feeds, with the pregnant sows, particularly in the winter season is bad practice because the sows do not have enough nutriments available for the litters in their wombs.

Do not forget to give pregnant sows plenty of sunshine and exercise on suitable warm days. When the weather is cold and frigid, however, it is poor policy to force them to take undue exercise because they lose more than they gain by the process. In other words, they chill so as to produce more disadvantage than gain advantage from the sunshine and exercise.

The Advisory Brigade

Did you ever notice that it is the men and the women who have not made monumental successes—in fact, those who have been practical failures—that are always the freest in telling business people just how they should run their businesses? Most people who succeed have to stick to and look after their own businesses very closely, hence have no time to spare to attend to the affairs of other people.—New Albany Tribune.

The Next WORST Thing

A SITUATION in which totally un-insured property is destroyed by fire is the worst imaginable.
And the next worst is the destruction by fire of property on which there was inadequate insurance.
In the second instance, the owner went to the trouble of taking out a policy, and yet he is a loser—simply because he didn't bother to appraise his possessions carefully, or to re-appraise them when their value increased.

THE SPLIT ATOM

WONDERFUL have been the discoveries of scientific laboratories. Perhaps the last effort in this direction to startle the world is the attempt to split the atom. For many years we thought the atom was the smallest particle of matter. We know today that the atom is made up of much smaller particles called electrons. A celebrated scientist writes: "What may shake the world is what they are doing to the atom. They have split the atom of hydrogen and we have discovered what we thought was fundamental is something else again." If materials such as coal, sugar, wood and gold, etc., are made of electrons definitely arranged together, by an artificial arrangement of these electrons, unimaginable results may be obtained.

L. A. Barrett.

In that fascinating drama "Wings over Europe," Robert Nichols, co-author with Maurice Browne, pictures "The remarkable situation in which civilization has been placed by the amazing advance of science." If the forces inherent in the atom can be released and used for other purposes what would happen to our civilization? Not only could the basic metals be turned into gold and thus cause the destruction of the unit of value in the financial world, but the physical necessities of life could be so altered as to reverse the progress of civilization a thousand years, if not wholly destroy it.

While danger from the split atom is remote at present, it is very interesting to note that thus far not the scientist, but the idealist, the poet, the dramatist is raising the question, "what will happen to the moral order of the universe?"

If scientific discoveries are used for humanitarian purposes and not for private or commercial aggrandizement all may be well; but to leave to science alone the ultimate balance of power in this cosmic universe may be a very dangerous experiment. The employment of radioactivity in the cure of disease is a humanitarian use of the discovered radium. The discovery of the Hertzian waves gave us our wireless telegraphy and radio. Discoveries in scientific laboratories have largely been used in ministry to human need and comfort.

The possibility of the split atom creates another field of tremendous possibilities. Will the results be used for humanitarian ends? We believe they will.

Community Building

Trained Minds Needed for City Government

"The same rate of progress in municipal administration during the next twenty years as has occurred during the past 20," says a report of the Kansas City Public Service institute, "will make the government of cities generally outstanding examples of successful, economical and efficient government." The stigma that once attached to democracy because of the mismanagement of city affairs seems about to be removed.

Recently attention has been called to the truth that the big business of big cities needs the same sort of big-minded, far-sighted management as insures the success of big private enterprises. There is need for research, for study by trained minds, for the services of men capable of meeting and dealing with big administrative problems.

The probability of getting this kind of public service is lessened in proportion as changes in the personnel of government are frequent and the choice of a multitude of public servants depends upon the haphazard methods of political nomination and election.

There is the central fact. Constant changes in the government make a mess. Continuity of policy must be secured to reach the desirable results. —Kansas City Times.

Home Ownership First on Road to Prosperity

Home ownership as the best road to the prosperity of the individual and the country was the keynote of a conference of representative retail lumber dealers from various sections of the United States, held at Chicago.

Organization of a council whose object will be to help home builders build better and more livable homes was the outcome of the gathering. The lumbermen met primarily to discuss many of their merchandising problems, but the home ownership theme was injected into the conference by Fred Ludwig of Reading, Pa.

"The soundest thing in America today is absolute home ownership," said Mr. Ludwig. "It is the keynote to the real prosperity of the individual. People should own a home before they own an automobile or a radio.

"A man who owns a home is a better citizen and a better influence for the community in which he lives."

Artistic Idea Grows

In some countries, where general surroundings are artistic, it seems to have become a natural habit to follow prevalent good examples. Perhaps we can look forward to this in America, and when once a sufficient amount of good precedence has been established, the habit of doing good things will grow.

Architectural design is applicable to all classes of building, the smallest as well as the largest, notwithstanding the general opinion of the past that such thought is applicable only to expensive construction. When we arrive at a proper appreciation of the artistic roadside, the architectural treatment of roadside structures will logically follow.

Proper Motor Ways

The modern need is for systems of motor ways which are unobstructed and straight and wide enough to accommodate slower moving commercial vehicles, into which traffic can come from the side roads, and then flow freely and rapidly to its destination. Modern motor traffic no more belongs on the main street of a village than the New York Central tracks belong on the main street of Syracuse. Until we realize this, and begin to plan largely for the future, we will go on destroying values it has taken us two centuries to build up, and we will get very little but increasing traffic problems by way of compensation.—Exchange.

Plan to Beautify Prairie

Evergreens, distributed by the state forest extension service and planted by the farmers of Custer county, Neb., are to transform the barren prairies of this section into beauty spots in the spring of 1930.

The first county in Nebraska to perfect a definite program for tree planting and beautification, Custer will have the aid of the federal forest service, as well as the state forestry department, in reaching its goal.—Exchange.

Modernization Pays

Homes of beauty and comfort are easily acquired. The price for a pleasant place to live is low. The dollars and cents standpoint averages $2,000. Scattered over a term of years the monthly cost of modernizing the dwelling is decidedly less than the outlay in cash that goes with living in antiquated houses.

Wear on Roadways

Experience has shown that fine crushed rock and gravel roads are worn down at the rate of an inch a year by traffic of 500 vehicles a day.

Keeping Ahead

Every town ought to keep three or four blueprints ahead of its achievements.

But the sparkle had gone from their merry plans, and it was a relief when Eddy started the motor for the ride back to town.

"Won't you come along, Alex?" invited Ginger pointedly. "We can take one more."

"Oh, no, thanks. Miriam promised to take me in herself along about midnight. My doctor prescribed more Pay Dirt for me."

At the end of the driveway, they looked back. Miriam sat on the high gate, Alexander Murdock steadying her with one hand, while he swung the gate beneath her with the other. Their father smiling, waved farewell.

"Poor father," mourned Ginger. "What would you call it but preacher's luck, to lose his eyes just when there's the most to see?"

A dull supper at the parsonage, followed by the usual evening service at the church.

Tub Andrews hurried up to them after the service, offering himself as an escort home—a mere formality for those few safe intervening feet.

"I don't think we ought to," objected Marjory. "You see, the minister is staying with us—and I think we ought—I don't think it would look well for us to go off and leave him—"

"Ginger can take him," suggested Tub generously. "She can give him pointers on running a church—Ginger can give pointers on running anything."

"But Ginger is so young," stammered Marjory. "I feel that I am rather the head of the house now, and—"

Hiram Buckworth himself appeared at that moment. "Girls, if you will excuse me," he said gravely, "I will walk over with Mr. Westbury. We are discussing some church business."

"Hurray for Jop," chimed Tub, "that suits me to a T. We've got some church business of our own to talk about."

Hiram hesitated a moment, biting his lip as though he felt annoyance, but nodded at last, and went away, not without reluctance. And Marjory yielded her smiles to Tub Andrews, clinging meanwhile to Ginger to ensure her accompaniment, as they walked slowly homeward. On the familiar old veranda, Tub started at once, cheerfully, in the direction of the hammock.

"You can't stay tonight, Tub," said Marjory, with a smile warm enough to soften her dismissal. "I have to send you right straight home. I have been under the weather for a day or two, and Miss Jenkins didn't want me to go to church at all. She has ordered me to bed."

Tub, complaining tcudly, submitted perforce to this ejection, and sauntered away, whistling lugubriously.

Marjory still clung to her sister's hand.

"Ginger, wait a minute. Sh! Don't let him hear you. Let's sit in the hammock a while."

They sat down, huddled together, and waited in silence until the sound of Tub's footsteps, and Tub's whistling, subsided into the darkness. "Ginger, I want to ask you something. Will you just sit here with me, and talk until—Mr. Buckworth comes home? And Ginger, if he comes over, and sits down—he always does, you know—would you mind—would you just as lief— You wouldn't mind, would you—"

"Go to bed, you mean?"

"Well, you see, Ginger, I want to ask him about something."

"I see. I'm to talk my head off until he gets here, and then I'm to go to bed."

Marjory squeezed her arm about her sister's waist.

"You see— Well, you see, Ginger, it is like this. You remember that night when you crept downstairs—how long ago it seems!—and he had his arm around me. Well, Ginger, I didn't care a bit because you saw it. It didn't make any difference to me. But I think it embarrassed him, or made him angry, or something, for he hasn't so much as looked at me since."

"I see," said Ginger dully.

"I want to tell him that you—you didn't think a thing of it—a little thing like that. I think maybe he thinks I feel bad about it."

"You don't, do you?"

"No." Marjory's voice sank to a whisper. "Not a bit. I like him."

So the two girls sat, and waited, and presently from the church, they heard the two men, coming slowly, talking as they walked. Marjory clung to Ginger's hand, and held her breath. At the end of the flagstone path they stood for a while before they said good night and parted.

"Y-you talk," whispered Marjory.

Ginger talked. "I think it's such a silly name for a farm," said Ginger. "Just like Eddy Jackson. Who else would do such a dumb thing? Pay Dirt. Everybody knows a farm is nothing but dirt, and if it didn't pay, nobody would farm it. Oh, hello, Mr. Buckworth. Home so soon? It's lovely tonight. Won't you come and talk to us?"

"Not tonight, thanks, I am tired. Pleasant dreams." And he passed inside.

The girls sat very still for a moment. They heard him say good night to Miss Jenkins, and go up the stairs. Marjory's tense arm about Ginger's waist relaxed suddenly. Her quivering breath was more a sob than a sigh. Her shoulders rose convulsively.

"You—can go now. Thanks, Ginger. I'll sit here a minute, and listen to the night."

Ginger went in without a word. She was a stricken soul. She climbed to the studio, and counted her store of dimes. She looked at her complicated page of multiplication and addition. She sat for a long time, figuring, thinking.

Obviously, Marjory and the richness of a wealthy husband were to be denied them as succor. Marjory was forever lost to her plans for the future. All the years of washing dishes for the sake of Marjory's hands had been in vain. All her dreams of a romantic figure breezing mysteriously into their commonplace circle were dissipated into thin air.

"Ginger, What Do You Mean? Is Marjory Engaged, or Isn't She?"

Ginger was practical enough to admit defeat when she met it, and Marjory was her Waterloo. Marjory, beautiful peach-bloom Marjory would marry a minister, and her future would be that of catering to a Methodist church, and a parsonage minimum of three.

In that hour, Ginger Ella rose to great heights of renunciation. She relinquished all her dreams of fortune, of fame, of social supremacy for her beautiful sister. She would be satisfied to see her merely happy. She smiled. She went down the wabbly ladder without a moment's pause, for her decision was made. She knocked at the door of her father's room, now occupied by Hiram Buckworth.

Silence prevailed within. Ginger knocked again.

"Who is it, please? Just a minute."

He opened the door with one hand as he struggled into his coat with the other. Ginger, all uninvited, stepped inside, and closed the door behind her.

"Mr. Buckworth," she began gently.

"I was just going to bed," he interrupted rudely.

"You misunderstood what I told you," she persisted patiently. "I didn't say Marjory was engaged—exactly—"

"No. You merely said it was understood."

"But I didn't mean a man. I meant money."

"Money?" He was entirely puzzled.

"Yes. You see, we have always been so very hard up. Father did not go to seminary as you did—he didn't even go to college. He only gets about as much money now after all these years as you will get at the very start. And it takes so much for his eyes, and the furniture is simply falling to pieces, and you can see yourself we haven't any clothes."

"Yes, I know, Ginger," he said not without sympathy. "But what has that to do with—her?"

"She is so beautiful. So we naturally decided that she had better marry a millionaire. You must admit she's got the looks for it."

"Ginger, what do you mean? Is Marjory engaged, or isn't she?"

"Not engaged—not exactly. But it was all understood—we talked it over and we all agreed—we girls did, that is, father just laughed at us—that Margie should marry money, lots of money, millions—"

"And she's not engaged to that—fat young Andrews—or anybody else—"

"Certainly not. There's no man mixed up in it at all. Just money."

If looks could slay, the career of Ellen Tolliver would have ended at that moment.

"Why, you little devil!" he ejaculated irreverently, and flung her roughly out of his way.

"She's still in the hammock," called Ginger meekly.

Then she went immediately to bed. She wept for a while, softly, for it is natural that youth should abandon its dreams and its expectations of great riches with reluctance. But in the end she smiled, and stiffened her slim little shoulders beneath the white sheets. Very well, then. Plainly the future of the entire household devolved upon her, and her alone.

"Selah," she whispered into the darkness.

CHAPTER IX

A great peace, a sort of subdued grandeur, descended upon the turbulent spirit of Ginger Ella, for she had schooled herself to accept life as it is, and mold it to her own pattern as opportunity came. That the opportunity would never come now, as concerned Marjory, she was well aware, but without resentment. After all, perhaps one had no right to attempt to mold human lives, free souls, like herself. As for Miriam and the grocery clerk, she yet had hopes Alexander Murdock was leaving on this very day, and Ginger did not for a moment believe that the sensible twin was so deeply interested as to disqualify her for interest in more intriguing figures—granted the appearance of such figures.

Get her away—that was the best method. Ginger was adjusting herself to a new impression of the sensible twin. So still she had always seemed, so subtly impenetrable, that in contrast with Marjory's radiance she had appeared more of a liability than anything else. But there was something strange about Miriam. Ginger did not understand it. She remembered how Tub Andrews, even in the gorgeous presence of Marjory arrayed for the beauty pageant, had succumbed to Miriam's stillness. She remembered how Alexander Murdock, a mere grocer, of course, but still no doubt possessive of the usual male inclinations, had passed over Marjory with a passing cordiality, to plant himself immovably at the un-dancing feet of Miriam. Strange about her! Strange about everything, Ginger thought.

"The world," she concluded largely, "it all gone beebee jeebee. The grocers grovel to brains, and the preachers pick beauty. It's all wrong."

But perhaps when the twins found themselves away from the confining familiarities of Red Thrush, away among strangers, at the normal school—with clothes that became girls of their profession, and their looks—clothes paid for from contributions to the home for the blind— But another annoying thought arose to disturb the even tenor of her plans.

At the normal school they would meet only teachers—primary teachers, teachers of geography, teachers of Latin, English and algebra. Ginger sighed. It was unfortunate, but it was the best they could manage this year—what with the operation, and the retirement on pension. Besides, if an embryonic teacher could supplant the can grocer in Miriam's heart, no doubt a little later on, the new conqueror could also be conquered by, say, an embryonic financier. She must hope for the best. As for Marjory—Marjory, whose beauty, and whose married fortune were now forever denied them, why should they, from their limited funds provide the money to send Marjory to normal to study to be a teacher, when she would be no teacher? Why learn pedagogy, when all her future held was the accommodation of her person to missionary societies, and ladies' aids, and the minimum of three?

The finger of relentless logic pointed in another way. Let Marjory prepare herself for keeping a parsonage by keeping a parsonage—their own. She could take Miriam's place as servitor to their father, thus leaving Ginger free for her own further schooling and for the conduct of her favorite charity.

Stonehenge Mystery to Students of the Past

Ancient and mysterious Stonehenge is located some nine miles from Salisbury, and near the little town of Amesbury, in Wiltshire, England. This circular formation of stones encloses what is commonly called the Altar stone. What its origin or purpose is time or research has not revealed, but it is obviously connected with some form of observation of the sun, possibly sun worship. It is generally believed to have been erected some 4,000 years ago, possibly by the tribe from the Continent which brought the idea of cultivation of land to England in the Bronze age. To the east of the Stone circle is the Hele stone or Friar's heel, over which at dawn on June 21—namely, at the summer solstice—the sun rises when viewed from the Altar stone. Other pointed stones mark the rise of the sun at the winter solstice and sunset at midsummer. At few places in England can the thoughts run riot to such an extent as in this circle of immense stones standing in solitude overlooking Salisbury plain. Pictures of human sacrifice and heathen rites spring readily to the imagination.

Record Bone

Some idea of the immense size of prehistoric reptiles can be gathered from the fact that it took sixteen men to lift a bone of one discovered in Africa.

Lesson for February 23

THE TWELVE SENT FORTH

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 9:35-11:1.

GOLDEN TEXT—The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few. Pray ye therefore, the Lord of the harvest that He send forth laborers into His harvest.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus' Helpers at Work.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus' Helpers at Work.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Helping to Win the World for Christ.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Recruiting Christian workers.

I. The Plenteous Harvest (9:35-38).

1. Christ's compassion (v. 36).

As He went on His rounds preaching the gospel of the kingdom, He saw the multitude as sheep having no shepherd.

2. A plenteous harvest and the few laborers (v. 37).

He saw the whole needy world as a ripened field of grain ready to be harvested, with but few who were willing to labor in the harvest field.

3. Pray ye the Lord of the harvest that He will send forth laborers into His harvest (v. 38).

II. The Twelve Sent Forth (ch. 10).

The sending forth of the twelve shows the methods adopted by Jesus Christ in the propagation of the kingdom. It should be clearly borne in mind that this chapter does not outline the policy of the missionary endeavor in this age. In order to show the dispensational aspects of the lesson, the following divisions of the chapter are suggested:

1. Instructions bearing immediately upon the Apostles' work to the death of Christ (vv. 1-15).

In strictness of interpretation these teachings cannot be applied to any later period.

(1) The ministers chosen (vv. 1-4). These twelve humble men were chosen and commissioned to carry on the work of the propagation of the kingdom. These twelve stood in a peculiar relation to Israel. (2) The sphere of their mission (vv. 5, 6). They were only to go to Jews. They had no message for Gentiles, or even Samaritans. After Pentecost this sphere was widened (Luke 24:46-49; Acts 1:8). No such restriction obtains with reference to ministers today. The middle wall of partition was broken down by the death of Christ. (3) Their message (v. 7). By "the kingdom of heaven is at hand" is meant the promised kingdom of Israel was at hand; that Jesus Christ, the promised king, was present and ready to set up His kingdom. After the church is translated, the same message will be taken up for a brief time by the believing remnant (See Acts 15:13-18; Rom. 11 and Rev. 7). (4) The supernatural authentication of their mission (v. 8). They were clothed with power to work miracles. These wonderful works were really done by the twelve. (5) Their maintenance (vv. 9, 10). They were to make no provision for their support, but to depend wholly upon the Lord who sent them. Since they had received the message and power gratuitously, they were to give it out in the same way. (6) Responsibilities of those to whom the message was delivered (vv. 11-15). If the people would not receive them or hear their message, they were to turn from them and pronounce judgment upon them.

2. Instructions concerning testimony from Pentecost onward (vv. 16-23).

After Pentecost, testimony for Christ would be fraught with great danger. Both Jews and Gentiles would assail the messengers with the most bitter persecutions. They were scourged in the synagogues before heathen magistrates. Instead of bringing peace to the homes, they brought divisions of the fiercest kind among families. In their defense they were to rely upon the Holy Spirit to aid them. These conditions were literally fulfilled in the period from Pentecost to the destruction of Jerusalem. Since the fall of Jerusalem, no one has ever been scourged in a synagogue. Verse 23 seems to carry the work forward to the time of the preaching of the gospel of the kingdom in the tribulation time. The Lord's coming then is so speedy, that their testimony is cut short.

3. The teaching applicable in all ages (vv. 24-42).

The disciple has the position of oneness with the master. He is courageously to declare the whole counsel of God, though most violently opposed. Though the testimony result in the most bitter opposition, the messenger should not be surprised or discouraged, for so completely is the Lord identified with His disciples that He accepts treatment of them as treatment of Himself.

The Man Who Prays

The man who prays is putting something into the hands of God that was not there before, and God can do for that man something when he prays that he cannot do unless he prays.—William Douglas Mackenzie.

The Power of the Blood

The power of the Blood avails for the blackest and deepest sins, and no man is beyond the reach of God's mercy till the gates of hell have closed upon him.—Echoes.

"Used in Our Family For Three Generations"

Mrs. Etta Miller

Spencer, Ind. — "I can heartily recommend Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It has been used in our family for three generations. My mother used it in expectant periods, at one time she felt she could never live through the ordeal again so began taking the 'Prescription'; used it right up to the last. Her family physician asked why she was so much better this time than ever before. She told him, and he said, 'It is a good medicine.'

"I have used the 'Prescription' and it keeps me from being so nervous.

Here's Matrimonial Ad in Newspaper of 1771

The art of matrimonial advertising seems to be of old standing, judging from an insertion in the Swedish provincial newspaper, the Carlskrona Veckoblad, of 1771, recently unearthed and reproduced in a Stockholm daily. It is as follows: "The honorable public will not too adversely note the following well-meant advertisement. As it sometimes happens that a pretty and well-to-do girl long passes unnoticed just because of the fact that honorable suitors do not know her fortune, or how much her parents will bestow on her as a wedding gift, it is herewith announced that, now, an honorable girl, twenty-one years of age, rather pretty, mannerly, a la mode and well bred, who, besides, understands cooking, washing, baking, etc., which, no doubt, will be further improved through her intelligence when she, through marrying, gets more practice in household things, possesses in property, real and movable, about 15,000 Silver Dalers, besides which she expects a legacy from her old grandmother. If some decent bachelor, preferably a noble, clergyman or otherwise somehow well-situated man, should speculate, a somewhat more precise address of the girl's guardian can be had at the printing office of this paper. But it is stipulated as a condition that none but gallant cavaliers, well built and of good carriage, take the trouble of offering their names; in the opposite case no further particulars will be given."

How Term "Thirty" Came to Symbolize an Ending

Charles Payne Smith gave the following information in the Typographical Journal regarding the origin of "30" as used by newspaper men and telegraphers: "The first press association organized in Civil war times was composed largely of morning papers published near the eastern seaboard. Each paper sent into the central office items of local interest, which were there edited and telegraphed to all members. It happened that the first message sent to the association totaled 30 words and this figure, with the words 'Good night' and the signature of the sender, was placed at the bottom of the sheet by the operator. At that time piecework was the rule on all papers. The daily grist was usually set up, corrected and in the forms by 10 o'clock, but the compositors were compelled to wait around at their own expense until the foreman announced that '30' was in. So '30' became a byword among printers, symbolising the end."

Curly Maple

The forest service says that the cause of curly maple is not entirely known. It appears to be an accidental phenomenon and it is believed that it is not hereditary. Curly maple is secured from occasional white maple (sugar maple) trees among the stands of white maple trees throughout the Lake states. In the curly maple varieties the bark curls inward, forming a notch or depression. Experienced persons can identify curly maple trees by cutting into the bark. In the curly maple varieties little dimples or depressions will show in the wood. Curly maple can also be identified from the ends of the logs.

REST AND ITS NECESSITY TO LIFE

Dear Mothers:

I want to write to you today about a food that is absolutely free and can be used by everyone—in fact everyone likes it—no one refuses it, tho they may not use as much of it as they should. It is Rest. You never thought of it as a food, did you? Well, it is not really—but yet it is a food saver and the amount we get helps to determine the amount of food we need for a day.

Again let us get back to our engine. Let us think of that train locomotive. When the engineer gets to the end of his run he steps down out of the cab and it is taken to the round house where it is allowed to rest, be oiled, repaired. The managers of the transportation departments know that no machine can run and run without some rest to its parts. The same applies to the human machine. It needs rest and more than the engine.

The engine can cease work altogether but the body cannot. It works while it sleeps. It must have energy to beat the heart, to keep the blood flowing, the food digesting, the lungs expanding and contracting. It must always keep some steam up to care for the living of the body when asleep. So if we slept always, some food would need to be taken. When we sleep, we do not need as much food as when we sit or rest or lie to rest. When we rest we do not need as much as when we run, or play or work.

Rest is most important for the growing child for he is constantly giving off steam in his waking hours and rest is saving his body for growing. To the thin nervous adult, who may say he eats a lot but remains thin, this is all important. Try eating more—it rebuilds nerves and makes the food eaten build efficiently. For the thin nervous child, several rest periods during the day—a sleep—and long night of sleep will help to pad nerves and put on weight.

I cannot close without just a word about the way we sometimes keep the little baby's engine constantly going. Have you ever thought of how tired baby may get being jostled by this one, trotted by that, told to pat a cake for Uncle, to show off for Aunt? Some people think babies are meant for playthings and never think whether they may get tired. We would! We know! So do they! They have all they can do to double their weight in six months, so let us see that kith and kin give them time to rest to do it.

Yours for rest,
EDNA GRABIEL.

World's Highest Paid Radio Personality

1. Hugh Barrett Dobbs accepting his new contract with the Shell Oil Company from E. H. Sanders, Advertising and Sales Promotion Manager. 2. Dobbs, at left, in the broadcasting studio. 3. At home with his wife and daughter. 4. "Dobbsie" with the smile you can hear in his voice.

THE meteoric rise of Hugh Barrett Dobbs, "Dobbsie," conductor of the Shell Happytime, from the Pacific Coast stations of the N. B. C. network every morning 8:00 to 9:00 o'clock, Pacific time, reads like a chapter from "Aladdin's Wonderful Lamp."

Four and a half years ago, Dobbs, an unknown and unheralded personality, walked into the studio of KPO and applied for an audition. The result was an immediate "clicking" and Dobbs began a broadcast known as the Health Exercises period.

Success was so outstanding that he evolved the idea of conducting mythical cruising to the ports of the weary, the shut-ins, the convalescents—carrying to them a shipload of happiness and gloom chasers.

His work attracted the attention of E. H. Sanders, an executive of the Shell Oil Company and one of the West's greatest visioners. He engaged Dobbs to broadcast for the Shell Company.

What he has accomplished with that program needs no special mention He soon earned the recognition of his dialers as the West's greatest radio personality—attesting to this fact over 1,000,000 letters—letters of sincerity—letters of wholehearted approval from the fans of radioland are available to prove this assertion.

The result has brought about Dobbs being signed by the Shell Oil Company to a three-year contract at a yearly figure far exceeding the salary of the President of the United States. From now on Dobbs will devote his entire time to work of the Shell Company, the work which will net him over a quarter of a million dollars, and will give him the distinction of being the world's highest paid radio personality.

And now for the man Dobbs on whom the eyes of the entire radio world are focused. He was born in Kentucky, 1885. Throughout his boyhood life on his father's plantation he learned from the negroes their secret of music. Hand him almost any instrument and "Dobbsie" will extract some kind of tune from it—his is a perfect ear and those wise in the art of music wonder at his ability.

From early childhood he has had a leaning toward good natured, wholesome fun, a fact that caused his discharge from the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis. But Dobbs' youth soon reconciled him to the failure of his Naval career—his bigness of vision and character would not allow him to be downed.

He entered Johns Hopkins Medical School at Baltimore and fitted himself to become an instructor of physical culture, leaving the naval glory of the family to his cousin, Richmond Pearson Hobson, hero of the Merrimac sinking in Santiago Harbor during the Spanish-American War. His father, then a Congressman from the State of Kentucky, aided him by sending him on a world tour.

It is Dobbs who is responsible for the creation of Outdoor Playgrounds for children. After building several of them in New York City, he was called by Judge Ben Lindsay to supervise the building of Denver's playgrounds. This interest in children reveals the side of the man which appeals so strongly to all of us, no matter what our age may be. Laughter, merry fun, and the gift of radiating light-heartedness—that's "DOBBSIE".

WHO IS THE VICTOR?

"A victory for the consumer—that is what papers * * * call the Senate vote to retain the present tariff rate on sugar," says the Literary Digest.

If the sugar tariff was adopted on a political rather than a business basis, it is too early to announce the victor.

Any tariff schedule which discourages production by an American industry is costly to American workers and consumers if it leaves them at the mercy of foreign production and price manipulation.

The dope bucket was surely upset at Hicksville on Wednesday evening in the first half of the Independent basket ball tournament. The dopsters had Defiance, St. Joe and Edgerton teams picked as the probable winners but that is not the way they always go.

In the first game between Defiance and Mark Center, Defiance started out like a whirlwind and romped all over Mark Center in the first half making the first period register 21 to 8 in favor of Defiance. In the second half Mark Center came up from the rear and piled up a lead that the Defiance team could not overcome and the game ended by the score of 38 to 21 in favor of Mark Center.

In the game between the St. Joe Independents and the Payne Merchants the crowd witnessed a good clean game. Payne took the first half by the score 17 to 11. Bishop who played center for St. Joe was able to get the tip off most of the time and the ball was in St. Joe's possession most of the time. St. Joe's failure to make good shots and the small floor was a handicap as they are accustomed to regulation floors. In the second half St. Joe threatened Payne but they came back with five man defence and the game ended with the score reading 36 to 23 in favor of Payne.

In the Hicksville Merchant and Edgerton game fast playing was evident. Hicksville took the lead early in the first half and held it during the half to the score of 17 to 8. In the last half rough stuff developed and the game was some what of a free for all, in which charging, shouldering and tripping were the main features of the game. Hicksville maintained their lead and 35 to 22 was the final count. The remainder of the tournament will be played on Thursday and Friday nights.

Forest Beams of Spencerville was the referee.

On last Friday evening the High School basket ball team was defeated by Waterloo H. S. team in a close interesting game here at St. Joe. Waterloo won the game on St. Joe's fouls and St. Joe's bad breaks in their bad luck on basket shooting. Our team out played the visitors but the whistle on three occasions robbed St. Joe of six points that would have made things look different. Score 24 to 19.

The girls game was won by Waterloo. The prospects for a husky girls team next year is promising. The team is developing better quality of ball and the fans will see a real team next fall.

The junior high teams played the preliminary game at the town team game here Saturday night and showed some classy work on the floor. Here is two teams, as the fans will agree, who are going to give an account of themselves in the future. They are playing good clean scientific games and—well watch these birds.

The high school goes to Fremont on Friday night which winds up the games on the H. S. program for this year, except the tournament. Nothing doing now until the base ball season. Us fans will have to either play bunco or go to Sunday School for a while, or until we hear our 6½ foot base ball umpire call out, Strike! Out side, and then we will be all set again.

The Independents went over to Edgerton and came back with a victory (another.) This was a fast game. The score at the end of the first quarter was 3 to 2 in favor of St. Joe, and at the end of the first half 6 to 5 and the game ended 27 to 18 in St. Joe's favor. The locals have been going some in the last few games. These old has beens have staged a game come back in their old days—from the has beens to the is beens. They are just like wine and cheese—they get better with age.

The Independents will compete at the Basket Ball Tournament at the Huber Opera House on Tuesday evening. St. Joe played their first game against Payne Merchants in the second game of the series and won.

Here's Matrimonial Ad in Newspaper of 1771

The art of matrimonial advertising seems to be of old standing, judging from an insertion in the Swedish provincial newspaper, the Carlskrona Veckoblad, of 1771, recently unearthed and reproduced in a Stockholm daily. It is as follows: "The honorable public will not too adversely note the following well-meant advertisement. As it sometimes happens that a pretty and well-to-do girl long passes unnoticed just because of the fact that honorable suitors do not know her fortune, or how much her parents will bestow on her as a wedding gift, it is herewith announced that, now, an honorable girl, twenty-one years of age, rather pretty, mannerly, a la mode and well bred, who, besides, understands cooking, washing, baking, etc., which, no doubt, will be further improved through her intelligence when she, through marrying, gets more practice in household things, possesses in property, real and movable, about 15,000 Silver Dalers, besides which she expects a legacy from her old grandmother. If some decent bachelor, preferably a noble, clergyman or otherwise somehow well-situated man, should speculate, a somewhat more precise address of the girl's guardian can be had at the printing office of this paper. But it is stipulated as a condition that none but gallant cavaliers, well built and of good carriage, take the trouble of offering their names; in the opposite case no further particulars will be given."

How Term "Thirty" Came to Symbolize an Ending

Charles Payne Smith gave the following information in the Typographical Journal regarding the origin of "30" as used by newspaper men and telegraphers: "The first press association organized in Civil war times was composed largely of morning papers published near the eastern seaboard. Each paper sent into the central office items of local interest, which were there edited and telegraphed to all members. It happened that the first message sent to the association totaled 30 words and this figure, with the words 'Good night' and the signature of the sender, was placed at the bottom of the sheet by the operator. At that time piecework was the rule on all papers. The daily grist was usually set up, corrected and in the forms by 10 o'clock, but the compositors were compelled to wait around at their own expense until the foreman announced that '30' was in. So '30' became a byword among printers, symbolizing the end."

Curly Maple

The forest service says that the cause of curly maple is not entirely known. It appears to be an accidental phenomenon and it is believed that it is not hereditary. Curly maple is secured from occasional white maple (sugar maple) trees among the stands of white maple trees throughout the Lake states. In the curly maple varieties the bark curls inward, forming a notch or depression. Experienced persons can identify curly maple trees by cutting into the bark. In the curly maple varieties little dimples or depressions will show in the wood. Curly maple can also be identified from the ends of the logs.

THE BEST BOOSTER FOR YOUR BUSINESS IN DeKALB COUNTY

ST. JOE NEWS.

NEWS MAKES A GOOD PAPER, SO SEND IT IN TO US.

VOL. XLIV — ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, MARCH 6, 1930 — NUMBER 10

FORMER PASTOR WRITES OLD FRIENDS

Below we reproduce a letter, written by Rev. L. W. Spade, a former Christian pastor of St. Joe, now living at Roseville, Ohio, and sent to Mrs. Wilmot Coburn at Coburn's Corners:—

Roseville, Ohio.
Feb. 18, 1930.

Dear Ones:

Its so long since we lived in your pastorate, one would expect us to have about vanished from the minds of all there. Since we have not, your letter, kind, and heart-warming, is very much welcomed by us.

In searching for us, you made no mistake sending your letter to Roseville, for we are still here, and not so uncomfortable as might be.

The apploplectic stroke of over four years ago seriously disabled wife, badly damaging her sight and memory, so that she cannot sew, paint, read, cook, bake, etc. She sees enough to get into nearest homes, to sweep, make beds and to do the things which can be done by feeling quite as much as by sight. While her sight slowly fails, memory returns little by little, so slowly, though, as hardly to noticeable. Her general health is fair for her. She is slow and clumsy in movements but enjoys so much, as she can do. She has keenly felt her loss, these years, and quietly lamented over it, but she is not cheerless. I keep many current profitable magazines and papers and average over two hours daily reading aloud to her. That helps pass the hours tolerably.

Except Sundays 7:30 A. M. to 9:30 P. M., when I am at Rose Farm with the Church, I am ever at home with her. By supplying her all she'll need while I'm away on Sundays, I can safely leave her alone for the day, especially, as a kind big family in house ten feet from ours keep watch for her as do other nearby good neighbors.

My own health is splendid. I preach twice per Sunday beside teaching in Sunday School and make five to eleven calls on families per Sunday. I preach for poor, very poor, coal miners without salary, which they are too poor to pay, receiving only free will offerings. Living in our own home, with the little laid by in better times to draw on, we come on comfortably. This may suffice in answer to your request that we tell you all about ourselves.

I count you fortunate that Bro. J. N. Scholes can serve you as regular minister most of time, and that one so able as Prof. Rose can supply you in his absence. Both are exceptionally able men.

Thanks for your letter. Not even wife has forgotten all of you there, so convey our good wishes to all. In Christian Love to all in your home and to the Churches.

THANKS CONTRIBUTORS TO CHRISTMAS SEAL FUND

The DeKalb County Anti-Tuberculosis Society wish to extend their grateful appreciation for the splendid returns of the Christmas Seal Sale; to F. B. Leighty, of the St. Joe News, for his publicity; to the business men for financial aid and space in their windows for our beautiful posters, and to each and all who contributed so generously in making the 1929 Seal Sale a real success.

Our campaign of prevention against tuberculosis has cut the death rate from this disease more than one-half. A wonderful progress when the work is financed wholly by the sale of the little penny Christmas Seal.

REDUCTION TO BE MADE IN RURAL CARRIERS

A survey of the rural postal service just completed by the postoffice department has disclosed that about 8,000 rural carriers can be dispensed with.

The recommendation for a reduction in rural carriers results from the fact that these carriers originally had twenty-eight-mile routes when the deliveries were computed on the basis of a horse and buggy service. Since the automobile came into use for rural deliverics, the length of the routes has not as a rule been increased. With a motor car twice that distance can be covered easily and routes are now to be combined. Members of the congress from rural districts are protesting against any rural reduction program.

Arch Coleman, assistant postmaster-general, in charge of the survey, said today that the program of the department will be to take up "wastage." He said the department would do its utmost to prevent dropping employes, but that this necessarily would reduce the work of substitutes, as regular employes would be called on to do more work.

FARMERS TO ESTABLISH BULK OIL PLANT

One hundred fifty farmers of DeKalb County met in the Assembly Room on Friday, February 28 and organized a co-operative Bulk Oil Plant. The forenoon was given over to discussing the Limited Liability Bond that others present had signed. Harry Shull served as Chairman and E. J. Fricke represented the Purchasing Department of the Indiana Farm Bureau. Mr. Fricke explained the bond and answered the questions that the men asked. The meeting was very interesting from start to finish.

After lunch the bond signers from the various townships met by township groups and nominated a man from among their number to act as a director of the co-operative group association from their townsihp. Twelve of the fifteen townships in the county were represented in these group meetings. After the various townships had made their selection they recontinued as a county organization and proceeded with an election. The following men were elected as directors of the newly organized Association: Harvey Guthrie, Butler Township; Ralph Yarde, Keyser Township; Archie Hewitt, Richland Township; Dale Conrad, Fairfield Township; John Dilley, Grant Township; Chas. Ratts, Franklin Township; W. E. Creager, Troy Township; Lester Casebere, Stafford Township; Henry Emme, Wilmington Township; George Hart, Spencer Township; Ben Markins, Concord Township; John Weaver, Jackson Township and Larry Brandon, Union Township. The directors from the odd numbered townships as the Secretary called the roll were voted to serve on the Board of Directors for 1 year. Those from the even numbered townships were to serve on the Board for two years. The Bond signers voted to have four directors at large and they are as follows: Hary Shull, O. M. Foote, Earl Beber and Geo. Strong. It was also decided that since this was to be a well organized business association the Board of Directors should receive a small numeration per day and mileage to help take care of the expenses there would be to attend the Board of Directors Meeting. A uniform set of constitution and by-laws with the necessary amendments was adopted to guide the officers and Board of Directors in running the business. The bond signers meeting then adjourned and the newly elected directors met in executive session. It was in the Directors meeting that the Board of Directors at large were selected The Board of Directors then elected Henry Emme at Butler as president of the Board; Ben Markins of St. Joe, vice president and Larry Brandon of Auburn, secretary. The following executive committee was selected: Harry Shull, Auburn; Archie Hewitt, Corunna; Lester Casebere, Butler and John Dilley, Wateloo. It was also decided by the Board that the officers of the Board of Directors should be officers of the County Farm Bureau.

The Executive Board planned to meet Tuesday and select the site for the Bulk Oil Plant. They may lease or purchase a Bulk Plant that may be for sale or they may secure a site and erect a new plant. The Board will also consider application for a Manager of a Bulk Plant and also truck drivers that will distribute to the farmers of the county.

LADIES LITERARY CLUB ENTERTAINS CULTURE CLUB

The Ladies Liteerary Club very pleasantly entertained the Culture Club at the lovely home of Mrs. Lora Leighty on last Wednesday evening.

A program was prepared consisting of a Welcome by Mrs. Cora Curie; Response, Mrs. Esther Bowman; Piano duet, Mrs. Cora Curie and Mrs. Lora Leighty; Reading of Club Collect by Mrs. Jennie Sechler; Vocal duet, Miss Kathryn Gant and Miss Helen Ditmars; Reading, Mrs. Belle Woodcox; Piano solo, Mrs. Pauline Baumgartner; Address, Mrs. J. S. Brechbill, of Kendallville and another duet by Miss Gant and Miss Ditmars.

The program was all very much enjoyed and especially the address by Mrs. Brechbille, as she had recently made a journey to Africa and related many thrilling incidents about those uncivilized people. She told how thankful we should be to be living in a civilized country as in Africa, they do not think it necessary to educate the women at all and not many men are educated. Mrs. Brechbill also told of her visit in the Holy Land to the cities of Jerusalem and Damascus, which was very interesting to all.

After the program a dainty two-course lunch consisting of casserole chicken, hot rolls, spring salad, pineapple whip, cake and coffee were served at tables centered with an arrangement of gold and white canations.

"The ladies of the Culture Club desire to express their appreciation of the entertainment provided for them by the L. L. C.

"Friendly co-operation spells social progress and the L. L. C. made a good step in just the right way."

In our history of the Coburn's Corners Church, published in The News last week, we unintentionally missed the name of Gustin Flint, of Vincennes, Indiana, who became a member of this church seventy-four years ago, being the oldest on the record book. The Flint family played an important part in the church during and preceding the Civil War period.

CENTRAL GROCERY GOES ON CASH BASIS

There are many reasons why a business man should sell on credit and there are many reasons why a business man should sell for cash, but there are more reasons why a business man should sell for cash. I am not going to discuss the situation at all. I am tired trying to pay bills with my own money wrapped up in other peoples automobiles or invested in mail order houses stock. People have the freedom to buy where they please—but not with Izzy Hursh's money. Cash from now on.

The SANDMAN STORY

ABOUT THE BIG TREES

BILLIE BROWNIE had always wanted to see the big trees of California. Many had been the sights he had seen, many were the trips he had taken.

He had talked to so many creatures, too, and he had heard their stories.

But always he said to himself that one of these fine days he must take a trip to see the big trees of California.

"Well," said Old Mother Nature, "which of the fine days are you going to choose? People say that they will do something or other one of these fine days, and I never know what they mean.

"At least I do not see why they wait so long after saying that.

"They let one after another fine day pass them by without doing what they have said they were going to do.

"So long as they are planning to do such and such a thing one of these fine days why let so many fine days go by without starting?

"There Are Few, If Any, Trees Such as We Are Anywhere."

"Although, of course, I suppose, they have other things to do," Mother Nature continued, "and they like to dream of pleasant times ahead quite awhile before they can make their dreams come true.

"But can't you go any time, Billie Brownie?"

"I can," Billie Brownie said, "and I would love to go as soon as I can.

"How about this very fine day?"

"Good," said Mother Nature, "and you will be able to understand the language of the trees, not only by their rings but by their tree talk."

"They sound as though they were in the jewelry business," laughed Billie Brownie.

So off he went and so that he could see the trees all the sooner he took his little airplane.

At last he stood in a forest of great trees.

Oh, no wonder they called them the big trees! Never had Billie Brownie seen such a forest.

Never had he seen such mighty, mighty trees. Never had he been so thrilled and so excited by the sight of trees.

There they stood, many, many, many trees, and all so magnificently large and strong and handsome.

"Oh, Trees," said Billie Brownie, "you're so beautiful! You are more beautiful than I dreamed you would be, and I always have thought you would be very beautiful.

"I have heard so much of you—but I have heard nothing to tell me half how wonderful you really are.

"You can't imagine what it means to have heard of great big, beautiful trees, and then find they are so much more beautiful than you've been told.

"Mother Nature said you would talk to me, Big Trees."

So one of the oldest and the biggest of the trees spoke to Billie Brownie:

"Yes, we are very big. There are few, if any, trees such as we are anywhere.

"The Blue Gum Trees in far-away Australia, they say, are our only rivals.

"And we're very old, hundreds and hundreds of years old. We've seen so much. We've been through so much.

"Sometimes we have been sick. Fires have given us bruises and wounds. But we act as doctors and nurses to ourselves.

"We fold some of our living tissue over the burnt and wounded part and even though it may take a long time to heal we are patient."

"I heard about your rings," Billie Brownie said.

"Oh, yes," said the Big Tree, "we have rings about our tree bodies to show how old we are. We don't add rings as some ladies might do as they get more money—we add them with our age.

"But, Billie Brownie, we like to have people see us and admire us. It seems a pity at times, that the country is so big. It makes it so hard for people in one part to see the beauties in another."

"All I say," answered Billie Brownie, "is that I hope people all get to see you, Big Trees, some time or other.

"I wouldn't have missed this for anything."

And the Big Trees bowed in a dignified fashion.

For Meditation

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

THE AUTOMOBILE

THE time was when the automobile was regarded only as a luxury. It was one of those things which people could do without but would prefer to possess. The difference between the demand made upon one for necessities and for luxuries is very great. The demand of the latter is about three times the former. In other words, if one were willing to eliminate the luxuries or nonessentials, the budget of expenditures would be reduced about two-thirds. The automobile came in the pleasure class and people would go to almost any extreme measure in order to possess one, even to mortgaging their homes or other belongings.

L. A. Barrett.

Times have changed. The automobile today is regarded more of a necessity than a luxury. Its use has been so commercialized that nearly every business concern depends upon it for delivery purposes. The speed of the age makes such heavy demands upon one's time that an automobile has become necessary to take one to and from the place of daily toil.

A large share of the prosperity of our country depends upon the automobile activity. A recent report of the consumption of steel stated that about one-fifth, or eight million tons, is consumed by automobile industries. It is interesting to note the rise of many automobile accessories concerns which have developed since it has become an economic necessity. Prosperity depends to a large extent upon employment. The automobile industry, according to a recent annual report, gives employment to more than two hundred thousand persons, who must produce the steel. Add to this the very large number of employees who must deliver the other parts and actually build the machines, and we have a total, which has thus far not been authoritatively estimated.

The airplane is still in the experimental stage. How soon will it become an economic necessity?

Country Highways Not Adapted to Speeding

An analysis of highway accidents by the department of motor vehicles of Connecticut appears to show that those in country sections are relatively more costly in loss of life and limb than are those in large cities. It was found that one death could be expected in every forty-one accidents on a country highway. The ratio of deaths to accidents in city streets was 1 to 75.

There is little mystery about this. A considerable proportion of accidents in towns is due to collisions when neither car may be going at great speed. Persons driving in a city naturally expect danger at street intersections and perhaps keep sharper lookout than do those bowling along an open highway. Speeding in a well-policed city is attended by greater risk of arrest than is the case on a rural highway.

Drivers from a city when touring through the country, says the New York Sun, will do well to remember, however, that driving recklessly there is foolish and dangerous, just as driving recklessly in town is foolish and dangerous. Although a clear, well-paved highway offers temptation to step on the gas, the chance of escaping unharmed from an accident is relatively less there than it is on a city boulevard.

Virginia Planning Tree Planting Along Roads

Plans for beautifying the highways of Virginia were discussed at a meeting called by Gov. Harry F. Byrd, at the request of the garden clubs of Virginia, and attended by many prominent women from various sections.

It was decided that the garden clubs would appoint a committee to co-operate with another committee to be appointed by Governor Byrd, and that these two bodies would formulate a program for preserving the trees and shrubs already growing along the state highways, and also for planting others. It was emphasized that the state will not be asked to pay for planting the trees.

William O'Byrne, extension forester at the Virginia polytechnic institute, suggested that nursery shrubs for planting along the highways be raised at the state farm by the convicts, and this proposal met with considerable favor.

Another suggestion which was well received was that the fifty or more motorcycle police operating throughout Virginia under the division of motor vehicles, be especially instructed to keep an eye out for violators of the law forbidding promiscuous cutting of shrubs and trees.

Their Own Will

The will to live as well as local pride is revealed in the purchase by the town of Huntington, in the Berkshire hills of Massachusetts, of the woolen mill upon which the majority of the residents depend for occupation. Closed for sometime, the mill has been bought by the townspeople, who have also raised funds for the purchase of needed equipment. The mill will not be run by the town, but will be leased to a manufacturing company on long terms; an offer is already said to have been made.—Hartford Courant.

Energetic Citizen

In the city of a neighboring state it is said one man has by himself succeeded in locating 16 different industries in his town with a pay roll up into the millions annually. Is there not food for thought in this item when you so often hear the remark made, "we could and should have more industrial plants in our town, but just can't get all the people to unite upon a plan by which we can be able to secure them." A leader and captain of industries is worth while anywhere.—Cullman (Ore.) Tribune.

Unsightly Billboards

The attempt to promote harmony between billboards and civic improvement ideals is a monumental task. The billboard people naturally desire to carry on their business and at the same time they want to soften the growing animosity against their interests. In short, they do not want to see any curtailment of their billboard privileges, while a very large part of the public would like to see billboards entirely eliminated from the landscape.—Providence Journal.

Movies Teach Beauty

To eliminate "the careless ugliness" of the nation's cities, the American Institute of Architects has started a campaign of public education in "good architecture and good environment." Moving pictures are being employed to illustrate how Washington is being developed as the city beautiful in high schools and colleges and before civic bodies.

Individuality

A well-designed building should express on its exterior the general scheme of its plan. That is, the larger units should be indicated in the design. In this way each building has its own individuality and the elevations show the particular reasons for its being.

Plane Fights Malaria

To combat the spread of malaria, paris green dust sprayed from underneath the carriage of a plane, which is able to cover thousands of acres of swamp land in a day, is proving to be the death of mosquito larvae.

The first experiment was conducted by a marine corps airplane in Haiti. According to a report of Samuel W. Honaker, consul at Port-au-Prince, the first trial was entirely satisfactory and areas, which were not liveable, are now cleaned up.

Thrifty Indians

The Seminole Indians of Florida, instead of taking their game to the ice box, are taking the ice box to the game. The redskins of Collier county drive ice-filled trucks into the Everglades hunting grounds and rush their kill to the moving refrigerator, according to Paul C. Albritton, circuit judge of Sarasota county, who found that Indians are one up on their white brethren. By the time a truck is filled another is ready.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

SCISSORS

IN MOST sections of the country scissors falling on the floor and coming open wide—lying in the form of a Greek cross—is considered an omen of dire import. Some even consider it as a prognostic of a death in the family. From ancient times shears—or scissors—have been considered as possessed of more or less mystic qualities, a considerable part of such reputation probably arising from the fact that, being made of iron, they necessarily attached to them the supernatural qualities of that metal. The fact that they could cut, or sever, also gave them, by the homeopathic magic of "like causes like" a potentiality for working evil. With a pair of scissors the ancient magicians worked a charm of black magic against bridegrooms, and with the idea of giving her a dose of her own medicine a witch was branded with a pair of scissors upon the forehead—"above the breath."

Now a pair of scissors open is a pair of scissors prepared for action, ready to work evil magic by cutting or severing. Hence when they fall open of themselves they mean mischief—they are prepared to cut the strands of fortune.

The latter idea is inherited directly from the fact that in Greek mythology Atropos, one of the three fates, severed with a pair of scissors the thread of life which her sisters spun and measured. In Roman mythology it was the same. The cult of the Parcae disappeared amid the ruins of the Roman world; but the scissors of Atropos, lying open upon the kitchen floor, are still capable of giving a farmer's wife the "shivers."

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

"A HOT TIME IN THE OLD TOWN TONIGHT"

THE story is told that this song was so popular with our soldiers during the Spanish-American war that the Spaniards in Cuba were convinced that our national anthem was named "There'll Be a Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight!"

We have an anecdote, too, with regard to its name in Europe at that time. In describing the entrance of the American troops into Manila, after its surrender, a leading Parisian journal related with the utmost gravity that the bands played the two national hymns of the United States. "The Star Spangled Banner" and "There'll Be a Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight," which they translated as "Il fera chaud dans la vielle ville ce soir," literally, "It will be warm in the old city this evening."

It was doubtless because of its frolicsome tune and gay lines that this song achieved the great popularity which made it the best known song during the Spanish-American war. Most of the songs of the day being of the doleful, sentimental ballad type, like "Just Break the News to Mother" and "Good-Bye, Dolly Gray," it is not surprising that the soldiers liked "A Hot Time in the Old Town."

Although it was the fame of the song during the Spanish-American war probably, which gave it its permanent place among American songs, it was not in wartime circumstance that it had its origin; the war rather, fell heir to it. The song had its debut in 1896 with the then famous McIntyre & Heath minstrels, its author being Joe Hayden, a member of the company and the music for it being composed by Theodore A. Metz, the orchestra conductor.

In addition to singing the song, the McIntyre & Heath company rendered it as a march for a year and subsequently the melody was featured by the McNish Johnson & Slavin troupe and the famous George Thatcher minstrels. It was fairly well intrenched as a popular song when the Spanish-American war broke out and the expeditionary troops made it internationally famous, putting it for a time in a class with "The Star-Spangled Banner."

TREE-RING CALENDAR

View of Pueblo Bonito, New Mexico.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

IN THE isolated Indian pueblos of New Mexico and Arizona during the past six years scientists have been gathering data that have been made it possible for them to write one of the most fascinating detective stories of science that has been unfolded since scholars deciphered the famous Rosetta Stone of Egypt. The work, carried on by Neil M. Judd and Dr. Andrew E. Douglass under the auspices of the National Geographic society, has involved the collection of thousands of samples of wood of living trees and of beams from ruined Indian villages so that the tree rings—"the fingerprints of time"—could be studied and compared. As a result of this work a unique tree-ring calendar has been constructed which extends known dates in the New World back to a time more than eight centuries before the arrival of the Spaniards in what is now southwestern United States.

By translating the story told by the tree rings laid down during the past twelve and a quarter centuries the scientists have established a chronology for that period more accurate than if human hands had written down the major events as they occurred.

It is now possible definitely to announce the important dates in the history of Pueblo Bonito, oldest and largest of the great Indian communities, in Chaco Canyon, New Mexico, excavated and partially reconstructed by the National Geographic society.

Furthermore, it is possible now to date nearly forty prehistoric ruins in the Southwest and reconstruct there a succession of major events through which Indian settlements rose, passed their heyday, and disappeared.

Just as the far-famed Rosetta Stone provided the key to the written mysteries of ancient Egypt, so the collection of an unbroken series of tree rings has made clear the chronology of the Southwest.

Through this work we have learned of some outstanding events in America which were contemporaneous with the conquest of Spain by the Moors, and we know that certain Pueblo Indian settlements were enjoying their golden ages when William the Conquerer faced Harold the Saxon at the Battle of Hastings.

These researches have carried the calendar back to A. D. 700 in the Southwest, and they have provided the beginnings of a continuous weather chart for 1,200 years.

Tree Rings Tell Much.

Many a prehistoric jewel has been given to the flames unwittingly because no one knew the importance of tree rings in recording the passage of years. Where fuel was scarce, fragments of precious timbers at many an ancient ruin in the American Southwest have been used as firewood by the sheep-herder, prospector, and even archeologist. They were scraps of wood, nothing more. The Bible story of the stone which the builders rejected, but which became the head stone of the corner, has found a counterpart in the wood that the modern searcher overlooked, for it has become a key to prehistoric chronology.

Through long-past ages and with unbroken regularity, trees have jotted down a record at the close of each fading year—a memorandum as to how they passed the time; whether enriched by added rainfall or injured by lightning and fire. By learning how to read these records—specifically those of the pines—we have discovered a magic key to open mysterious books and interpret the meaning of their writings.

In favorable regions, rings in trees may be identified, each one in its appropriate year, and traced back till we get to the utmost reach of living trees, and then beams from ancient ruins and buried logs carry the story back for many more centuries.

Thus these tree records have provided us with an American calendar reaching beyond the rise of Charles Martel or the Mohammedan invasion of India. Some of these trees were cut a thousand years ago. From them we have learned the exact building dates of major ruins of the southwestern United States as definitely as we have been able to fix the dates of Old World monuments of the ancients whose records are inscribed on stone.

Seen from one angle, the assembling of these tree-ring samples pushes back the bounds of history in our Southwest and gives us human activities—even tragedies—among the native inhabitants for hundreds of years. From another angle this history in trees tells us the climatic story of the Southwest with amazing accuracy.

When a real theory of climate has been developed and we can predict drought and flood over a period of years, this Arizona story in tree rings will have played a creditable part in developing that climatic foresight which is perhaps the most valuable economic advantage yet lying beyond our reach.

Reading the Records.

The method used in extending the historical calendar of the Southwest is the outcome of a long attempt to read the diaries of trees. Every year the trees in our forests show the swing of Time's pendulum and put down a mark. They are chronographs, recording clocks, by which the succeeding seasons are set down through definite imprints. Every year each pine adds a layer of new wood over its entire living surface of trunk and branches.

If every year were exactly the same, growth rings would tell the age of the tree and little more. Only in rare cases would they record exceptional events of any interest to us. But a tree is not a mechanical robot; it is a living thing, and its food supply and adventures through life all enter into its diary. A flash of lightning, a forest fire, insect pests or a failing neighbor may make strong impressions on its life and go into its diary.

But in the arid regions of our Southwest, where trees are few and other vegetation scarce, the most important thing to man and trees is rainfall. So, in the rings of the talkative pines we find lean years and fat years recorded. The same succession of drought and plenty appears throughout the forest. This fact helped vastly in the dating work, for certain sequences of years become easily recognized from tree to tree, county to county, even from state to state.

The development of this tree-ring study presents an example of how a scientific research starting with a definite idea may lead into unforeseen channels. Originally Doctor Douglass' work was a study of sun spots. It is known that there is a periodicity in their occurrence; they are most numerous at intervals of eleven years. As an aid in that astronomical investigation, he studied trees, for solar changes affect our weather, and weather in turn affects the trees in Arizona's dry climate, as elsewhere.

Sun Spots and Tree Rings.

The study of sun spots and their influence upon weather and the consequent effect upon vegetation as recorded by tree rings progressed most successfully. The first confirmation of the general interpretation of a relationship between tree rings and sun-spot periods came in a dramatic way.

Evidence of the eleven-year sun-spot cycle had been easily found in Arizona pine trees. The regularly recurring periods had been recorded for 500 years by tree rings, except for the interval from 1650-1725. During that 75 years the tree rings gave no evidence of periodical changes in the weather such as were to be expected.

Several years after this puzzling fact had been encountered the late Dr. E. Walter Maunder, an eminent English astronomer, unaware of the findings, wrote to Doctor Douglass that he had discovered that there were no sun spots between 1645 and 1715, and that if the tree rings did not indicate some effect of this absence of sun spots, the work was being conducted on an erroneous hypothesis.

The coincidence between the failure of Arizona trees to register any sun-spot effect upon the weather during those years, and establishment of the fact, by entirely independent study, that the customary sun-spot cycle did not occur during approximately the same period of years helped confirm the relationship between the growth of trees and solar changes.

Specifically, the tree-ring calendar, as finally worked out, told these things about Pueblo Bonito, the ruin whose date problem brought about the six years' search: Its earliest recovered beam was cut in A. D. 919 from a tree that was 219 years old when cut; and Pueblo Bonito reached its golden age in 1067 and was still occupied in 1127. Not only has the age of this great one time metropolis of the Southwest been fixed, but the tree-ring calendar has also dated some 40 other ruins whose time of occupancy hitherto had been unknown. Important among these is the Mesa Verde group of Colorado, in which Cliff Palace is dated 1073; Oak Tree House, 1112; Spring House, 1115; Balcony House, 1190-1206; Square Tower House, 1204, and Spruce Tree House, 1216 and 1262.

The KITCHEN CABINET

(©, 1930, Western Newspaper Union.)

"How vast and profound is the influence of the subtile powders of heaven and earth. We seek to perceive them, and we do not see them, we seek to hear them and we do not hear them: identified with the substance of things, they cannot be separated from them."

CODFISH WAYS

One way of serving codfish, which is usually very popular, is with baked potatoes. The codfish is parboiled, broken into small pieces and added to a drawn butter sauce, or a rich white sauce, or simply plenty of butter added and served hot with the potatoes.

As fish balls, there is nothing better for breakfast or a luncheon dish.

Parboil in a large piece, drain and lay in melted butter and baste it while heating either on the range or in the oven. Serve when the butter has been well soaked in.

Scalloped Cod.—Flake one and one-half cupfuls of soaked codfish, or the fresh may be used if available. Chop one onion, one green and one red pepper, removing the seeds and white fiber, a tablespoonful of chopped capers or green pickle. Arrange the codfish in layers with the peppers and cover the whole with a half cupful of buttered crumbs. Bake, adding one and three-fourths cupfuls of white sauce with the codfish, before the crumbs are added.

Codfish Souffle.—Take two cupfuls of mashed potatoes, one cupful of shredded codfish, two beaten eggs (separate the whites and yolks), add one-half of a green pepper diced, one-half of an onion chopped fine, and two tablespoonfuls of melted butter. Mix all of the ingredients, adding salt and pepper and fold in the stiffly beaten egg whites at the last. Bake in a buttered baking dish in a moderate oven. The onion and pepper may be cooked in the butter, then added to the fish and egg yolks. Serve with string beans, green peas or onions.

Codfish Pie.—Put a layer of nicely seasoned mashed potato in a well buttered baking dish, cover with a layer of codfish which has been parboiled and cover with plenty of butter. Cover with another layer of potato, brush with egg and milk and bake in a hot oven until the potato is well browned on top. Serve from the dish with cabbage cole slaw, using vinegar enough to make the dish snappy in flavor.

Good Things We All Enjoy.

At this season of the year when we enjoy pork roasts, chops and spareribs, try this:

Roast Stuffed Spareribs.—Rub the outside of the spareribs with seasoned flour and stuff with the following:

Onion Stuffing.—Take one pint of bread crumbs, one cupful of corn meal, one chopped onion, one tart apple also chopped, one-fourth of a cupful of chopped celery, two tablespoonfuls of butter and salt and pepper to taste. Mix with hot milk to moisten. Place in the spareribs and roll. Bake as usual.

Spanish Beans.—Soak a pint of navy beans over night, cook in the same water until the skins slip off easily. Turn into a bean pot or casserole and add one onion, one cupful of tomato, one small green pepper, one pimento, three tablespoonfuls of molasses, one teaspoonful of mustard and one-half cupful of pork cut into small dice. Cut the vegetables into dice and bake as usual.

English Chicken Salad.—To one five-pound fowl add a tablespoonful of salt, herbs tied in a small cloth, using two sprigs of thyme, one of marjoram, a bay leaf, two sprigs of parsley. Simmer until the fowl is tender. One-half hour before it is done add one-half pound of bacon cut into bits. Remove the largest bones from the fowl and arrange a layer in a baking dish, cover with one-half pound of mushrooms that have been sauted in butter five minutes, or use the chicken fat; add hard cooked eggs, using three cut into slices. Continue until the dish is full. Add three cupfuls of the chicken broth which has been slightly thickened by cooking with flour. Cover with flaky pastry in triangles, bake until well browned. Season well before adding the pastry and if wanted especially good add some rich cream and less broth.

Hot Toasted Cranberry Sandwiches.—Broil cold boiled ham in a hot frying pan, lay on buttered toast, cover with hot cranberry sauce and sprinkle with chopped cheese. Garnish with parsley and serve.

Cranberry jelly seems to puzzle many cooks to get it just right. If the directions are carefully followed good results will always be obtained. Cook four cupfuls of cranberries in one cupful of boiling water twenty minutes, put through a sieve and add two cupfuls of sugar; cook five minutes, stirring well. Pour into molds and chill.

Curly leaf dock, field sorrel and horseradish cooked together, make an especially good dish of greens.

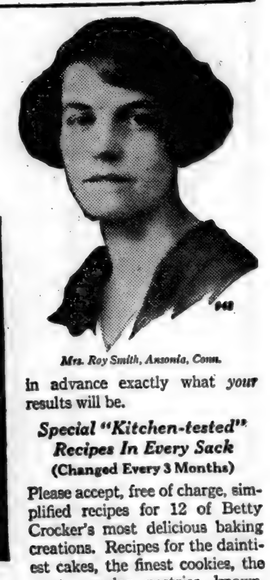
"I Could Never Get Along without 'KITCHEN-TESTED' Flour"

Mrs. Roy Smith Declares This New-Type Flour Banishes Baking Failures and Worry



Mrs. Roy Smith, Ansonia, Conn.

"I could never get along without GOLD MEDAL 'Kitchen-tested' Flour," says Mrs. Smith. "When I use this new-type flour there's nothing to worry about, no matter what I make. I am sure that one who uses it need never worry about losing her husband if the old saying is true that, 'The way to a man's heart is through his stomach'."

Baking Failures and Worry Are Now Banished Forever

NOW when women bake they are always sure of perfect results—no watching, waiting and worrying until bread or pastry comes out of the oven.

They use a new-type flour for all baking purposes—GOLD MEDAL "Kitchen-tested" Flour—that simplifies baking remarkably and banishes the cause of most baking failures.

Failures, experts found, were mostly due to the fact that 2 sacks of the same flour often acted differently, even with the same recipe... it was not uniform in oven action.

So now all GOLD MEDAL Flour is 'Kitchen-tested' before it comes to you. As each batch comes through the mill it is tested by actual baking—bread, cakes, biscuits, pastries—in an oven just like yours. Only flour which acts the same perfect way every time is allowed to go out to you. Thus you know in advance exactly what your results will be.

(Changed Every 3 Months)

Please accept, free of charge, simplified recipes for 12 of Betty Crocker's most delicious baking creations. Recipes for the daintiest cakes, the finest cookies, the most popular pastries known. Each one is "simplified" until it is remarkably easy, too.

Evidently His First

In the jumble of Pittsburgh traffic an excited chap suddenly jumped from his car, which he left blockading everything, and while startled pedestrians stopped to stare, ran up to a passing street car, and rapped frantically on a window. The man in the car turned his head. "A boy!" the maniac in the street yelled joyfully, trailing the car, indifferent to danger. "Eight pounds and fourteen ounces!"

The things that are really for thee gravitate to thee.

ONE PRESCRIPTION MADE FAMILY DOCTOR FAMOUS

Seldom has any single act been of greater benefit to mankind than that of Dr. Caldwell in 1885, when he wrote the prescription which has carried his fame to the four corners of the earth.

Over and over, Dr. Caldwell wrote the prescription as he found men, women and children suffering from those common symptoms of constipation, such as coated tongue, bad breath, headaches, gas, nausea, biliousness, no energy, lack of appetite, and similar things.

Demand for this prescription grew so fast, because of the pleasant, quick way it relieved such symptoms of constipation, that by 1888 Dr. Caldwell was forced to have it put up ready for use. Today, Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, as it is called, is always ready at any drugstore.

Waltzing Mice Help in Work of Mine Rescues

The rescue squads of the mining districts are often compelled to enter mines where the air is likely to be charged with gas that would make it impossible for human life, but the presence of this gas is not apparent to the nose. In order to protect themselves it has been the custom for these men to carry a canary bird along with surgical supplies, foods, tools and oxygen apparatus, because the bird is quickly affected by even a small amount of gas and invariably warned the rescue workers of the fatal and invisible fumes.

In the future, however, Japanese waltzing mice will replace the little yellow songsters, because experiments have shown that the curiously behaving rodents from the Orient are much more sensitive to deadly gas than canaries are. In addition to this the mice are hardier and are not often fatally stricken by their experience, whereas the birds are usually sacrificed. They do not recover from the effect of the gas.

Weights Weighty Problem

Officials of the Melbourne royal show at Melbourne, Australia, recently were confronted with what they considered to be a difficult scientific problem. They noticed that when 24 pounds of milk were taken from a cow which had been previously weighed the bossy had lost only 18 pounds. The secretary of the Royal Agricultural society weighed himself carefully, then drank one pound of water. He was astonished to find that he had gained only 10 ounces in weight. The test was made before council stewards and Dr. H. McKenna, the surgeon to the Royal Agricultural society.

Too Shy to Wed

Situated in the lovely fruit-growing district of the Cornish valley of the Tamar, Landulph is said to be the shyest village in England. The young folk there are so nervous of one another that there has been but one marriage at the ancient parish church within the past five years. According to the rector, the young men think more about playing cricket than they do courting. A church warden is optimistic enough to believe that romance will return to the village in due course.

Lutherans Third in Size

The Lutheran church's estimated world membership is 81,000,000 souls. It is third in size to the Roman Catholic church (estimated worldwide membership, 331,500,000; Orthodox Eastern church, 144,000,000) among all Christian denominations.—Time, the Newsmagazine.

Many Do

"How can an old lady get any attention these days?"

"Have a pretty girl with her."

Profit in Gardens

When farmers ignore the possibilities of a garden they are overlooking one of the most profitable factors in their field, the Farm Journal points out. An intensively cultivated garden of one acre will produce $1,500 worth of commodities in a year, while a good yield from an acre of corn is worth about $60.

Girlhood

The trying time in a young girl's life is reached when Nature leads her uncertain steps across the line which divides girlhood and womanhood. Neglect at this critical period is largely responsible for much of the misery of women. Often there is need of some safe, strengthening tonic to overcome the languor, nervousness and distress girls commonly experience at this time. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription soothes the nerves, encourages the appetite and helps the entire womanly organism. It is purely herbal—contains no narcotic, nor any harmful ingredient. Druggists. Much complaint is beng made now days regarding the price of cream having dropped to such an extent that it hardly pays for the labor and feed. Many solutions have been offered, but the best one we have heard is where the old cow takes a hand. I. G. WHEN CLUBS GET TOGETHER

Mrs. Editor:—

No one ought to apologise for doing or saying the right thing, at the right time, in the right clime, to the right person, in the right spirit, and for the right cause, in the right community, with the right motive and to the right people. ALRIGHT! That's alright. Right is right. In fact, when we view life closely, Right is all that is left. And what is left, oft times, seems to be alright.

Things out of the ordinary always get the attention of the world and always draw comments, favorable or unfavorable, according to who is doing the attending and the commenting. But the right–ness and the wrong–ness of anything is determined by the motive in view. Therefore, when friendship is used as a motive of action in some particular activity, praise and commendation should be used in recognition of its right–ness.

We have in mind the reception given in honor of the Ladies Culture Club by the Ladies Literary Club at the home of Ye Editor's wife on last Wednesday evening. This event, while it was nothing to excite exceptional editorial comment, did display a brand of friendship and broad mindedness rarely seen in social life, especially where there is any social competition as to membership, prestige, and functions. In other words, the event was unusual. Now where praise enters in, in doing the unusual, is where the golden rule is used where it is not to be expected and where it had never been used before. The banquet was a success from the moral, literary, cultural, and social standpoint, marking a time when organizations of this kind can really operate on a real friendly basis and at the same time live up to the name under which they are known to the world, Real friendship and brotherhood and sisterhood are the baneful needs of the times. You are to be commended for your open mindedness and neighborliness and for the free use of both culture and literary.

Will some good old soul please write to us thru these public opinion columns just what would happen if "Churches churched together?" By churching together, we mean maintaining their own denominations intact but having a friendly relation among themselves—going to the other church occasionally and acting real human and christian.

Anti-grouch.

NEWSPAPER IDEALS SUGGESTED BY READERS

Every newspaper publisher wants his newspaper to be the best. The difficulty is in the differences of opinion as to what constitutes the best newspaper. An editor asked his readers how he could make his paper ideal, with this result:

"Cut out the crimes, the murders, the sensational divorce case reports," said the nice people.

"Cut out the accidents, the railway and steamship disasters," said the people who "couldn't bear" to read such things.

"Cut out the politics," said the old-fashioned woman. "I don't understand it and haven't time for it."

"Cut out the so-called funny pictures," said the careful mother. "Such pictures aren't funny, and they're bad, very bad, for children."

Cut out ponderous editorials," snapped the man who merely scans the headlines. "Nobody reads 'em nowadays."

"Cut out the woman's page," said the female with the strong mind. "It's mushy, trashy, trivial; an insult to our sex."

"Cut out sports and theatres," said the intellectual. "Both are bad influences, and both have received altogether too much notice."

"Cut out—," began another and still another, but the publisher bent them to it.

"Stop, all of you," he cried. "On second thought, I have decided to cut out myself. It is no use trying to publish the ideal paper until I come across the ideal reador."

Without readers no newspaper can live, and until humanity has come to live an ideal life there will be no ideal newspaper; for nobody would read one that spoke only of virtue and never of evil. Newspapers are published to print the news; the nature of the news is what people make it.

TO BAN 18,000 UNFIT CARS IN HOOSIER-BLUEGRASS AREA

Removal of 18,000 unsafe cars from the Hoosier-Bluegrass highways is indicated in the national Highway Saftey Plan which is being undertaken by various companies in the automobile industry, as announced by the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce. The program will involve the expenditure of approximately $675,000 in Indiana and Kentucky. Nationally, the motor companies plan to scrap 400,000 old automobiles in 1930, at a cost of about $15,000,000. It is estimated that 12,440 unfit cars will be retired in Indiana during the coming year, and 5,450 in the bluegrass state.

The program is characterized as "perhaps the greatest single safety move in industrial history," by Alvan Macauley, president of the Automobile Chamber, and former chairman of its Street Traffic Committee.

"This widespread experiment will strike right at the heart of the unsafe vehicle problem by eliminating a huge block of those cars which are in the poorest condition," says Mr. Macauley.

"The rattle-trap car is only one factor in the accident difficulty. Unsafe, incompetent, and reckless drivers, as well as reckless pedestrians, cause a large propotion of the accidents. Blind curves and other highway defects are also to blame. The industry hopes, however, that this drive for the extermination of unsafe cars will set a standard of action which will be helpful to the entire situation."

One of the hazards of the highway situation has been the rattle-trap car which keeps re-appearing on the road after it has presumably been sent to the discard. The aim of this program is to guarantee the actual scrapping of the vehicle. The plan will be worked out by each company participating, in line with its general sales policies and the volume of its production.

R. H. Grant is chairman of the Committee which worked out the details of the program. Other members include: C. H. Bliss, J. E. Fields, Paul G. Hoffman, H. W. Peters, Courtney Johnson, Edward S. Jordan.

Wind is a Close Second to Fire

In destuction and damage to property, high winds are almost as culpable as fire. A wind need not be of tornado force to do serious damage; nor is wind damage a hazard peculiar to any section of the country. Exceedingly high and dangerous wind movements have occurred in almost every section of the country and history will undoubtedly repeat itself. Windstorm Insurance is very moderate in cost.

'Twixt Hawk and Handsaw

By BARBARA KERR

(Copyright.)

SHE was clad in unionalls, wore a corduroy cap drawn down to her ears and was sawing away in a most workmanlike manner, taking a fraction of an inch off Mrs. Marvin's bathroom door, which had always refused to shut properly. And she was whistling.

The Marvins, mother and daughter Caroline, lived at the edge of town and as they took care of their car resorted to unionalls frequently, but, as Lawrence Sinclair made mental note, they did not whistle. He knew it was not Caroline; moreover, he knew exactly that it was Jane Bancroft. She had taken manual training at school and could handle tools. Knowing this Mrs. Marvin asked her to fix the door when she had run in for a visit to Caroline.

She was working on it when the Sinclair lumber truck drove up and Lawrence alighted. Pretending not to notice who it was, he said:

"Please ask your mother where I shall put the lumber."

"My mother doesn't care, Mr. Sinclair, so perhaps you better ask Mrs. Marvin."

Lawrence in passing struck his foot against one of her tools. "Beg pardon! What was that?"

"Oh, that's a jack plane. When you grow up to be a big man you may learn the difference, perhaps, 'twixt a hawk and a handsaw."

Further amenities were saved by Mrs. Marvin's appearance. She walked down the yard, showed him where to put the lumber, lingering a moment to observe: "Queer what tomboyish tastes that girl has! Now, my Caroline is so different, so refined."

Lawrence Sinclair was the greatest catch in the set in which Caroline and Jane moved. Jane thought he knew this too well. Lawrence, surprised at Mrs. Marvin's remark, knew what to attribute it to and answered: "Seems to know how to fix your door, though, Mrs. Marvin."

Lawrence felt that Jane was hearing the rude conversation and he was ashamed. He would have halted a moment as he passed her, but Jane whistled a bit louder and squinted along the edge of the door to see if it were true, but would not look his way.

Angrily he climbed into his seat and drove off.

Jane finished her job and said crisply to Caroline: "Your mother doesn't think much of my talents, but the door shuts."

Caroline had some inkling of what had transpired. She had seen the two playing at cross-purposes before. "I'm not such a fool as mother might make me out, Jane," she said, as she slipped an arm through her friend's to walk with her a short distance. "Besides, that secret I wanted to tell you, is: I'm engaged to Harry Belknap, so she need not bother in the least about Lawrence."

Jane's good humor restored, she went her way.

The next day she read that Sinclair Lumber company wanted a bookkeeper.

She went direct to Mr. Sinclair, Sr., who, though surprised, noted with admiration her business-like manner. "But isn't a lumber yard a rather queer place for a young lady who doesn't know the difference—"

"Oh, but I do. I know what you were going to say, and I do know the difference 'twixt a hawk and a handsaw, and I know a lot about woods and your business—"

"All right; go in there and bring me some oak, pine and walnut—"

"Needn't leave the room to show you." And Jane took a small knife from her pocket and scratched a bit of paint from a file of pigeonholes. "This desk has a thin veneer of walnut, a soft pine lining, and that chair bottom is oak which is sawed the wrong way."

"You win!" smiled Mr. Sinclair. "But why this sort of work?"

She explained that it was her ambition some day to own and operate a shop for repairing, refinishing and duplicating antique pieces. She was so enthusiastic that Mr. Sinclair was moved to ask:

"Do you suppose such a shop could be run in conjunction with a lumber yard?" Jane beamed. "Oh, Mr. Sinclair, I'm sure it could, and I've a lot of other ideas, too."

"Save 'em and report to me in a month," he urged.

So Jane's dream became a reality, and she was happy, till one day her employer said that his son, Lawrence, wanted to go into the antique department.

"Then you'll not need me," her white lips commented.

"Couldn't run without you!" exclaimed Mr. Sinclair. But Jane was not convinced until two days after she had a caller—Lawrence Sinclair.

"Father sent me to see how you were and to ask if you'd take me in your department. If not, I'm out of a job," he pleaded. "He says you're the only girl he ever knew who always knows the difference 'twixt hawk and handsaw."

"Is—is this a business proposition?" stammered Jane.

"Surest thing you know! I'm pleading for a life job. I might not have been so hasty, but your white face upset me entirely," and Lawrence took the old-time lover's method for coaxing the color back to the dainty white cheeks.

The many advantages of the new fuel include lightness, power, quick starting in any weather and the absence of poisonous monoxide gas in the exhaust.

FATALITIES ARE NOW ON DECLINE

Decrease in Death of Children Ascribed to Safety Education.

Chicago police department statistics just made public show that 166 children under fifteen years of age were killed in motor accidents last year in Chicago, as compared with 207 in 1928, according to a statement issued by the accident prevention department of the Chicago Motor club.

Adult fatalities, likewise, were sharply reduced in 1929. The total deaths were 637, as compared with 710 in 1928.

Child Fatalities.

Charles M. Hayes, president of the motor club, ascribed the decrease in child fatalities to the safety education which is now a part of the regular curriculum in most public, parochial and Lutheran schools, and to the efficient operation of the school boys' safety patrols.

"This form of instruction has been in progress for several years, and its benefits are now being reflected in the accident statistics," declared Mr. Hayes. "Early impressions last, in a large degree, through life, and when the fundamentals of safety are stressed to little children we may expect them to walk more carefully during childhood and even to be more careful drivers when they have grown up than the present generation.

Boys' Patrol.

"Great credit is due the members of the school boys' patrol. Those boys, standing at intersections near schools in rain, snow and cold, are selected for their qualities of leadership, and assist their younger classmates across streets during lulls in the traffic. They have made it possible for hundreds of policemen to be relieved of such assignments and thus available for the more serious but no less important task of preventing crime and catching criminals."

Oil Filter Saves Wear on Engine Piston Rings

An interesting test, conducted by the California agricultural experiment station with a view to determining the work done by oil filters used on motor car engines, is described in the S. A. E. Journal by Prof. A. H. Hoffman. Two cars, a roadster with delivery body and a coach, were used, the filter being bypassed on the roadster but left to function on the coach. The principal wearing engine parts of both cars were measured and, where feasible, weighed before the test.

After each car had been run about 10,000 miles of approximately equivalent use, the machines were sent in and remeasured. The average wear on the piston rings as determined by loss of weight was approximately twice as much on the machine without the filter. The wear on pistons, cylinders, wristpins, crankpins and crankpin bearings was too slight to justify the drawing of any conclusions.

Wet Leaves on Streets Are Menace to Motorist

Wet leaves on asphalt streets and hoar frost on the boulevard spell disaster to the unwary motorist.

"Streets and highways were not always as smooth as they are today," W. J. Cahill, president of the General Tire company of Philadelphia, said recently. "Consequently, smooth-surfaced or worn tires, were not always the menace they are today.

"More automobile accidents are caused in cities by unreliable, smooth-tread tires than by bad brakes.

"With winter hurrying along, careful motorists everywhere are now discarding their dangerous, worn tires, with smooth treads and are replacing them with safe new tires, with deep non-skid treads that grip and hold to the road."

THE MOTOR QUIZ

How Many Can You Answer?

Q. What is believed to be the world's speed record for motor cycles and by whom and where was it established?

Ans. Ernest Henne drove a motor cycle over a one kilometer course at Munich recently at an average speed of 134.4 miles an hour.

Q. What devices prolong engine life and how?

Ans. The air cleaner by removing dust and dirt before it reaches the carburetor; the oil filter by removing sludge, dirt and other foreign matter from the oil.

Q. What is meant by gear ratio?

Ans. The ratio between the speed of the engine and that of the rear wheels. Thus if the gear ratio is described as 5 to 1 it indicates that for one revolution of the rear wheels the engine turns five, and so on.

Q. When was the first arrest made for reckless driving in a self-propelled vehicle?

Ans. In 1769, more than 150 years ago, Nicholas Cugnot, a Frenchman, appeared in a racy affair of his own construction and was arrested for speeding at three miles an hour. He was able to attain this speed when the wind was in his favor.

Clearing Windshield Is Easily Done in Winter

A constant stream of warm air can be directed against the windshield to prevent fogging and frosting. Raise the rear edge of the engine hood on each side enough to insert a small block of wood. This will produce an opening along the top rear edge of the hood through which heated air from the engine flows and strikes the glass. If trouble is experienced with rattling, an extra block of wood of the right size should be placed directly under the edge of the hood near the hinge. Experience will show what size block to use for best results.—Popular Science Monthly.

"Certainly not. It wouldn't look well. He knows there's quite a family of you, so it would be too pointed just to throw him headlong at Marjory's complexion, as you might say. No, you'd better have Miriam on hand, too."

Ginger leaped to her plans with young enthusiasm. "Now, we must rush the thing through with a lot of snap," she cried. "Sweep him right off his feet—and sweep Margie off too. For you know— Wait till I see if anybody's around! You know, Eddy, she's awfully gone on— You know who— Preacher! Wait, till I close the door! Yes, he's nice, but he can console himself with Miriam. Such a sensible girl ought to be a great consolation to religion."

Eddy's invitation for them to come out to Pay Dirt for dinner at the farm she negatived after a moment's consideration.

"No. Too prosaic. Your mother is so practical. She and Miriam would be sure to talk of canning fruit, or frying chickens, or what not. No, you bring him here. I don't know how in the world I'll get rid of Hiram, but I will. I'll get rid of father, too, for he'd be sure to give it away, he's so honest. Make it rather late—the furniture doesn't show up so well—I mean so badly—when it is dark. Come for dinner, but not too early. Come in the gloaming."

"All right. What time is the gloaming?" asked Eddy.

Ginger hung up the receiver. Then she went straight to the attic. This was opportunity tapping at their door. Tapping? Why, it was fairly screaming for admittance. A cool million—Eddy was right—hot million would be better, a fiery million, a boiling million, a skyrocket million. She unlocked the doll's trunk. The precious cache had been rifled often, and pretty thoroughly, in the last three weeks, but a steady stream trickled into it every day. And this was to be an event in the lives of every one of them, a thing to remember forever, as long as they lived.

Ginger, with that springing imagination of hers, could already see Marjory, with softly silvered hair and the delicate rose flush of old age on her peach-bloom cheeks, recounting to the grandchildren clustered at her knee—beautiful children, all with golden curls and dimpled elbows, and all about the same size, clustered together like the cherubs in old religious paintings—"and this party was planned and paid for, for my sake, by my dear little sister Ginger Ella. And there I met—"

She filled her shabby purse with money, all dimes, and went down town. There was buying to be done, much buying. But there was one small detail that required her first attention. At the dry-goods store she went into the private office of the president, to pay her Methodist respects to Joplin Westbury.

"Hello, how's everybody?" he greeted her cheerfully.

"Oh, just fine, thanks. Father's getting a double chin. The twins are fine, too. They go to college in just ten days now. I'm fine, too."

"How's our young preacher?"

"I don't know. I don't see much of him. I think he's blue—or lonesome, or something. You see, he feels that he's sort of out of things, because he's not a regular preacher. I dare say he thinks the members sort of snub him on that account, and leave him out of their church talk, and all."

"Why, that's too bad. I suppose he doesn't want to intrude—with your father there, and all. We like him first-rate."

"But you never do have him come to your house to talk church—the way you used to do with father, do you?"

"Well, you tell him to come around and see me. Tell him I especially asked for him. I'll pretend he's been neglecting me, and put it off on him. You tell him I want to know why he never comes around to talk church!"

"When? Tonight?"

"Well—yes. Tonight."

"He'll be pleased," said Ginger gently. "He's so young. He just loves to go about with father, and hobnob with the old pillars, and feel you are all salt of the earth together."

"Maybe your father would like to come along."

"He'd love it. If you really want him."

"Of course I want him. I want both of them. They've been making me run everything myself, and I don't like it."

"Early this evening? Right after dinner?"

"Tell them to come for dinner. I'll call my wife right up, and tell her we're having all the preachers for dinner. Don't you want to come along? When it comes to running things, you can put it over the whole board, if you ask me."

"Oh, Mr. Westbury, what an idea! It's nice of you to invite me, but I can't come tonight. I have some personal business to attend to."

From his office, Ginger plunged into an utter orgy of buying. For the first time in her life, she abandoned herself to reckless spending. She bought an alligator pear. There were only two in town, and she bought one of them. She had never tasted an alligator pear, but she knew it was something elegant. She bought a jar of ripe olives. Ripe olives were not common in Iowa, but she had seen them advertised in her systematic study of the magazines. She bought salted almonds and after-dinner mints. She bought an angel-food cake. In the furniture store, she bought two small rose-colored lamps for the living room. In the dry-goods store, she bought two pairs of white silk stockings, silk-to-the-top. Miriam didn't really need them, of course, but one could not well show partiality between twins.

Then she went swiftly home, and into the kitchen, where she rolled up her sleeves and went to work. She had no notion of announcing anticipated events until the two ministers were well out of the house, and dinner was ready. She realized that she could easily fool the men with this most timely invitation out, but her sisters would certainly suspect her of connivance. So she postponed her announcement, and in the meanwhile, she worked.

At five o'clock, she sought out her father and Hiram, deep in a discussion of recent progress in the mastery of the air, and informed them that they had been invited out to dinner, most importantly, and that Joplin Westbury expected them very early.

"It's Nice of You to Invite Me, but I Can't Come Tonight."

Hiram Buckworth seemed anything but pleased at this hospitable overture.

"But, see here—I can't go. I told Marjory I would—I think I'll call him up—"

"Oh, it is too late. Why, his wife has dinner all ready for you."

"Why didn't you tell us sooner?" he demanded impatiently.

"Well, I didn't get home until very late, and you were upstairs. I hated to disturb you. And I supposed of course you would like to go."

"Well, of course, I would like it—some time—but tonight—"

"He said to be there before six, because they eat early, and he likes his food hot," she said. "Come, father, I'll brush you off a bit."

And she persisted in her assiduous kindness until she finally saw her father walking off in the unwilling hands of Hiram Buckworth.

"I can't find Marjory," he whispered, dejectedly. "You tell her how it was—will you? And tell her I'll break away as soon as I decently can."

"Oh, don't do that. Marjory won't mind—she can wait until tomorrow night for—whatever you were going to do tonight."

And she stood grimly on the veranda and watched until they disappeared from sight.

"For it would be just like him to drop poor father right in the middle of the street, and come bounding back for a last look at the roof that shelters her—the base pretender," she said indignantly.

But when she was assured that their departure was final, she flew upstairs to the room where her sisters were industriously sewing lace upon bits of silk to accord with the very latest fashions in lingerie.

"Girls, hurry and get dolled up," she said. "Father and Hiram have gone out to dinner—to Jop West's—and Eddy Jackson is coming in, and I'm doing all the work myself, so we're going to pretend it's a party just for us."

"Put it off till tomorrow night," said Marjory, "so—father will be here."

"Can't. Eddy has some kid from some place—old school friend, or something—and he wants something to do with him, so they are coming here. Come on now, let's have a good time. Look, I bought you each a present—silk-to-the-top." She brandished the stockings before them. "A sale. Good ones."

Marjory's eyes were wistful. "They are just lovely," she said, "but I shan't waste them on Eddy Jackson and that child from some place. I'll keep them till tomorrow when—father is here."

"Since when has father shown such fondness for silk stockings? And if you don't put them on this very minute, I'm going to wear them myself. Aw, Margie, be a sport. Show Eddy a good time for once. Think how good he was to father."

Either the pleading or the threat was to good effect. Marjory hastily pulled off her shoes and stockings, and tried on the new silks-to-the-top. The shimmery whiteness of them, the silken softness, seemed to inspire her, to inspire Miriam, also, who quickly emulated her example, and inciting each other to further effort by this brave beginning, they entered joyously into the spirit of the affair. They brought out their entire wardrobe to make selections that would match the charm of the silk stockings—treasured bits of ribbons and lace, modest pieces of inexpensive jewelry. They tried things on, rearranged, experimented. They admired bizarre effects, offered criticisms, suggestions, helped to arrange each other's hair. Ginger, meanwhile, flew distractedly back and forth, between kitchen, dining room and bedroom, urging them on, praising the results.

It was five minutes before seven when they pronounced themselves perfect beyond the power of their possessions to improve one iota. And then they looked at Ginger, a flushed, perspiring Ginger, with tumbled hair and starry eyes, a Ginger adorned in a trim, cheap, flaming red smock.

"Mercy, Ginger, you are a sight. You'd better dress. They'll be here."

But Ginger had no intention of dressing. She was going to make this a real party, two and two, en tete-a-tete. She would wait on the table, passing back and forth as service was needed. As the girls, indeed, often took turns in waiting upon the table when there were guests, they quickly acquiesced, for as Ginger said, she was entirely too hot, and too tired, and too excited to dress.

She straightened her disordered hair, puffed her flushed face with a whisk of powder, and smoothed down the flaming smock. Beside the twins in their delicate coolness, their shimmery silken whiteness, she was like a hot and seething little fire.

At the sound of the siren at the gate, she ran toward the kitchen, while the twins, each with an arm around the other's waist, sauntered slowly down the stairs, softly singing, as the two men came briskly up the flagstone path.

But Ginger had not gone to the kitchen. Not all the way. She planted herself just beyond the base of the circular staircase, out of sight, but where a mirror on the opposite wall reflected the veranda entrance. Ginger was not one to miss the approach of a romantic figure. These things happen too seldom to be taken with nonchalance.

And as, in the mirror, reflecting the doorway, she saw that brisk approach up the flagstone path, black horror darkened her eyes, white anger paled her flushed cheeks.

The twins, cool, white and smiling, had descended to the bottom-most step. And in the open doorway, laughing, stood Eddy Jackson. And beside him—

Miriam withdrew herself impetuously from Marjory's light clasp, and flung her arms about him.

"Oh, Alex—oh, you darling—you hateful thing— Why didn't you tell me?—Margie, it's Alex!"

It was the can grocer.

Durability of Leather Shown by Recent Find

The durability of leather was proved by the discovery, in the course of excavating for the foundations of the new Bank of England, of soles of Roman shoes, one of which bore clearly the impress of the official Roman eagle.

The soles evidently were those of the sandals worn by women and children. Bronze rivets were used to hold together two or three thicknesses of leather and no doubt accounted in part for the life obtained from the footwear, which must have been much greater in weight than present-day shoes. The old leather was in about the same state of preservation as might be expected of a modern shoe that had been on a rubbish heap for a couple of months.

Although nowadays leather is produced with more speed and less mechanical erudity, the processes of preserving, toughening, and softening it are not materially different from those practiced by the Romans in England about 2,000 years ago.

Desert Conditions Common

Deserts, in the sense of great areas that are at all times hot, dry and nearly devoid of life, are comparatively rare. But desert conditions, in the sense of high temperatures and shortage of water arise at times on almost all land areas. Seasonal deserts, areas that for a part of the year have an abundant water supply accompanied by a luxuriant vegetable growth, and through the remainder of the year have no water supply and can show only dry masses of dead leaves and stems, are common. Illustrations of such conditions may be found along any roadside in midsummer. They are very common in places where there is but a thin layer of soil over bed rock.

THE PARABLE OF THE SOWER

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 13:1-23.

GOLDEN TEXT—Who hath ears to hear, let him hear.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Hearers and Doers.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Hearers and Doers.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Giving Heed to Jesus' Teaching.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Take Heed How Ye Hear.

In this thirteenth chapter of Matthew the "mysteries" of the kingdom are unfolded. By "mystery" in the Scriptures is meant truth undiscoverable by human reason, made known by revelation. The seven parables of this chapter set forth in a most graphic manner the admixture of moral and spiritual affairs in the world between Christ's ascension and return to the earth.

I. The Sower (v. 3).

The sower is not named in this parable. In the parable of the wheat and tares, the sower is the Son of Man (v. 37). It is evident that the sower in this case is the Lord Jesus Christ. Through the centuries He has been sowing the seed of divine truth by means of prophets, apostles and ministers.

II. The Kind of Soil (vv. 4-8; 19-23).

The soil is the human heart (v. 19). The seed sown is the Word of God (v. 19). The difference of results lies in the condition of the soil, which in turn is the state of the human heart. Notwithstanding the faithfulness of the sower and the purity of the seed, the results of preaching God's Word depend upon the condition of the human heart. This parable reveals four kinds of soil or hearers.

1. The wayside, or hard-hearted hearer (v. 4, cf. v. 19).

The wayside means the track beaten down by the hoofs of animals and the feet of men. Because the soil was unbroken and uncultivated the seed could not get beneath the surface, therefore was devoured by the fowls. The great truth taught is that the heart unbroken and hard is not favorable soil for the gospel.

2. The stony places, or superficial hearers (vv. 5, 6, cf. vv. 20, 21).

This means stones with a thin layer of soil upon them. Under such conditions the seed springs up quickly, but likewise scorches quickly. Hearts superficially impressed receive God's Word with joy, but when persecution and trials come they are not able to endure.

3. The thorny ground, or pre-occupied hearers (v. 7, cf. v. 22).

In this case the ground is good, mellow enough and of sufficient depth, but has thorns in it. Such really hear the Word of God, but the cares of this world and the deceitfulness of riches and the lusts of other things, entering in choke the Word and it becomes unfruitful (Mark 4:19).

Many are the "thorny ground" hearers of this age. The good seed cannot mature because (1) of worldliness. Men and women are completely absorbed in the things of business and are burdened with care. (2) The deceitfulness of riches. Anxious care in business brings riches to many. The effect of riches is to blunt the spiritual perception of men. (3) Lusts of other things entering in. This means the pleasures of life. All these things choke the Word of God. Many of the enjoyments of the world may be innocent in themselves, but they attract so much attention and consume so much energy and time that one has no time for Bible reading, meditation and prayer.

4. The good ground, or fruitful hearers (v. 8, cf. v. 23).

"But other fell into good ground and brought forth fruit." This ground differed from all the rest. It was mellow, deep and moist, therefore it was capable of bringing forth fruit, a hundred, some sixty and some thirty fold. In the measure that the heart is kept free from worldliness, riches and pleasures, the good seed matures.

III. The Purpose of Teaching in Parables (vv. 10-17).

There is much misapprehension concerning teaching in parables. The parabolic method of teaching makes clear the truth to those that love it, but conceals it from those who have a distaste for it. Jesus did not teach by parables till the rulers had set their hearts against Him. When in the light of His miracles and wonderful works they turned against him and attributed His works to the devil, He denounced them in the most scathing terms and began to teach in parables, in fulfillment of the prophecy of Isaiah (Matt. 13:14, 15; cf. Isa. 6:9, 10).

God Ever Ready to Protect

God often strikes away our props to bring us down upon his mighty arms. What strength and peace it gives us to feel them underneath us! Far as we may sink, we cannot go farther down than those stretched arms.—Doctor Cuyler.

What Love Is

Love is the simple desire for the highest good of another or of others, and is the expression of a spirit of self-surrender.—Bishop Westcott.

P. T. A. HOLDS UNIQUE MEETING

On last Tuesday evening the Parent-Teacher Association rendered an unusually good program. The entertainment was composed of the debut of the High School Orchestra in its first rendition of a program, the elimination contest of readers of the High School and a round table discussion of the beautifying of the school grounds. The program, because of its many speakers, lasted over two hours. The program opened with the orchestra, under the direction of C. A. Woodcox, High School musical instuctor. This organization is six weeks old and is composed of seventeen pieces. Considering the short time in which this organization has had to harmonize, they are doing fine and the crowd was surprised at the fine concert given.

The elimination contest was a good feature of the program, showing the development of public speaking part of our High School training. The contestants were, the Misses Margarett Hamilton, Virginia Ginther and Dorothy Fetters. The renditions were all fine and the judges found it difficult to choose the winner, who happened to be Miss Hamilton. Miss Hamilton will compete at the county contest in the near future.

In the round table discussion on the subject of school ground beautification much interest was shown by the speakers. The P. T. A. organization has been working on this plan for some time past but now the plan will receive the attention of the association as the chairman, Mr. Morr states that he will announce a committee that will investigate and draw up plans for the carrying out the beautifying scheme. During the discussion of the project at this meeting it was shown that the beautifying plan would have to have, and naturally did have, two aspects. The planting of shrubbery and trees and erecting of masonry and archways and the providing of adaquate space and facilities for the recreational part of the child's life. In other words, the beautifying of the child's life through the proper use of its time in the right kind of play at the right place and right time, etc. Beauification is then double duty, double meaning and must be met with a double action. This beautification program will then have for its object the improvement of the landscape and the character of the child life that the educational directors of our schools have set out to do. Flowers are as essential as play and play as essential as flowers — in short, beauty in life and environment.

MAY CURTAIL COUNTY ROAD PROGRAM

Following the failure of the county council to make an appropriation for the payment of the county's share of the construction of the paved road on state route 27 south from Garrett to the Allen county line, the county commissioners before adjournment Wednesday ordered a voucher for $8,-810.49 forwarded to the state highway commission.

This sum represents approximately one-fourth of the county's share and is the amount of a claim sent to the county by the state last June. Recently the county board received a letter from the state commission requesting that payment be made. The council expressed the opinion that the payment should be from the gravel road fund instead of the county fund and by its action in ordering payment made the commissioners acquiesced.

The work of the county highway department will necessarily be curtailed to some extent by the withdrawal of this sum, but there remains in the road fund $23,000 after the payment of the March 1 claims to run the department until the June settlement.

Arthur Rosenberry was awarded a contract by the commissiones for the construction of the Milton Hathaway road in Keyser township for $3,216.20.

No objections being filed to the petition of Wm. Hoodelmier et al. for a gravel road in Union township, the petition was referred to Charles Miser, county engineer, George Walter and A. D. Goodwin, viewers.

The auditor was directed to give notice of the letting of a contract April 9 for the John Hook gravel road in Union township.

Byron Widney and Ira S. Bone were appointed viewers for the C. O. Griffin road in Wilmington township.

The final report of the superintendent of the J. W. Boyle drain was filed and was set for hearing April 7.

STORY OF MODERN MUTINY

There is something thrilling about a mutiny at sea that is not comparable to any other adventure. The battle ground is narrowly limited and hence the engagement may be terrifically ferocious. If the officers can hold the upper deck and keep the mutineers confined below, the former are in a strategic position; but they are also away from the commissary and the motive power of the ship. Starvation or inability to command the engines and steer a course may affect the outcome quite as much as anything else. The penalty for these rebellions at sea is so severe that only the most desperate ever attempt one. Such an occurrence is pitcured with great vividness in Wyndham Martyn's story, "The Mutiny of the Albatross," presented as a serial in The St. Joe News. It is a story of romance and adventure which no reader should miss. First installment appears in issue of March 27th.

POTATO GROWERS HOLD MEETING

Forty potato growers met in the County Agent's Office Thursday evening to study the economic side of potato production. O. G. Joehanningsmeier of the Purdue Agricultural Extension Department interpreted the Agricultural Outlook information that is put out by the U. S. Department of Agriculural Bureau of Economics. Mr. Joehanningsmeier led a very interesting discussion along the economic line of potato production. It was brot out that since 1923 the prediction that is prepared by economic department at Washington follows very closely the actual production. Present indications are for six per cent increase in average over that of last year which would probably result in a crop similar to 1924 with average yield. There will be another publication out within a few days that will have information in regard to farmers intention to plant. This information will be put out in the local papers and it would be well for all potato growers to study the report quite carefully.

Choral Society In DeKalb County

New Organization Will Probably Have 100 Voices with Fifty Piece Orchestra

Approximately one hundred young people of DeKalb county met at the Lutheran Church in Auburn last Sunday afternoon and organized the DeKalb County Choral Society. The purpose of this organization is to create more enthusiasm in church singing. The project is under the direction of the County Superintendent of Young People, Miss Rose Smith of Corunna. The organization will be open for engagements during the coming months.

After a devotional period in charge of Rev. Joe Jordan and his song leader of Garrett, and a song service in charge of Rev. Iraq Discoveries

Uncovered Portion of a Temple at Nippur.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

SELDOM does a month pass without the announcement of a new discovery in the Near East that pushes farther back knowledge of man's activities on the earth: the uncovering of a tomb, a forgotten city, or a hidden inscription. One of the richest regions in hidden lore of the past is the valley of the Tigris and Euphrates rivers in what is now known as Iraq. It is there that some of the most far-reaching discoveries have been made.

A little over a half a century ago what was known concerning the ancient peoples of the nearer East, besides that which is contained in the Old Testament, could be written in a very brief form. Israel was then regarded as one of the great nations of antiquity. Abraham belonged to the dawn of civilization. The references to other peoples in the Old Testament had little meaning, for few appreciated the fact that the history of many pre-Israelitish nations had practically faded from the knowledge of man.

The pick and spade of the explorer, however, and the patient toil of the decipherer have thrown a flood of light upon the situation; ruin-hills of the past have been opened up to the light of day, out of which emerge marvelous revelations in the form of written records and other remains.

These, although written in languages and scripts the very existence of which was unknown to man for two thousand years and more, are now forced to reveal their story of the religion, politics, science and life of not a few of the ancient and forgotten peoples.

These researches have resulted in astounding revelations. Israel, instead of being one of the foremost nations of antiquity, is now found to have been a small power which had thrived in the late pre-Christian centuries, and had occupied a comparatively insignificant position among the great nations of its age. Instead of the patriarch Abraham belonging to the beginning of time, it is now found that he occupies a middle chapter in the history of mankind.

Early Peoples Were Cultured.

But, above all else, one of the greatest surprises is that the earliest peoples, instead of being barbarous or uncultured, were civilized and possessed a culture of a high order. In fact, the greatest creations of the Babylonians in literature and art belong to the third and fourth, and perhaps earlier, millenniums before Christ.

Political and religious institutions were already ancient in the days of the patriarchs. What may be regarded as primitive is found, but it points to a still greater antiquity than the earliest periods now known.

Not only did the builders use brick instead of stone at Babel, but they also used clay for their writing material. Annual inundations deposited sand and clay of a fine quality in the valley, which was used for this purpose. The well-kneaded, but unbaked, inscription, lying perchance beneath the disintegrated abodes of the ruined building, though yearly and for millenniums saturated thoroughly by the winter rains or inundations, when carefully extracted from its resting place of from two to six thousand years and allowed to dry, often appears as if it had been written yesterday. The original plasticity or adhesiveness of the sun-dried tablet returns. The baked tablets, as would be naturally expected, on the whole are better preserved.

The well-kneaded clay, which had been washed to free it from grit and sand, while in a plastic condition was shaped into the form and size desired. As the style of paper used at the present time is frequently an indication of the character of the writing, the same is true, in a general way, of an ancient Babylonian clay tablet or cylinder. In most instances the trained Assyriologist at a glance can determine the character, in a general way, of an inscription by its shape or appearance.

Written in Remote Antiquity.

The date of the earliest known inscription is still undetermined. The chronology prior to 2400 B. C. is still in a chaotic state, and yet the recent discovery of a tablet giving several new dynasties, besides many other facts which have been ascertained, offer sufficient indications of a much greater antiquity for the earliest known inscriptions than have been credited them.

The Hoffman tablet, in the general theological seminary, New York city, bears one of the few known archaic inscriptions. To assign it the date 5000 B. C. would be a modest reckoning. And yet the characters are so far removed from the original pictures that in most instances it is only by the help of the values they possess that the original pictures can be surmised. It describes a tract of land.

While in all known periods clay was the writing material, important royal documents, votive and historical inscriptions, etc., are found on stone, and in some instances on bronze. In cutting such inscriptions the scribe imitated the characters made in clay with the stylus.

Not unlike other scripts, the cuneiform was originally pictorial; but, as in Egypt, the hieroglyphs became more and more simplified and conventionalized.

The cuneiform inscriptions in clay, stone and metal that now repose in museums and in private collections number hundreds of thousands.

Several ancient libraries and immense archives have been found. Years ago the literary library of Ashurbanipal was discovered at Ninevah. It appeared to the excavators that the library had been deposited in the upper chambers of the palace, and that when the building was destroyed they fell through to the lower floors, where they were found in masses.

The inscriptions showed that they had been arranged according to their subject in different positions in the library. Each series had a title, being composed generally of the first words of the first tablet. Usually at the end of each tablet its number in the series was given.

Tell of Life of the People.

In more recent years temple and school libraries have been found at Nippur, Sipar, Larsa, Babylon and Erech. Besides these libraries immense archives of temple administrative documents belonging to all periods have been found in practically all sites where excavations have been conducted by the Occidental or by the illicit diggings of the Oriental.

These tablets record the payment into the temple of stores of tithes or offerings of drink, vegetables, or animals, of taxes, rents, loans, and also the disbursement of this property.

There are dowry and marriage contracts, partnership agreements, records of debts, promissory notes, leases of lands, houses, or slaves, deeds of transfer of all kinds of property, mortgages, documents granting the power of attorney, tablets dealing with the adoption of children, divorce, bankruptcy, inheritance; in fact, almost every imaginable kind of deed or contract is found among them.

Again and again are we forced to exclaim as we become acquainted with the doings of the ancients from these sources that our boasted civilization has developed very little in the essentials of life.

These documents are so numerous that we will know individuals of certain periods more intimately than we know of some of the centuries of our Christian era. When the tablets, for example, of the first dynasty of Babylon, about 2000 B. C., have been published, the history and genealogies of many families covering several generations will be known. In the late period several old families of Babylon and Erech can be traced for centuries, notably to Egibi of Babylon and such families of Ekur-Zakur, Akhutu, etc., of Erech.

The number of official and personal letters of most periods that have been found is also quite large. From the royal letters, such as those of Hammurabi to one of his governors, or those found in the library of Ashurbanipal, considerable information is gained dealing with the civil affairs in the land and with foreign affairs of other lands, especially Armenia and Elam.

Community Building

Proper Conception of Duty Man Owes to City

John H. Harrison, editor of the Danville Commercial-News, has given to his home city a public park consisting of 233.47 acres of choice land, including 64 acres now incorporated in the Danville Country club. In explaining the gift, which he says has been a "family secret" for a dozen years, Mr. Harrison explains his philosophy of the relation of the citizen toward the community. "It has always been my idea," he says, "that every man should put something back into his home town. I have held the theory that if a city furnishes a man his opportunity to make a living and to develop his business affairs, he is under obligation to that city to do something more than just live in it. If a man cannot contribute materially to the public welfare, he can contribute of his effort in working for civic matters."

It is a wholesome idea worth cultivating. How vastly it differs from the too-readily adopted theory that "the world owes me a living," the watchword of those looking for soft snaps. Every community in every generation has a number of men able to contribute to civic improvements in some form or other. The others can devote themselves to the no less important work of striving for clean government, for the best possible administration of public affairs, the securing of which lies entirely in their hands.—Chicago Post.

Right Now Good Time for Home Modernizing

The following resolution on maintenance, repair and equipment of homes and other buildings was adopted at a conference in Philadelphia, called by Mayor Harry A. Mackay.

"This conference recommends that every organization in Philadelphia be asked to suggest to its entire membership that there be done at once, wherever possible, all necessary or desirable maintenance, repair and equipment work with respect to existing homes and other buildings; and that such a modernization problem be undertaken in the interest, not alone of immediate employment of a large number of people, but in the interest of health and the improvement and conservation of property.

"This conference further expresses the hope that all organizations, individuals and the press and publications of this city will co-operate in making effective this procedure as a highly desirable immediate step in the prosperity program initiated by the President of the United States."

Make Chimney Attractive

About the chimney of stone there is always the appeal of things which are a direct product of nature. In such material, the chimney will blend with the color and texture of almost anything else. As evidence of this, we see stone chimneys used on houses of stucco, brick and wood.

Like all other chimneys, that of stone requires an adequate footing of concrete, placed on firm, tamped ground or stable stone. This should extend well below the frost line. Good cement mortar should be used for all the joints, and the flues should all be lined with fireclay lining, preferably in round shape to insure proper draught. All framing woodwork should be insulated from the chimney by asbestos or metal.

Village Growth Significant

What the future role of the village in our national drama will be is a matter of speculation, but it is certain that the village is growing in numerical and social importance. In the past 20 years villages have increased from five to nine times as fast as the open country population, and considerably more than the nation's population as a whole. In three out of eight regions villages have grown faster even than the cities. Since village mothers have fewer children than those on the farm, these facts emphasize the exodus from the open country districts, but raise the question whether the trek does not lead to the village as much as to the city.

Limit the Load Weight

Indiana's state highway department is to try to induce the legislature to limit the weight and length of motor vehicles, as "our permanent highways were not designed for the tremendous tonnage that is now placed on them." The latter portion of the statement is as true of New Jersey as of Indiana. It is doubtful whether any state roads have as heavy traffic as ours, which carry that of the great cities of New York and Philadelphia. There should be restriction of the weight of the load, and of the length of the train of trucks.—Trenton Times.

Big Rural Fire Losses

More than 3,500 lives a year are part of the annual toll collected by fire in the rural and small-town communities of the United States. It is estimated that the average loss to flames amounts to about $450,000,000 a year, and of this amount one-third occurs on farms and in small towns of 2,500 or less population. The figures are indicative of the need for better fire prevention and fire protection in the rural sections.

For Meditation

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

THE RADIO INDUSTRY

THE report of the radio division of the United States Department of Commerce for 1929 states that there are 10,000,000 homes in this country equipped with radio receiving sets. The United States census report for 1929 estimates a population for this country of 120,000,000, or the equivalent of 30,000,000 families, estimating four persons to the family. This would mean that one-fourth of the homes in the United States have receiving sets. If all these sets were in use at the same time, and all the members of the families were listening in, the audience would reach the astonishing figure of 40,000,000 persons.

L. A. Barrett.

The rapid development of the radio industry is also noted in this annual report. In 1922 there were in use only 60,000 sets with an estimated audience of 75,000.

The economic value of the radio industry is at once apparent when we realize that in one year (1928) "the sale of radios and accessories totaled $650,000,000." The exports in a single year (1927) increased from about $3,000,000 to $11,000,000. The future of this economic development is very large, for aside from possible increase in the exports, there are still 20,000,000 homes without radio sets.

The educational and entertaining advantages of radio are so very commonplace that the danger is, they are not as much appreciated as in former years. We take them as a matter of course. But, when the voices of men in other countries can be distinctly heard in our American homes, it makes us pause and wonder what the next feature will be that will bind the world close together.

Distance no longer separates nations any more than it separates individuals. Only differences of opinion separate nations today. The radio is destined to play no small part in solving the great unsolved problem which is facing every nation in the world. How are we going to live together?

Fliers Say Courage Varies with the Way they Feel

AEROPLANE pilots tell us that their courage, their whole attitude toward flying, varies from day to day, with the way they feel. If they feel full of pep, healthy, they can try anything—nothing frightens them. Their nerve is unshaken; their skill keen; their flying is machine-like in its perfection.

Member of the "Caterpillar Club" earns his right to membership by 5000 foot Emergency Jump.

It is an entirely different story, however, if they wake up in the morning feeling sick, down in the mouth. Then flying becomes a real danger.

What is the matter with these brave people when they are not up to par? The natural poisons in their bodies have not been swept away. They are allowing their brains to be clouded and dulled by poisons which should not be permitted to remain in the body.

This is the lesson we can learn from airmen. It is the lesson that points to Nujol—the simple, natural, normal way—without the use of drugs or medicines to keep the body internally clean of the poisons that slow it up. Nujol is pure, tasteless, colorless as clear water. It forms no habit; it cannot hurt even a baby.

See how the sunshine floods into your life when you are really well. Get a bottle of Nujol in its sealed package at any drug store. It costs only a few cents and it makes you feel like a million dollars. Find out for yourself what Nujol will do for you this very night. You can be at top-notch efficiency and happy all the time. Drink Water to Help Wash Out Kidney Poison

If Your Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers You, Begin Taking Salts

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which helps to remove the body's urinous waste and stimulates them to their normal activity. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of good water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in the system so they are no longer a source of irritation, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink, which everyone should take now and then to help keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this; also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.

Attractive Small Frame Home That Gives Owner Most for His Money

Front porches are all too rare in the houses of today but here, though the house is small, we find a porch which will be a highly attractive place to rest on warm summer evenings.

By W. A. RADFORD

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to practical home building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as editor, author and manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 407 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

After all, there are few homes more attractive than those which have been designed to meet the needs of the home builder of moderate means. Contractors in small towns have evolved designs for their customers. Most of these are of frame and are planned so that the owner will get the most for his money.

In this class comes the home shown in the accompanying illustration. This is a five-room story-and-a-half house. It is 22 feet wide and 26 feet deep, exclusive of the wide semi-inclosed front porch. This porch is one of the good features of this house. Front porches are all too rare in houses of today, but we have here, though the house is small, a porch which will be a highly attractive place to rest on warm summer evenings.

The house contains three rooms on the first floor and two bedrooms and bathroom on the second floor. How these rooms are arranged and the size of each are shown on the floor plans reproduced here.

It will be noted that the living room extends the width of the house, it being 11 feet 6 inches deep and 21 feet wide. This is a larger living room than is ordinarily found in houses of this size. The dining room is connected with the living room with a cased opening and is 11 feet by 13 feet. The wide opening between the living room and the dining room gives an effect of spaciousness and practically combines the two rooms. At one end of the living room is an open fireplace, and at the other is an open stair to the second floor. The kitchen is also a corner room and is 9 feet 6 inches square.

Two large bedrooms on the second floor are made possible by a wide dormer window set in the steep pitched roof at either side. These dormers also take away the plain appearance of the room and add to the appearance of the house.

The house is of frame construction and has a concrete foundation; the basement is of the same size as the dimensions of the house. The lower half of the house to the eaves has clap-board siding, and the gables at either end are shingled, as are the walls of the dormer projections.

This is an unusually good design for the home builder who needs a house of this size, as it is attractive in exterior appearance, its rooms are large and well arranged with the idea of giving the most in light and ventilation, and it can erected at a comparably low cost.

Wood Material Used to Make Kitchen Modern

Pronounced opportunities are offered the building industry to promote interior home modernizing during the colder months, the National Lumber Dealers' association believes. Many firms are finding this source of business well worth cultivating, and there is a trend in the building industry toward stimulating the interest of home owners in this form of home improvement, according to various journals serving the building field.

A great deal of interest is centering on kitchens and breakfast nooks. This is particularly fortunate for lumber interests, the association believes, because in improving the kitchen, lumber almost invariably plays an important part. Wood also is featured in making breakfast alcoves more comfortable, convenient and attractive.

There is hardly anything which adds so much to the attractiveness and convenience of a kitchen as plenty of built-in features. These may be installed easily at little cost in practically any kitchen, old or new.

The various cupboards, cabinets, shelves and bins can be constructed readily by the carpenter or contractor or built up at the millwork house and installed by the carpenter. Some housewives will be interested in suggesting installations that will meet their particular needs.

Cupboards, containing shelves, drawers and bins come first. The four west coast woods—douglas fir, west coast hemlock, western red cedar and sitka spruce, as well as many others—are excellent materials for these uses. They are easy to machine to give true, square corners and tight-fitting joints.

Modernizing is receiving strong support from building and loan associations. A Topeka (Kan.) concern has adopted a policy of completely modernizing every house that comes into its hands before it is rented or sold. The result has been a 50 per cent decrease in rentals on hand and an increase of 100 per cent in sales. Through modernization, this concern believes, many foreclosures have been avoided and many discouraged home owners have been developed into contented owners.

This building and loan organization found that one of its borrowers who had become delinquent in payments had no reason for getting behind, except that they had become dissatisfied with their home. Investigation revealed that the house was satisfactory in every respect, except for the kitchen which was so poorly arranged that the owners despaired of ever doing anything with it.

The company suggested a modernizing plan, which was accepted. At a cost of about $275 the kitchen was completely transformed. The long, narrow window was removed and two short twin windows were installed just high enough to allow a fine sink to be installed. The old cabinet was removed and replaced with a complete unit of drawers and cabinets finished on the outside with stain and enamel.

A variety of appeals have been used by concerns interested in developing kitchen modernizing business. These include:

Cost is less than would be expected.

Small investment results in material increase in value.

Make the kitchen a place friends can be shown with pride.

An antiquated kitchen does more to lower the value of a home than any other room in it.

A properly arranged and equipped kitchen enables a given amount of work to be done in less time, leaving more time free for other things.

A modern kitchen makes easy work out of what would otherwise be drudgery.

Money value of a home is based directly on its convenience to a prospective buyer.

Plan Fixes the Style of Home, Not Exterior

Sometimes the present-day custom of insisting on stylistic labels to describe different types of houses is a source of great embarrassment to the architects who design them.

The public insists on calling one house colonial, another Spanish, another English and so forth, according to more or less superficial qualities of the houses in question. Generally these names mean only that in the matter of exterior silhouette and detail precedents derived from the architecture of these countries have been drawn upon.

It is a fact, however, that the essential character of a house can remain unchanged regardless of the exterior silhouette and detail. And since this essential character is determined almost entirely by the plan, and since the plan of our houses can only be as our mode of life in present-day America dictates, that essential character is fundamentally American.

CHOICE FOODS

Oysters are still enjoyed and found in the market even after the months with R's are past.

Oysters Perfection.—Take one pint of drained oysters, place in a baking dish which has been buttered with one-half cupful of butter. Cover each oyster with crumbs and seasoning, using one-half cupful of chopped chives. Bake until the oysters are well cooked and the crumbs brown. Serve from the baking dish. In cooking oysters in the oven two layers are best, as too long cooking will toughen those on the top or bottom.

Sour Cabbage.—Chop one apple and one onion and fry ten minutes in two tablespoonfuls of sweet fat, add one-half of a medium-sized cabbage shredded, two cupfuls of boiling water, one-third cupful of vinegar, one tablespoonful of butter, season with salt and pepper and simmer one and one-half hours. When two-thirds done add one-half cupful of sugar and serve very hot.

Baked Ham With Raisin Sauce.—Soak ham over night; in the morning scrub well and put to cook in boiling water to cover. Simmer three hours, remove from the heat and let stand to cool in the liquor. Remove the skin and put the ham in the baking pan with two cupfuls of the broth. Add one cupful of cider and one-half cupful of brown sugar. Bake one and one-half hours in a moderate oven. Half an hour before serving time add one cupful of raisins. If the sauce is not thick enough add a tablespoonful of flour thinned with a little of the gravy from the pan. Serve ham on a platter surrounded with spiced apples or peaches.

Rochester Jelly Cake.—Cream two-thirds of a cupful of butter with two cupfuls of sugar, add three beaten eggs and one cupful of milk, three cupfuls of flour mixed with two teaspoonfuls of baking powder. To one-third of this batter add one tablespoonful of molasses, one cupful of raisins, one-fourth pound of sliced citron, one-half teaspoonful each of allspice and nutmeg. Use one tablespoonful of flour to sift over the cut fruit. Bake in layers, using the fruit layer in the center. Put together with marmalade or jelly.

Roast Rabbit.—Dress a well-cleaned rabbit and stuff with chestnut dressing. Rub the entire surface with salt. Mix one-half cupful of butter with one-fourth cupful of flour and spread over the breast and legs. Place in a hot oven and as soon as the flour browns reduce the heat. Cook until tender.

Seasonable Foods.

A very tasty and at the same time pretty canape, is made as follows: Take six slices of bread, six large sardines, six large olives, with worcestershire sauce and sliced pickled beets. Flake the sardines and season with a few drops of the meat sauce. Cut the bread into circles or any desired shape. Spread with the sardine mixture and cover with a circle of beet, with an olive cut off to stand firm in the center of the beet.

Fritters are always welcome and they serve to extend an otherwise short menu. Prepare the fritter and use any leftover vegetables such as parsnips, asparagus or such fruits as prunes, peaches, or bananas. For clam fritters use the clam liquor for the fritter batter instead of milk.

Spinach Salad.—Chop two hard-cooked eggs and put through a sieve, add one pint of cooked chopped spinach, one tablespoonful of mild onion minced, one green pepper chopped, one-half cupful of finely cut celery. Serve on lettuce with plenty of good mayonnaise or a boiled dressing highly seasoned.

Egg Cutlets.—Take one cupful of milk, three tablespoonfuls each of flour and grated cheese, one tablespoonful of butter, two hard-cooked eggs and minced onion, salt and pepper to taste. Prepare the white sauce, chop the eggs rather coarsely and add to the sauce when cool; add cheese and when firm, mold into cutlets, dip into egg and crumbs and fry. Serve around a mound of fresh green peas, well buttered.

Clubette Sandwich.—Prepare plain scrambled eggs. Spread bread toasted and buttered with the egg mixture, sprinkle with finely minced parsley or onion or chives, cover with a crisp lettuce leaf dipped into mayonnaise, cover with another slice of toasted bread and serve very hot, cut into triangles. These are good cold. Garnish with small pickles cut into fan shapes.

Wild leeks, chopped and used in salads are as good as a medicine. Eat them at night so the odor will not disturb the neighbors.

For COLDS

We all catch colds and they can make us miserable; but yours needn't last long if you will do this: Take two or three tablets of Bayer Aspirin just as soon as possible after a cold starts. Stay in the house if you can—keep warm. Repeat with another tablet or two of Bayer Aspirin every three or four hours, if those symptoms of cold persist. Take a good laxative when you retire, and keep bowels open. If throat is sore, dissolve three tablets in a quarter-glassful of water and gargle. This soothes inflammation and reduces infection. There is nothing like Bayer Aspirin for a cold, or sore throat. And it relieves aches and pains almost instantly. The genuine tablets, marked Bayer, are absolutely harmless to the heart.

SPORTING NEWS

INDEPENDENTS CLOSE SEASON

On last Wednesday evening the Independent Basket Ball team closed their athletic season with a sort of a celebration. They played the girls team from Auburn which turned out to be a good exhibition. The game demonstated the fact that girls can play under the regular boys rules without being slain and that the girls rules are a hindrance to good spectacular basket ball. On account of two numbers being unable to accompany the girls team, the Misses Storer, Ginther and Curie played against the boys here with Auburn. Donald Kinsey was the only player that suffered any casualties. Score 26 to 22 in favor of the Independents.

A large number of our citizens attended the regional tournament held at Auburn on last Saturday. As usual the old dope bucket took a spill in the tournament and the results were different than had been expected. The first game between Auburn and Milford was a fast close game, in which either team had license to win. Auburn grabbed the first half 11 to 6 but in the last half Milford made Auburn put up the best they had but they finished 21 to 19 in favor of Auburn.

In the second game between Kendallville and Lima (Ind.) the fans saw a real battle. The Lima squad had a surprise for the crowd. They had an undersized team but their speed and accurate basket shooting made up for that and the Kendallville team had to go into a five minute period to take the game. First half, Kendallville 15, Lima 11. Second half Kendallville 23, Lima 23, overtime period, Kendallville 34, Lima 25. The final game was played between Auburn and Kendallville in the evening to a large crowd and many were turned away. Kendallville stacked up a good lead early in the game by playing a careful defensive game. Auburn was not permitted to score until after the first eight minutes in the first half and the score ended 14 to 6 in favor of Kendallville. In the second half Auburn staged their usual second half rally and came within four points once of tying things up with Kendallville. But Kendallville made a few in the meantime and won the game by the score of 23 to 16. Two years ago Kendallville kept Auburn from seeing the capitol. Auburn owes its defeat in part to poor luck in basket shooting and the team was not hitting on all fours. Indianapolis—and then its over.

The game between the Auburn Girls and the Independents was to have been the last game for the season but the management, Mr. Mark Williams opened up his heart and thought that he would give the fans a free treat for their liberal patronage during the season. And so we have the following announcement for our consideration.

On next Thursday evening at the High School Gym, at the hour of eight, the Hicksville Merchants will come over to receive their final rites for the season. This will be a game, brethren. In fact, when Hicksville plays our local team there usually is a game. In addition to this free attraction, there will be a mixed musical entertainment given from some sources that have not been announced. The bill says "EVERYBODY INVITED." That means you.

Sermon for Today

(Rev. G. D. Stoll)

A LENTEN SERMON

John 16: 32.
"And yet I am not alone."

Being alone is dreadful to most of us. In spite of our personal independence, we follow the crowd fearing to be alone with ourselves discovering the way and truth of life. We do not know ourselves until in the awfulness of loneliness we discover and probe our own souls. We should seek to become acquainted with ourselves so that we could say as Ulysses and his battle scarred adventurers, "That which we are, we are."

Jesus was a lonely man because, through the process of searching himself, he found unseen depths in his own soul. Yet in discovering his own soul he discovered God. As external circumstances and the temptations of himself broke upon him he was driven deeper and deeper into the mystery land of his own soul and a growig discovery of God. From Hence comes the theme of his life, "I must do the will of Him that sent me."

Jesus was alone on the supreme adventure of doing God's will. It is true that crowds followed him even away from the towns to places where there was no food. But crowds do not think or understand. Because the twelve did not understand they could not sympathize sincerely with him. So Jesus in solitude sought communion with His Father collecting spiritual reserves against the darkening horizon of Calvary Hill. So seemed the will of God: he must tread the winepress alone. The world was against him. He knew the weakness of his disciples—"Ye shall be scattered every man to his own, and shall leave me alone." These words immediately follow, "and yet I am not alone, because the Father is with me." Because he would do all for God he had within the sweet peace of these words, "I will never leave thee or forsake thee."

In the long way that each must tread alone when every temptation wars most strongly against the "inner-man," let each remember he is being driven closer to a discovery of himself and God. Let us understand the words of the Psalmist, "When my father and mother forsake then the Lord will take me up."

As there are a large number of Bible readers in St. Joe, I would like for someone who has a knowledge of the book to explain to me in these columns the meaning of Revelation the 13th chapter and especially the 16th and 17th verses of this chapter, which reads:

"And he causeth all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their right hand or in their foreheads; And that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name."

Wind is a Close Second to Fire

In destuction and damage to property, high winds are almost as culpable as fire. A wind need not be of tornado force to do serious damage; nor is wind damage a hazard peculiar to any section of the country. Exceedingly high and dangerous wind movements have occurred in almost every section of the country and history will undoubtedly repeat itself. Windstorm Insurance is very moderate in cost.

Facts For Farm Folks

Written by Agricultural Authorities

PROF. H.D. MUNROE

SAVE THE LAYING HENS

Mortality figures, taken from the demonstration farm flocks of Pennsylvania for a period of ten years and on about 300,000 hens, show that February, March, April or May are the months of highest mortality. During any one of these months twice as many hens die as do during any of the other eight months.

A large percentage of this mortality can be traced to the trouble commonly called prolapsus or inverted oviduct. The causes of this poultry trouble, though not definite, may be due to one or more of the following factors:

1. Pick outs.
2. Weakening of the muscles of the oviduct brought on by the strain of heavy production.
3. An overfat condition of young pullets just starting to lay.
4. Constipation due to not enough laxative feeds such as green and succulent feeds or a lack of liquids.
5. Lack of lubricating material in the oviduct brought on by an incomplete ration.
6. Difficulty in laying large eggs.

Even if some trouble does not appear it is a good plan to prevent it as far as possible by using a liberal supply of succulent, green feeds. Such feeds as sprouted oats, cabbage and mangles should be used. Some kind of milk in the ration is important. A dose of some laxative such as epsom salts (1 pound of salts per 400 pounds of poultry) may be needed as often as once a month if no succulent food is available.

A suggestion worth trying is to reduce the amount of corn to 25 per cent of the scratch grain mixture. Such grains as wheat, oats, barley and buckwheat can be added to take the place of corn.

As prolapse appears in a flock cannabalism is likely to cause heavy losses. Birds are likely to start picking at the vents that show a trace of blood.

Some hens have the habit of staying near the nests and picking those while in the act of laying. For this reason it is advisable to keep tht nest darkened. Whenever a bird is caught picking another, her back should be trimmed. In bad cases of pickouts it is necessary to trim the whole flock. Often picking in a hen flock can be stopped, as with chicks, by feeding a moist mash once a day made up of ¾ alfalfa meal and ¼ laying mash.

In the summer of 1915 Mrs. Dwyer passed suddenly away.

Many heart-crushing sorrows fell across the pathway of Mr. Dwyer but he bore them bravely and always maintained a cheerful attitude until called to his reward on March 1, 1930, at the age of 58 years, 19 days.

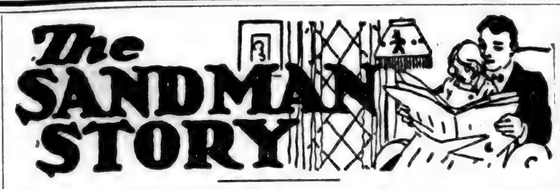
The SANDMAN STORY



ABOUT SPRING FLOWERS

THE Fairy Queen visited a hothouse filled with flowers. It was evening and it was quite dark save for the torch which the Fairy Queen carried with her.

The Flower Fairy talked to the Fairy Queen and together they went about among the flowers with the Fairy Queen's torch lighting the way.

"Ah," said the Flower Fairy, "there are the little tulips. Such bright, cheery flowers as they are. They and their crocus relatives close when it is cool and open when the warm sun shines upon them.

"Yet sometimes we play tricks on them—jolly, good-natured tricks which they do not mind. Sometimes the one who looks after the hothouse lets their part cool ahead of time and they close and then he will warm it up again, and once more they open their heads.

"They go to sleep at night, people say, and yet they will go to sleep in the daytime, too, if it is cool. Maybe every one doesn't know that."

"I must tell the fairies about it," said the Fairy Queen, "as they will like hearing that."

"Little daisies and marigolds open in the daytime and close at night," the Flower Fairy continued, "but if you make everything dark ahead of time the marigolds close their eyes and go right to sleep.

"They will do this as many times as you make it dark and will wake up as soon as it is light.

"Now little tulips will open day and night regularly should they be kept in darkness for any length of time. They will not be fooled forever!

"But Wild Camomile will open its petals all the wider when night comes as though not to miss any of the beauty of the night.

"Then there is the Sensitive Plant which closes when touched. Such a sensitive, sensitive plant!

"The Night Stock opens at night and takes its rest in the day as you might judge by its name. And it likes to give its fragrance to the evening.

"But not only should we admire the beautiful flowers, but we should have a good word to say for the little wriggling worms which keep the earth soft and loosened up as they go crawling and pushing along through it.

"They keep it open so that the rain can do its part. They, too, deserve a little praise."

The Fairy Queen agreed with the Flower Fairy and together they threw fairy kisses to the flowers as the Flower Fairy walked along a little way with the Fairy Queen.

She rested in one of her Fairyland wayside corners that evening and the next day went visiting again.

Such a collection of creatures she visited. She talked to a sparrow who told her that his family had been brought over first to destroy caterpillars, but that they had been regretting it a good deal since as he had been pretty greedy himself about the crops.

And by that, he meant his whole family.

They talked to Old Rat. Old Rat said the reason he liked people was because they were untidy.

"They leave crumbs around and so I thrive all over the world as all over there are always some untidy people."

Then she saw, later in the morning, when the rain and sun were having a talk, beautiful Mother Rainbow.

"Oh, Mother Rainbow," she said, "do tell me what you have been doing lately."

"Well, my children and the Raindrop children have been having merry games, and yesterday we had a double rainbow. Then my children who dress in violet took the outside places in the double part of the rainbow.

"You know, with a single rainbow the children who dress in red stand and group themselves on the outer part of the rainbow and those inside are my violet-dressed children. They do the opposite in the double rainbow.

"You're going?" Mother Rainbow asked.

"Alas, I must this time," said the Fairy Queen, "we have a party this afternoon in Fairyland. But maybe if I asked you, you might come?"

"I'll come," said Mother Rainbow, "if you ask the Raindrop children and my children and Mr. Sun."

"Hurrah!" cried the Fairy Queen. "I'll ask them all and what a party we will have!"

CALLING THEM X-RAYS

WHO put the X in X-rays?

Truly one of the greatest discoveries of the age in the X-ray. For years medical men, surgeons and scientists groped in darkness for the ray that would light to curative agencies the ways within us that are hidden from the eye. For years they failed.

And then one Wilhelm Roentgen, a professor in a German university, announced to the world that he had discovered a ray which would make it possible not only to make transparent the skeleton as an aid to diagnosis, but which would have within itself wonderful curative powers for certain diseases.

Electricity, iridaumen and platinum are used in X-ray work. But Roentgen himself was not certain of the exact nature of the rays. What then more natural than that the professor, daily confronted with problems in mathematics, chemistry and physics, should choose the term used in the realm of science to represent the unknown quantity—X?

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

TURNING THE SHOE

IF DURING the night you should hear an owl hooting, or a dog howling, or any other ominous sound; should suspect that witches or ghosts are about or anything of that sort, just get up and turn your shoes upside down. That will counteract the evil portent and drive away all ghosts and witches.

Inquiry has shown that this salutary practice of shoe-turning under the circumstances mentioned is rather common in the United States. From the time men began to wear shoes—or the same thing under another name, sandals—the shoe acquired a rather important part in supernatural lore from the magic of association, as appears from the part it plays in ancient superstitions, myths and sacred rites. As a part of a man's apparel it took on more or less of the man's individuality. We still have the expression to stand in another man's shoes as a metaphor for taking another man's place. Pliny, the great Roman naturalist, used to spit into his shoes before he put them on in order to drive out any evil spirit which might be lurking there, attempting to "hoodoo" him by standing in his place. Shoes were never brought into the sanctuary of Alectro, the "unresting one" of the avenging Furies. Nobody wanted to risk a Fury getting into his shoes.

Now when your shoes are lying right side up beside the bed and the dog howls, and the owl hoots, and evil influences are abroad in the night, it is evident that the said shoes offer altogether too many facilities for the evil spirits to enter them—of standing in your shoes as they would have in Pliny's had he not exorcised them. But turn the shoes upside down and the evil spirits are necessarily foiled.

Forests Now in West

But because settlement began on the Atlantic coast and because the East today supports 80 per cent of our total population, the eastern forests have suffered greater and much more rapid depletion than the western.

GINGER ELLA

CHAPTER XI

—18—

A fresh wave of wrath painted Ginger's face with rose. She flashed from the secretion of her corner by the stairway just in time to see the can grocer press a fervent and unmistakable kiss upon the delicate lips of Miriam, the sensible twin. Miriam seemed not in the least surprised, but rather pleased. Marjory, too, seemed to take the outrage with indecent calmness, while Eddy Jackson wore a smile no less than diabolic.

"Just for that, Eddy Jackson, you owe me ninety dimes," she announced sternly. "Nine whole dollars I spent on this comedy of yours."

And she marched straight to the kitchen.

Only Eddy Jackson heard her. For Miriam, the last shred of her sensibility thrown to the winds, was clinging to Alexander's hands, and trying to draw Marjory by sheer force into the warmth of his nearness. Eddy followed Ginger to the kitchen.

"Aw, have a heart," he pleaded. "He told me to do it."

Ginger stared at a pan on the stove, where thick heavy bubbles rose and fell.

"You see the gravy is burning," she said, and offered not a hand to save it. "Let it burn. I hope it does burn. I hope the gravy burns him, and the alligator pear chokes him, and the fried chicken gives him pernicious anemia."

Eddy laughed. "Listen, wild one, and I'll tell the deep and bloody mystery of that young mans' life. Nobody knows it. Marjory doesn't know it. Miriam herself doesn't know it. But I know it and I'll tell you. He really is a romantic figure—most romantic—"

"Canned beans, canned corn, canned tomato soup, canned peaches—it makes me sick—canned sweet potatoes—" she recounted drearily.

Eddy Jackson briskly stirred the gravy as he talked. Eddy was fond of cream gravy.

"He's no grocer. His family owns that chain gang set, whatever you call it, the Orange and Black, all over the country. Alex will be some high-mucky-muck-manager one of these days. They sent him on this trip west to familiarize himself with the business, and the localities—this new idea of know your stuff from the ground up."

Ginger took the spoon away from him. After all, it was her gravy.

"Eddy, why didn't you tell me?"

"He told me not to. Nobody knew it. Not even the chain bunch here in town."

"But you should have told me!"

"If anybody asks me not to tell something that is none of my business—and nobody else's—I won't tell it," said Eddy firmly.

"Just like father," mourned Ginger.

Suddenly a fresh amaze swept over her. "But Eddy, just see what a mess you've made of it. Why, he's never so much as looked at Marjory."

"I should say not. He's nuts over Miriam."

"But Miriam—Miriam hasn't got a thing—but brains."

"She's got Alexander Murdock."

"Does Miriam think he is a real grocer?"

"Yes. She told me she would marry him if he was a shoe shiner."

"Marry him. Did he ask her?"

"Sure. That's what he came back for. Brought her the engagement ring."

Ginger's eyes glittered. "Put another chair at the table, will you? And get me a knife and fork from that drawer. There won't be any waiting on at this party. You can carry the plates back and forth yourself."

So Ginger accepted Alexander Murdock as a prospective brother-in-law, and one to be received with a certain amount of gratitude. After all, he could give them a reduction on the canned groceries. She shook hands with him, exclaimed joyously over the brilliant solitaire which adorned Miriam's slender finger, and admitted that the denouement was well worth the ninety dimes expended.

"Why dimes?" demanded Eddy curiously.

"Oh, that's the way I get it—I mean, save it," Ginger amended quickly.

She regarded her twin sisters reflectively, one after the other. Miriam was well enough of course, the still, deep kind, nothing surprising, nothing startling about her. Miriam was the type that one gets used to. But Marjory's brilliancy was a fresh revelation, an entirely new amusement, every day.

"Beauty's queer, isn't it?" she puzzled. Then she studied her own piquant features in the mirror, and for the first time, not without some hope. "Look me over, will you? Does anybody see any signs of it on me?"

CHAPTER XII

The new Methodist church of Red Thrush, Iowa, was an established fact. Mr. Tolliver, his eyes carefully shielded behind the padded glasses, had preached the tender sermon which served both to dedicate the new church, and to bid farewell to his parishioners, for the general conference was to convene the week following. He had accepted the mandate of the church, and planned to live in retirement until some work of different nature could be found for him, or, as he said, until the Lord chose to bless the means used for his restoration. He continued in close correspondence with new surgeons, the best and the most expensive the Middle West afforded.

On this day, the twins had gone to college. Eddy Jackson came in his car and took them and their new bags to the train, after which with Ginger he drove slowly back to the parsonage which would be her home for a brief fortnight longer. Ginger did not know just what was to become of her and her father, but Ginger didn't care. They were always taken care of, would always be. And there was the rich munificence of the home for the blind at their command, although of this her father still knew nothing. They would remain with Miss Jenkins in the parsonage until after the conference, and then go for what they called a visit to Helen and Horace for a while, until they could decide upon the best plan for the future.

The one interest of Ginger herself was to remain in Red Thrush as long as possible. Her address as treasurer of the parsonage home was too broadly disseminated now to be lightly changed, and all of her arguments were based on that great fact.

She Flashed From the Secretion of Her Corner by the Stairway Just in Time to See the Can Grocer Press a Fervent and Unmistakable Kiss Upon the Delicate Lips of Miriam.

All the enthusiasm, and the nonchalance, and the farewells, were over. Ginger and Eddy sat alone in the living room of the old parsonage, rather still, a little depressed with their aloneness. In the small den on the left, beyond the curve of the staircase, they could hear Hiram's low voice, talking to her father, while they sorted and packed old manuscripts, ready for removal from the house that had been their home for four years. Miss Jenkins had gone to her room, to weep over the departure of the twins. Ginger had seen her go, with relief. Miss Jenkins' weeping depressed her to the deepest extreme.

"Well, it's all over now," she said dully. "Helen's married, the twins are gone, and father and I are fired."

"Oh, nonsense. Helen is well off and very happy. The twins will be home for Christmas, and your father will get a better church than Red Thrush."

"Eddy—" Her voice sank to a whisper. "Do you think he will ever see again? Do you think even the most expensive doctor in the world can cure him?"

"Why, of course he will see again. Didn't all the doctors say the same thing, that it was just nervous and mental reaction, and in time—"

"It's a long time, though. Very long."

"You're so impatient, Ginger. But that's because you're young."

A quick loud knock at the door startled her to her feet with a nervous gasp, but she quickly recomposed herself, and went in answer. The postman stood there, and with him another man, behind them another, both strangers—inspectors, possibly, Ginger thought, come to check up for statistical purposes. She smiled at the postman.

"Mail?" she asked.

The postman showed embarrassment. "Well, yes," he said awkwardly. "You are E. Tolliver, aren't you?"

"Why, of course I am. You know I am, Ellen. Have you no letters for me?"

Suddenly she was aware that the man in the rear carried a large mail pouch. He stepped ahead of the others and entered the room. The postman and his companion followed silently. Ginger followed, also. Eddy Jackson stood up. The man in the dark suit opened the pouch, and lifted it high, pouring out a little stream of letters upon the table.

Then, for the first time, the third man spoke.

"Do you claim this mail?"

"Why, of course. I'm the only E. Tolliver there is. E. stands for Ellen."

"Wait a minute, wait a minute, now. You claim this mail, do you? You acknowledge that it is meant for you? You admit this before witnesses?"

"Be careful, Ginger," interposed Eddy Jackson quickly, scenting trouble. "Don't say anything. Don't commit yourself."

"You keep out of this, young man. Well, miss, then you—"

"Why, of course I claim it," said Ginger quickly. "It's all right, Eddy, it's for me. Why, I've had a lot just like it." She smiled disarmingly at the postman. "You know," she added significantly.

"Well, you all hear that," said the third man, in a snarling low voice. "She claims it. She's the one we're after."

Ginger turned surprised, wide, innocent eyes upon his face. She did not speak.

"Well, come across now, miss. Give us the goods. Where is this here home—parsonage home for the blind, you call it? I don't see any signs of it." His voice was low and ugly.

Ginger smiled nervously. "Well, but you see, this really is it. Father's blind, you know, and this is our home. And the parsonage, well, this is the parsonage. Everybody in town knows that."

"Yeh, I know all about it, and a pretty slick game, I call it. But I guess we've got the dope on you, right enough. Getting money under false pretenses—that's what the law calls your home for the blind. Using the mails to defraud, that's what the law says. Penitentiary business, miss, that's what you're up against."

"No, oh, no. It is true—it really is true. It is a home for the blind, for one blind—father."

"Begging, eh? Well, you've got to have a license in this country, even for that. Oh, we know your game, kid. We're on to you all right. We expected an alibi— Shut up!" he shouted to the shocked old postman, who had endeavored to interpose a word on her behalf. "You shut up, and keep out of this." He turned to Ginger, and caught her arm in a rough grasp. "Come along, now, and no more monkey business."

Eddy was a slow young man, slow to wrath, but the sight of the great red hand on Ginger's slender arm goaded him to action.

"You take your hands off that girl!" he shouted, springing across the room with a blind violence that sent two chairs spinning away from him.

"Hush, oh, hush," begged Ginger. "Eddy, don't! I'm not hurt. Oh, don't let father hear you! Oh, please hush!"

"Bring out your old man—bring out the whole nest," bellowed the officer furiously. "We'll clean house here while we're at it."

Ginger turned despairingly to Eddy Jackson. "Eddy, make him hush! Father's eyes— A shock will— Oh, Eddy!"

The officer, pulling himself away from Eddy's restraining hand, caught her shoulder with a grasp that flung her half to the floor, and Eddy, driven entirely reckless at the sight, leaped upon him.

But Mr. Tolliver in the small adjoining room had heard the unusual uproar in his quiet home, heard it first with surprise, then with rising indignation. With one bound he entered the living room, and instinctively, as in a crisis one who has been accustomed to clear vision for many years is bound to do, he tore the protecting bandages from his eyes and dashed them upon the floor.

When Amateur Sleuth Lost Interest in Case

Most men possess a huge contempt for the detective ability of the police and nurse a confident belief that if it were put up to them they would solve any mystery in jig time.

On Long Island lives a man who not only believes that Sherlock Holmes was a slouch compared to him, but who gets in some active practice. If a crime is committed in his locality he makes a bee-line for the police station and starts in to "help" the department. The police do not relish his interference, but they've got to humor him because of his influence.

But this man proved to be too good a detective. One day he called at the station to see if there was anything doing and was told of a motor car accident in which a woman, after driving through a store window, had backed up and driven away. The Long Islander immediately went to work on the case. He solved it, all right, but he did not report his success to the station.

For he discovered that it was his wife who was the guilty culprit—and that the police had known it all the time when he went out to solve the mystery.—New York Sun.

Lesson for March 16

THE PARABLES OF THE KINGDOM

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 13:24-52.

GOLDEN TEXT—The kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Whole World for Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The World for Christ.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Our Religion Means to Us.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—What Christianity Means to the World.

The things set forth in these parables only apply to the church in the measure that they permeate that body by virtue of its being formed within this period. It should be observed that they set forth the "mysteries" of the kingdom.

I. The Wheat and Tares (vv. 24-30, cf. 36-43).

1. The sowers. The sower of the good seed is the Son of Man (v. 37), and the sower of the tares is the devil (v. 39).

2. The growing crops (v. 26).

There is a striking resemblance in the growing crops. The chief peril of the devil is that he transforms himself into an angel of light (II Cor. 11:14, 15).

3. The harvests (v. 30).

There comes a time when the fruit of the crop shall be gathered. The separation is made by the angels under the direction of the Son of Man. For the tares there is a furnace of fire. For the wheat there is the Lord's garner.

II. The Mustard Seed (vv. 31, 32).

1. Its unimportant beginning (v. 1).

It begins as the least of all seeds. Not only was Christ, the King, of humble parentage, but His disciples were unlettered fishermen. Likewise, through the centuries, not many wise and not many noble have been called.

2. Its vigorous growth (v. 32).

Though small in its inception, the work inaugurated by Christ has become mighty in power.

3. Its lodging capacity (v. 32).

The birds which find lodgment in the tree do not represent the children of men who find safety and salvation in the church, but the predatory beings who have found shelter in the church, though they are no part of it.

III. The Leavened Meal (v. 33).

1. The meal in Scripture means something nutritious and wholesome.

It was used in one of the sweet savour offerings which typified Christ (Lev. 2:1-3 R. V.).

2. The woman.

The woman is the administrator of the home. Her responsibility is to take the bread provided by the head of the home and prepare and distribute it to the children. It means then that the woman, the administrator, has introduced false doctrine and thus corrupted the children's bread.

3. The leaven.

In Scripture, leaven is invariably a type of evil (Ex. 12:15; Matt. 16:6, 12; I Cor. 5:6-8; Gal. 5:8, 9). It means that in this age the truth of God would be corrupted by worldliness and unbelief.

IV. The Hid Treasure (v. 44).

1. The field (v. 38). Christ's own interpretion makes this the world.

2. The treasure. The treasure means Israel (Ps. 135:4, Deut. 7:6-8).

3. The purchaser. No one but the Son of God had sufficient resources to buy the world (John 3:16).

4. The purchase price. This was the precious blood of Jesus Christ, God's beloved Son (I Pet. 1:18, 19).

V. The Merchantman Seeking Pearls (vv. 45, 46).

1. The merchantman is Christ. The Son of Man has come to seek and save that which was lost (Luke 19:10).

2. The purchase price. Christ impoverished Himself (Phil. 2:08) to purchase the one pearl of great price (Eph. 5:25).

3. The pearl of great price. This is the church (Col. 1:18).

VI. The Dragnet (vv. 47-50).

1. The sea. The sea in Scripture denotes peoples or multitudes (Dan. 7:3; Rev. 17:15).

2. The dragnet. The dragnet cast into the sea means the sowing of the seed by the Son of Man.

3. The dragnet drawn to the shore when full means that when God's purpose for the present age is full, account will be taken of the results.

4. The separation made by the angels. This will take place at the end of the age.

5. The destiny of the bad fish. The angels shall sever the wicked from among the just, and shall cast them into the furnace of fire where there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth.

The Bravest Men

Our bravest men are often those of whom the world hears the least. Life to them is a constant struggle. They meet their obstacles every day and pass them in silence.—Presbyterian Record.

When You Are Right

When you are in the right stand up for it, no matter if the heavens fall; if you lose every friend you have, God will raise up others who will be better.—D. L. Moody.

THOSE OLDEN GOLDEN DAYS

While in the throes of the reminiscence of the olden, golden days of our yesterdays and carefully looking over the "foot prints on our sands of time," we discovered, somewhat gladly, that the two towns of Spencerville and St. Joe, had in time past been pretty much in each other's loving embrace—a matter of immence importance which most of us have over looked in our struggle for the accumulation of pancakes and molasses and automobile tires. But history says so and that's the way it is. It is a matter of fact, generally conceded, that small and large towns are in the habit of being somewhat controversial and at swords points, in matters of trade, athletics and general community interests, but our Mason and Dixon line, while it has been the boundary line for some small matters of dispute between the two towns, has in no way influenced Cupid in its work. Cupid makes no recognition of small, unimportant differences in the business affairs of us humanitarians but ties people up according to hoyle, in the bonds of holy roly boly matrimony with out soliciting anybody's adivce. Cupid picks its inmates for the institution of the blind—regardless. We are giving our readers a list of the Spenceville boys that have married St. Joe girls—why and how.

It must be said these matrimonial combinations of matings, have according to our "why and how" deductions have all been howling successes. The history of these people have proven that. For instance, we deduce that: If the St. Joe girls were not the finest in the land, then the Spencerville boys were mentally deficient and had mighty poor judgment in choosing good mates. If the Spencerville boys were not the stuff then the St. Joe girls were too anxious to go somewhere. But of course, things have proven to the contrary and everything is O. K. instead of K. O. The following are the inmates:

Spencerville Boys	St. Joe Girls
George Henderson	Maude Culbertson
Harry Henderson	Anna Curie
Frank Beams	Maude Curie
William Quance	Martha Moon
Golden Benninghoff	Helen Bowman
Lee Chapman	Violet Kinsey

Pete Steward	Hazel Berry
William Fairfield	Hattie Hollabaugh

John Coburn is now home from the Peru hospital, having arrived Sunday. E. R. Kinsey made the trip. John is pleased to be home, and is feeling fine but is not out.

A runaway speeder caused some little excitement on the B. & O. Tuesday. The speeder went east about noon and the section men overtook it about the river bridge, making the chase with their motor car.

Printemps, an Offering in Spring Print Frock

Long before the fur coat goes into its tar bag, the printed frock arrives, bringing along its cheery spring note at just the moment when our winter clothes seem decidedly drab, says the Woman's Home Companion. Printemps is such a dress. It makes its bow to spring not only in silhouette and silk, but also in its three vestees, providing for that freshening touch a frock so often needs. It endorses the new length, the normal waistline and the low-placed flare, but with such moderation that though the frock is distinctly smart it is in no way extreme. Printemps made in a dainty printed silk showing greenish yellow berries on a brown and beige background would be youthfully sophisticated. Two of the vestees could be made of sheer handkerchief linen in the greenish yellow of the berries. For the third vestee with revers eggshell silk pique could be used.

Advance Spring Fashion; No Long Skirt Is Shown

This early spring outfit, offered by American designers who disregard the long skirt mode, is of printed crepe, with side bandings.

SPECIAL CLUB LEADERS MEETING HELD FRIDAY

"Making the Most of Your Furniture" was the topic presented to the DeKalb County Home Economics Club leaders in a meeting held Friday in the Assembly Room of the Court House by Miss Blanche Zaring, Home Furnishings Specialist of Purdue University.

Fundamental principles of selection and arrangement were emphasized, as well as personal factors entering into consideration in each particular choice. Miss Zaring stressed the fact that every room is a picture, either good or poor in design and showed how such art principles as proportion, unity, balance, rhythm, and simplicity must be employed in room arrangement, as well as in painting, if the best results are to be achieved.

Good taste is said to be worth more than money in this very important phase of home making. The woman who is equipped with a knowledge of what is available and what is really suitable to her own particular needs, may furnish a home which is more individual and interesting than one which is more pretentious but less wisely done.

Numerous helpful suggestions as to wide selection and comfortable, as well as artistic arrangement, were given the leaders who will in turn give the detailed instructions to their respective clubs. All DeKalb County women can benefit by this as well as other helps which will be given in the other meetings to follow. Those not now enrolled as club members will be welcomed by any club in their community or any interested group will gladly be given assistance in organizing by either the county agent or the county chairman, Mrs. Lola Carper.

The next meeting will be held early in April and will deal with a very practical problem; namely, the making of slip covers for furniture.

Those attending were: Grant township, Mrs. O. G. Rufner and Mrs. Chas. H. Walker; Wilmington township, Mrs. Mary Imhoff and Mrs. Lewis H. Keller; Franklin township, Mrs. A. A. Gould and Mrs. Ray Holman; Richland township, Mrs. Lula Mason and Mrs. Edyth M. Foote; Union township, Mrs. Arthur Steward and Mrs. B. E. Leach; Concord township, Mrs. A. J. Washler and Mrs. Marion Jennings; Smithfield township, Maude Brecbill and Mrs. Edna Kiplinger; Jackson township, Mrs. Blanche McNamara and Mrs. Lois Magginis; Spencer township, Miss Elizabeth Hart and Mrs. Ora Wilmot; Butler township, Mrs. Oscar Hoel and Mrs. Grace D. LOCAL MAN LEADS CENTRAL DISTRICT

A contest is now on between the 103 branch houses of America and the Manager of the Central District told the group that the hopes of his district lay in the leader of the district, Mr. Curie, who led the sales for the first thirty days by $9,000.

Sermon for Today

(Rev. B. W. Mayfield)

Mark 14: 15
"And Peter followed Him afar off"

Amidst the stirring scenes of our Lord's last days on earth, Peter and the other disciples were called upon to make proof of their courage.

After the arrest of Jesus, Peter's courage failed, and he dared not walk with the mob that led Jesus away. It was for fear of possible harm or injury that might follow, that Peter did not desire to be known as one of Christ's disciples, therefore he followed afar off. So it is with many today, they follow at a safe distance the Lord Jesus, or they do not practice too vigorously his plain precepts. Safety first is the motto of many in Religion as elsewhere.

What taxes the ingenuity of the average christian, is to see how little they can do for Christ and the Church, and how far away from Jesus they can walk, and how close to sin and worldliness they can come, and still call themselves Christians. If there is any sacrifice to make, they make as little as possible and talk much about it. If the load gets heavy to bear, they bear as small a portion as possible and pose as martyrs for the next ten years to come. Such people do not desire to lose sight entirely of the Lord, but they would be frightened if asked to have a closer walk with God. Such people imitate Peter in his "far off" experience.

A few weeks after the incident referred to in the text, Peter was filled with the Holy Spirit, then he possessed abundance of courage. Such an experience is our present need. We should lay aside mere formality in the celebration of feasts and days and find the real meaning of Christ's life on earth, which is plainly given in the following statements: "He died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto Him which died for them, and rose again." (2 Cor. 5: 15.)

"Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold all things are become new. (2 Cor. 5: 17.)

SPENCERVILLE CITIZEN DIED SUNDAY NIGHT

William Moore, who has been ill for several months, died on Sunday night at 12 o'clock at his home in Spencerville at the age of 60 years. He leaves his wife, three brothers and one sister. GRANDDAUGHTER OF MRS. SHERMAN RICKETT KILLED

Miss Beverly Alwood, 17, of Butler, was instantly killed and Joffrey Williams, living with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Williams, five miles south of Auburn, was taken to the Cammeron hospital at Angola with severe injuries as the result of an automobile accident Sunday evening. The accident occurred on the DeKalb-Steuben county line on state road No. 27.

A head concussion is thought to have killed Miss Alwood. She bled profusely from one of her ears, but there ewere no external marks which indicated a skull fracture. Her limbs were badly cut and her body was bruised. Mr. Williams received cuts and bruises. His condition is not serious.

A large inclosed car, said to have been driven by G. M. Semmes of Gary, Ind., is alleged to have sideswiped the car being driven by Mr. Williams.

Three automobiles were proceeding north on road 27 when it is alleged that Semmes started to go around them near the brow of an incline. A car coming from the north hooked into the Semmes car, which sideswiped the Williams car, sending it into the ditch down a steep incline.

The body of Miss Alwood was found about 20 feet south of where the car left the highway, lying in the road. Semmes voluntarily gave himself up to the authorities and was being questioned.

Miss Alwood lived at home with her parents. She is one of nine children. Last year she was a junior in the Butler high school, but had to quit after her mother became sick to assist at home. Mrs. Alwood will be remembered as Mae Dailey.

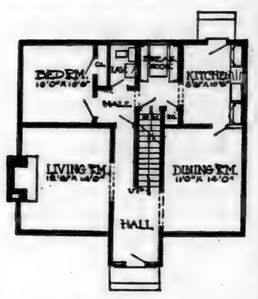
Delightful French Type Shingle Home Has an Appeal of Its Own

A delightful treatment of roof lines is one of the most pleasing features of this home but we cannot overlook the wide laid shingles, the neat shutters, the entrance light, brick steps, all the details which join to form a pleasing whole.

By W. A. RADFORD

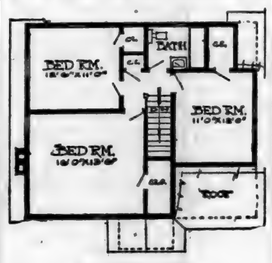
Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to practical home building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as editor, author and manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 407 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

A single glance at this shingled home will endear it to prospective home owners. It is of the cottage type and looks like a comfortable small house because of the lines the architect has given the roof. It is not small, however, because there are four rooms on the first floor and three rooms and bath on the second floor. The large amount of space is secured in this home through the dormers set in one side which gives space in the second half story for two bedrooms. The fourth bedroom is on the first floor.



First Floor Plan.

The attractive exterior of this home is secured through the use of shingles and the architectural design of the roof which gives the suggestion of a steep pitch making sharp gables. The entrance door extends out from the house proper and has the same steep pointed gable roof that the house itself has. How the rooms are arranged in this house and the dimensions of each are shown on the accompanying floor plans. It will be noted that the exterior is similar in a way to the usual Colonial layout of rooms. The wide entrance hall has the living room on one side and the dining room on the other with the stairs to the second floor running out of it. This hall leads back to the bedroom at the end of which is a lavatory. Back of the dining room is the kitchen with a breakfast nood adjoining. As all of these rooms are thus connected the floor plan makes the work of caring for the house comparitably easy.



Second Floor Plan

The three bedrooms upstairs are light and airy and one of them is unusually large, being 16 feet by 13 feet 6 inches.

A basement is provided for housing the heating plant and for storage.

Vapor Heating System Helps Cut Fuel Bills

There are three types of radiator heating systems in general use in residence construction today. Hot water, steam, and vapor.

Water is an ideal medium for conveying heat because it will supply a temperate, even heat that will not rob the air of its natural humidity. The system is clean in operation and flexible, that is, the temperature of the water may be varied to suit outdoor conditions.

All other types of radiator heating systems utilize steam as the heat-conveying medium. While the one-pipe steam system is the cheapest of all radiator heating systems, in recent years there has been a growing tendency, especially in new residence construction, toward the use of the vapor system.

A vapor heating system is a two-pipe steam heating system with the air eliminated from the pipes and radiators by means of an air eliminator in the basement and air traps at every radiator. It is called a vapor system because it utilizes steam at low pressures; at times operating under a partial vacuum. For this reason the water in the boiler of a vapor system has a very low boiling point—sometimes as low as 175 degrees.

The low boiling point of the water is one reason for the economy of fuel in a vapor system. The other reason why a vapor system is economical is the fact that with the air eliminated from the radiators only a small amount of steam pressure is necessary to force the steam into the radiators.

The fact that the air, once eliminated from the radiators, is prevented from re-entering accounts for the flexibility and responsiveness of the system.

Unlike the single-pipe steam job, the vapor system allows easy control of radiator temperature by means of the valves. Most vapor systems are installed with valves which may be opened one-quarter, one-half, three-quarters or full as the occasion demands. The vapor system is quiet in its operation. There is no noise or odor from air valves because the air is eliminated from the system in the basement.

Any type of steam heating system, whether it be a one-pipe steam system, a vapor, or a vacuum system, requires less radiation than a hot water system. Heating contractors ordinarily figure about 60 per cent more radiation for a hot water job than for a steam job.

While this is a saving in the installation cost, the thoughtful home-owner will not overlook the fact that the larger amount of radiation in a hot water system will tend to give off a more temperate heat and, since the radiators are not so hot, the velocity of the air currents is less than in the case of a steam heating system.

With reference to installation costs, the three types of radiator heating systems are rated in the following order by heating contractors: A one-pipe steam job is the cheapest. A vapor system costs about 25 per cent more than a one-pipe steam system and a hot water system costs about 35 per cent more than a one-pipe steam system.

Wood Trim in Darker Shade Than Room Wall

Two schemes are in general use for the finishing of woodwork, either as a part of the wall or as a part of the furniture. The former is, in most cases, preferable. As a part of the wall it should be a shade or two darker of the same color as the wall. This insures harmony and good taste, and gives that restful effect of space so much to be desired.

In the second method the woodwork takes the color of the furniture, or, perhaps, only the doors and permanent furniture are given the furniture color, while baseboards, cornices and "standing trim" have the wall color. This method may be successfully used in large rooms, or in rooms that have a relatively small amount of woodwork, so that it does not distract the attention from the sum total of the room.

Finish for interior woodwork may be gloss, semigloss or dull. The high gloss is most easily kept clean, but does not usually please the eye as well as a dull finish. The flat finishes are much more artistic, and when properly done are quite as serviceable. There is now on the market an oil which produces distinctive effects in eggshell and satin finishes without laborious rubbing or even stipling and which is washable and very durable.

Lacquer Is Gaining Rapidly in Favor

Lacquer is a finish rapidly gaining in favor. The material itself is a rather complicated chemical combination of guncotton, solvents, drier and pigment, all of which, when combined, give a quick-drying, opaque finish with a beauty all its own. A big asset of lacquer is its quick-drying property, but the colors also have a certain richness of tone and the finish a luster which cannot be duplicated exactly in any other type of finish.

The SANDMAN STORY

ABOUT THE COLD WAVE

ANOTHER cold wave was due to arrive, and this time it came. It came hurrying in from the west to the east, having a fine chilly trip along the way.

The trees swayed and creaked, the shadows played with the snowdrifts, and rivers and lakes all smilingly let the ice cover them over.

Snowflakes Came Along and Waved Their Hands to Their Friends.

Snowflakes came along and waved their hands to their friends.

Others said:

"What is this!"

And the snowflakes said to themselves:

"Don't they recognize a snowstorm when they see one, or do they forget our faces as they do people's faces and remember that we look familiar but don't know just who we are!"

Anyone could tell it was really winter outside by the way everything and every one looked and felt.

But it was splendidly cold, and the cold wave, breezing along as it did, was enjoying itself hugely.

Sea gulls were seeking shelter in the coves.

They sat on pieces of ice and drifted along with the river tide, but then they, too, disappeared.

Then the snowstorm began flying over the pavements—then the pavements would be quite dry as the snow swirled above and landed or drifted somewhere else—and then more snow came swirling around.

The swirling snow had to hurry—it had a number of engagements to keep and it was acting much excited about them, not being able to settle down in any place, thinking of the numbers of places still to be visited.

Oh, it was most interesting weather.

And then at last the cold wave grew tired of all the land and it went out—blew right out to sea where it joined the cold waters of the ocean and the cold air and wind that blew above it so that storms raged over the sea and the weather was very, very cold.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

MOVING THE CAT

IN MOST parts of this country and Canada it is considered bad luck to take the cat along when a family moves to another house. But while this superstition appears to be nearly universal yet, according to the publications of the American Folk-Lore society, it is regarded in some parts as extremely bad luck not to move the cat. Superstitions many times suffer strange distortions in their travels from age to age and land to land, and that "not" in the variant of the general belief regarding the moving of the family cat may have got in by accident. Or it is possibly a survival based upon an entirely different idea from that of the general superstition.

The general superstitions with regard to moving pussy has evidently no kinship with the many cat superstitions deriving from the relationship of the cat to Isis and the moon. It prevails among Anglo-Saxons and its origin must be looked for the way the cat was regarded in Britain in ancient days where she was looked upon as a mystic animal intimately connected with witchcraft. The cat—especially the black cat because she was more weird looking than others—was thought to be a favorite form for a witch to take when she wished to transform herself into an animal and also to be frequently the abode of a witch's "familiar spirit."

Pussy is a weird creature anyway; especially when she pauses in her ablutions suddenly and looks at you with those eyes of hers that seem to be reading your past and future, searching your very soul. No wonder she was looked upon by our simple ancestors with suspicion. Now one of the cat's most uncanny and inexplicable powers is that of finding her way back from a long distance to her former home. She dislikes a change of abode—and shows it. And it is not well to offend a cat by moving her. For who knows what is at the bottom of that weird power by which she negotiates her return?

Why We Do What We Do

by M. K. THOMSON, Ph. D.

WHY WE WANT TO GO TO HEAVEN

WE BELIEVE in heaven for the hope of getting what is denied us in this life. Hence, no two of us believe in exactly the same kind of a heaven.

The human sense of justice and fair play demand a time and a place where all wrongs and inequalities are set right. Heaven is that place.

The ancients, for example, believed that the brave soldiers who died in battle would go to Vahalla, a special kind of heaven with 540 gates out of which the warriors go to fight each morning and return at night to feast with the gods. The Mohammedan believes that if he dies in battle he will go at once to an elaborate harem with forty beautiful angels for wives.

It is supposed that the restriction and self-denials of the moral life need to be offset by some sort of rewards later on in some other form of existence. Belief in heaven serves to steady the purpose of living a good and unselfish life.

Heaven as a place of eternal rest was especially attractive to people years ago because life for them was not altogether a bed of roses. They had to struggle for the bare necessities of life and were always careworn and weary. Rest and plenty of it was what they demanded most.

The belief in heaven and the desire of going there is also prompted by the hope of immortality. The love of life is strong in human beings. We want to keep on living somewhere even after we die. Heaven is that "beautiful land of somewhere."

The desire for heaven is not as strong a motive as it used to be. As life becomes more attractive there is less demand for a place where unfulfilled desires are realized.

Dear Editor:

YOUNG as I am—don't laugh—I still can see that life is mostly what we make it.

For instance, recently a young fellow told me he's underpaid and he wants a new job. I told him, what is true, that he is getting excellent training where he is, that a dozen men envy him his chance, and that he's on his way to success right now.

He answered with a growl.

And then I noticed that the lad needed a shave. No wonder, I thought, that he's sour on the world. No wonder he feels neglected! This internal chemistry of ours is so delicate that a man doesn't need much to upset his vision entirely.

Anything can look wrong to a man who doesn't shave every morning.—Fred Barton.

Brief and to the Point

A boy was sent by his loving parents, who had coddled him a good deal at home, to a big public school.

He had been strictly enjoined to write home regularly and tell them all about himself and his new life.

At the end of a week his first letter arrived. It consisted only of a single line:

"There are 870 boys here," he wrote. "I wish there were 869."

For Meditation

OPPORTUNITIES IN AMERICA

TWO persons visiting America from foreign lands take away different impressions. One is impressed with our cultural advantages, music, architecture, parks, museums, colleges, economic resources, etc., while the other person is impressed only by the sordidness and extravagance of our large cities. The interesting fact is that each person saw just what he looked for. In other words, the impressions were but reflections of inner impulses and desires.

L. A. Barrett.

A striking case where opportunities were eagerly sought and deeply appreciated, was that of Edward William Bok. He came to this country at the early age of six. Born of distinguished parents (his father having been minister to the Court of William III) he began his career as a messenger boy in a telegraph office. After graduating from our schools he entered upon a literary career and rose rapidly until he became editor of the Ladies' Home Journal. He also wrote books and many magazine articles. Perhaps his most important book was "The Americanization of Edward Bok," published in 1920.

In addition to his distinguished success both as a writer and publisher, he will be remembered for two outstanding acts. His gift of $100,000 as a prize for the best treatise on the establishment of international peace; the other was the erection of the Singing Tower in Florida. He was a lover of the beautiful and this tower will remain an expression of the beauty that lived within his own soul.

Mr. Bok died recently and his remains rest at the base of the Singing Tower he built.

Here was a man who saw opportunities for service to his fellow man. He achieved a remarkable success from a very humble beginning. He will always be remembered as a self-made man. Opportunities like those which came to Mr. Bok are all around us today. Whether we seize them or even see them depends not so much upon outward conditions as inner impulses.

What we earnestly desire to see determines what we are.

Beauty

Beauty is a great thing, but beauty of garment, house and furniture are tawdry ornaments compared with domestic love. All the elegance in the world will not make a home, and I would give more for a spoonful of real hearty love than for whole shiploads of furniture and all the gorgeousness the world can gather.—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

Lonely Hearts

WILBERT has a heart of gold. Will no one tell him what's the matter—why girls turn pale, and gracious matrons freeze at his approach? Yes, we will. This has gone far enough. Get a new pipe, Wilbert, and break it in gently, thoughtfully, with Sir Walter Raleigh's favorite smoking mixture. When the curling wisps of its fragrance surround you, everything will be changed, Wilbert.

How to Take Care of Your Pipe

(Hint No. 3) To make your pipe sweet from top to heel, smoke all the pipe load when you break it in, or fill the bowl half full the first few times so that the heel, and not merely the top, will be broken in. Dewey Flagship to Be a National Shrine

The Olympia, Admiral Dewey's flagship during the Spanish-American war, shown above as she rests in the Phil adelphia navy yard, is almost certainly to be preserved. Every Fire Represents Dollars Lost for Ever

The most rudimentary intelligence should be able to grasp the fact that every fire represents an irretrievable and unnecessary economic and social waste. A dollar spent in purchasing a commodity multiplies itself many fold. It is never inactive, and the entire nation is benefited by its service. A dollar lost because of fire can never be replaced. It has gone out of circulation and a black mark is placed against our record of prosperity. It is a common fallacy to believe that insurance "pays" for a fire. As a matter of fact, insurance can do nothing to offset the loss. It can merely recompense the few with funds collected from the nation at large. For every dollar paid in losses an insurance company must take in at least a dollar in premiums. Our gigantic record of fire waste belies our intelligence as a nation. Part of the income of every citizen is, directly or indirectly, destroyed by fire. Every fire, whether it consumes a great factory or a dog house, acts as a drag on progress.—Goshen Democrat.

New Jersey Will Keep Its Scenic Attractions

A forward step in the campaign to preserve the beauty of the American countryside against the encroachments of modern advertising was taken by the board of freeholders of Warren county, New Jersey, when they adopted a resolution requiring the removal from the roadsides in that county of all billboards and advertising signs, even political posters.

Warren county, in the northwestern part of the state, is a region of rolling hils and rural vistas, with the Delaware water gap as one of its scenic attractions.

The freeholders decided that the unsightly representation on the billboards of articles of commerce constitute a nuisance, an eyesore, and a hindrance to the more charming prospect of the landscape—and that the billboards must give way.—Detroit Free Press.

House Should "Tie In"

The house which is finished in a combination of materials on the exterior walls must be very carefully designed. Too many times we see houses on which apparently little thought has been given to architectural charm, and the resulting "hodge-podge" of materials leads us to wonder if certain material had run short, necessitating the substitution of something else.

Every one has heard the statement that a new house should be designed to fit the site. In crowded suburban communities the most important of these factors to be considered are the houses on either side. To cite an instance, if a stucco house stands on one side of your property, and a brick one on the other the natural method of tying in with these two suggests the house with brick, stucco and siding in combination.

Home Setting Important

The house is the center of the little portion of the earth's surface we call home. To it lead the drives and paths, around it lie the lawns and gardens that mean so much to the hours of our recreation and delight. To make the surrounding a picture of harmony is to make the house truly a home.

Does your front entrance, a most prominent picture, have that air of both welcome and dignity so much desired? Are those paths and drives bordered with evergreen hedges, as well as your rose and perennial gardens? If so you are fortunate, indeed, but remember, no place should be considered complete until the patriarch of the evergreen tribe, the specimen box, is planted.—Exchange.

City Must "Sell" Itself

Philadelphia is starting out to spend $1,000,000 on a three-year compaign to advertise the city and its industries. This, although the city is not a summer resort, has no extraordinary vacation attractions to offer and, having its growth, does not have to go after new business as a newer community must do.

The enterprise is a reminder that communities, like business, must advertise to hold their own in this highly competitive age, and it is significant that the schedule of Philadelphia's campaign is using newspaper space extensively.

Benefit of Zoning Laws

Zoning is an effort on the part of cities or counties to protect the interests of the business man and the home owner so each may realize the highest possible values from his land. For, although the tendencies toward grouping according to similar use are very definite tendencies there are people who from motives of self interest would oppose this natural tendency, if zoning laws and restrictions did not operate to protect the general interest of the property owners of the area as a whole.

Plant Something

The home builder of a generation ago did not realize the investment value of planting, but the wise ones today know better. The real estate agents know this, too.—Country Home.

YOU HAVE A DOCTOR'S WORD FOR THIS LAXATIVE

In 1875, an earnest young man began to practice medicine. As a family doctor, he saw the harm in harsh purgatives for constipation and began to search for something harmless to the sensitive bowels.

Out of his experience was born a famous prescription. He wrote it thousands of times. It proved an ideal laxative for old and young. As people saw how marvelously the most sluggish bowels are started and bad breath, headaches, feverishness, nausea, gas, poor appetite, and such disorders, are relieved by the prescription, it became necessary to put it up ready for use. Today, Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, as it is called, is the world's most popular laxative. It never varies from Dr. Caldwell's original effective and harmless formula. All drugstores have it.

What's the difference between Church-anity and Christianity?

That's alright, let 'em take the census just so they don't take ous senses.

Which is the easier, to tell your neighbor to go to church Sunday or "Go to ——."

Pretty soon now we will be in the throes of election excitements when we will be called on to solemnly say with bowed head, "Now is the time for all true men to come to the aid of their party."

The question is: When will there be people living on the earth so good and true to the christian standard of living, that men will find it necessary to hunt around for a new alibi in answer to why they do not go to church?

In these days of consolidations of both similar or dissimilar businesses we might be called on to view the latest thing in consolidations—that of a grocery store and a bank. The combination could loan money to its customers to buy goods from itself and—elsewhere.

In speaking of the increase of crime of this country it must be remembered that in all the history of the fallen nations the dominant cause of all immoral degredation and down fall was the lack of spiritual morality and not just moral morality. There is two kinds of everything—even morality.

How would it suit you if you could hop in your neighbor's shoes and carry his load under the circumstances that he labors under? Some men have done this and the result is that they are now wiser and broader citizens today as a result. The secet is—the other fellow's view point.

Wind is a Close Second to Fire

In destuction and damage to property, high winds are almost as culpable as fire. A wind need not be of tornado force to do serious damage; nor is wind damage a hazard peculiar to any section of the country. Exceedingly high and dangerous wind movements have occurred in almost every section of the country and history will undoubtedly repeat itself. Windstorm Insurance is very moderate in cost.

It doesnt take any more chicken intelligence on our part to say that the Almighty God should repeal the ten commandments than it does to say that we ought to repeal the Volstead Law. The THOU SHALT NOT–NESS of either of the above doesn't leave any loopholes. The ten commandments and the dry law are entirely too fitting.

Whatever might be said about the over-emphasizing of athletics in our public schools, there is one argument that is indisputable in favor of athletics in the high school curriculum. Athletics get students for our school and keeps them. Athletics promotes good health. Better it is for a student to get a half of a high school education than get none at all even if he put half his time on games, etc. Anything that produces good is indispensable. Work and play —wins the day.

REPLY IS MADE TO MR. INQUIRER

This beast as described in these verses is the same beast mentioned in the eleventh verse of this chapter. Another beast is described in the preceding verses of this same chapter. The first beast is a religious power or government. The beast spoken of in verses 16 and 17 is a political government symbolized by a man, see verse 18.

In the middle of the chapter one can see that these two beasts or powers are in league with each other.

The second beast is a deceiver; verse 14. He will control the markets of the entire world and commands people to worship an image made in honor of the first or religious power.

The mark is the willingness or disposition on the part of people to comply with the wishes and desires of the beasts.

Those who will not comply with the wishes of the beasts will have to suffer. See verse 15.

Stirring times are ahead for the world; but finally the Lord and truth shall prevail. See verse 14 of the 17th chapter.

Good Night!

E. R. reports that a friend of his was visiting in Berlin with his brother's family. The chambermaid was accustomed to say good night, letting her mistress know that she was retiring. And she did. Entering the room she said: "Good night, madam; I go to bed now."

The mistress was not unduly embarrassed, but next day she cautioned the girl. "You needn't say good night to me when guests are present, Hilda." And Hilda bobbed her head.

That night she entered the drawing room, ignored her mistress and approaching the visiting gentleman, said softly: "Good night; I go to bed now," and walked out.—Boston Transcript.

CAPED FROCKS OF PRINTED CREPE; TAFFETA OR SATIN FOR EARLY WEAR

YOU can tell the moment you glimpse a frock of gay printed crepe made with a cape, that it is distinctly advance. There's nothing smarter on the boards than these caped prints.

The spring costume in the picture flaunts a cape of circular cut, the neckline finished with a soft tie of self-print. The quest for these new printed costumes will reveal many plaited cape versions as well, the plaits falling from a fitted round yoke. Frequently the skirt is plaited to match the cape.

SWAGGER COSTUME FOR SPRING

To emphasize its modishness, the really and truly up-to-the-moment gown of piquant print worn with a matching cape, instead of going utterly sleeveless as one might suppose, takes upon itself quaint little puffs or cap sleeves. Thus with the cape removed, the gown gives further evidence of its smart styling, for tiny novelty sleeves are the latest whim of fashion.

It is interesting to note how most every gown has its matching wrap or should have. If not a cape then a bolero jacket is made of the same materials as the dress or skirt and if neither of these then a hip-length or finger-tip coat.

The leaf design of the print pictured bespeaks that which is among the newest in patterned silks. Fruit motifs are also very new.

One would be inclined to think that polka dots had outlived their popularity. On the contrary there is a veritable stampede of dots in the fabric realm. Not only are large bold dotted effects good, but the very latest silks are pin-dotted. The latter in black or navy with white dots so tiny they look like pin pricks, are conspicuously featured for immediate wear. Frocks made of these neat silks are cuffed and collared very effectively with rows of white organdie petals.

Even newer than dots are the attractive star-patterned silks which are included in every display of spring prints.

Early Spring Hats.

Providing it is a soft unlined affair, that is to say, without stiffness, a hat of taffeta or satin is very smart for spring. A little cap like the model pictured first in this group, made either of black satin or taffeta, color-matched to the costume, makes an admirable "first hat."

In its back-bow treatment this model conveys a very important style message. Even the hats with brims display their bow trimmings across the back. The bow may be very tiny or it may be a huge arrangement of loops and ends extended so as to show from the front.

Speaking of bows, surely this may be aptly called a "bow season." The new frocks and blouses are animated with whole flocks of bows and milady's hat follows suit in this matter of bow trimmings.

The motif on the shapely hat to the right at the top is in line with the season's trend which combines felt with both straw and fabric in the fashioning of the new chapeaux. The mode decrees that hats must frame the face to a flattering degree, and the long, side drape given to this hat carries out these instructions.

In fashion circles we are hearing much in regard to transparent effects. Dresses are of the filmiest sort, fashioned as they are of thin laces, nets, chiffon and sheerest of woolens. Even things knitted are running to lacy openwork patternings. What is true in regard to frocks and blouses concerning transparency, pertains also to hats for spring and the ensuing summer. Wherefore the revival of old-time horsehair braid as a medium for chic millinery is to be expected.

Two fetching models of horsehair are herewith illustrated. In the in stance of each of these hats the crown is fitted very snugly to the head, which is a point meticulously observed by the milliner this season.

SOME NEW HATS

The shape to the left is an extreme type, emphasizing the vogue for silhouettes which frame the face. The brim of this hat surrounds the forehead in a halo of transparency—an effect which is growing in favor, milliners using malines, horsehair braid, lacy straws or thread lace to achieve it.

Lace straw is the smartest of the smart new media for hats, according to advance millinery displays. Though made of straw, the lace follows the actual patternings of thread lace.

"First Aid—Home Remedy Week" Coming

The Good Samaritan is pictured as "The First First Aid" in the national reminder which has been sent to druggists all over America, announcing the 9th anniversary of "First Aid—Home Remedy Week," fixed for March 16-23.

The idea of an advertising-merchandising one-a-year drive timed with spring house cleaning was given to the drug world by Sterling Products, Incorporated, in 1922. Preparedness for meeting accident or sudden illness is emphasized as a sensible and seasonable sales plan which serves to alleviate needless suffering and undoubtedly save life.

The National Association of Retail Druggists sponsored this ad-sales plan and later added Pharmacy Week as an autumn festival for intensive advertising and salesmanship in the drug world.

The National Wholesale Druggists Association and the National Association of Drug Clerks have joined the N. A. R. D. in establishing these festivals of selling as Spring and Autumn fixtures for the welfare of humanity.

"Fill That Medicine Chest Now" is the slogan of "First Aid—Home Remedy Week," and has been from the beginning. It was Dr. William E. Weiss, himself a graduate from the ranks of retail druggists, who first saw the value of "First Aid—Home Remedy Week," and wherever live-wire druggists have co-operated by showing a window filled with suggestive first aids both for accident or illness, and using their home newspaper advertising space, they have added cheerfully to their March business.

"Makes More Bread Than Any Flour I Ever Used"

Mrs. G. H. Blodgett
R. R. No. 1, Waverly, Minn.

"Never a Failure With Gold Medal 'Kitchen-tested' Flour. The Only Flour For My Family" Says Mrs. Blodgett

"My neighbor who bakes 28 to 30 loaves of bread a week came over one day in tears. She said her bread turned out like lead and almost black. I told her it served her right because she did not use Gold Medal Flour that's 'Kitchen-tested'. She got a sack of Gold Medal and she said, 'Why, that flour is just like cake flour'. I told her there's never a failure with Gold Medal—besides it makes more bread than any kind of flour I ever used."

It's Easy Now For Women To Have Baking Success

NO longer need they worry about perfect results. Now, they can be sure of success every time with pies and cakes, bread and biscuits. They use a new-type flour for all baking purposes—GOLD MEDAL "Kitchen-tested" Flour—that simplifies baking remarkably and banishes the cause of most baking failures.

Failures, experts found, were mostly due to the fact that 2 sacks of the same flour often acted differently, even with the same recipe . . . it was not uniform in oven action.

So now all GOLD MEDAL Flour is 'Kitchen-tested" before it comes to you. As each batch comes through the mill it is tested by actual baking—bread, cakes, biscuits, pastries—in an oven just like yours. Only flour which acts the same perfect way every time is allowed to go out to you. Thus you know in advance exactly what your results will be.

"Sir," he cried, "what do you mean by such conduct in my house? Eddy, come away from him. I will attend to this myself. Ellen, come here to me.

But Ginger had forgotten the disgrace that yawned at her feet, had forgotten the home for the blind, the threatening jail. She looked at her father, and she saw only his face, saw his eyes, dark-circled, brilliant, but clear and steady in their gaze.

"Father," she whispered, and her whisper was a song. She crept toward him timidly, as one half afraid, her hands outstretched, a sob in her throat —"Oh, father—you—see—me!"

Startled, instinctively, as one who has shielded a bruised thing for many weeks will naturally do, he dashed his hands shelteringly across his eyes But he removed them at once, and stared back at the girl's glad white face.

"Why, so I do," he muttered. "Yes, I do."

Ginger flung her arms about him. "Oh, darling, how wonderful of you," she cried. "How stubborn of you! You always go just by contraries, don't you? They said a shock would blind you forever, and instead it has made you well. Oh, darling, let them take me to jail, I don't care a bit, it is worth it!"

The postman, in depths of self-abasement, was torn between joy for his pastor and shame for his own share in this humiliating scene, but Ginger and her father were momentarily transported far above the mere mundane annoyances of common life. The inspector, studying them all, was puzzled. It might be a ruse—but it did not seem to be a ruse.

"See here, there's no mistake, is there? You are E. Tolliver, aren't you? You do claim to be the treasurer of the parsonage home for the blind?"

"Yes, I claim it all. I admit everything, and I'm glad of it. But there isn't any blind, any more. Go on, take me to jail. I never thought of using the mails to defraud, because really, it wasn't a fraud. Father was blind."

"You see, she doesn't realize what she has done," argued Eddy stoutly.

"Ellen," her father's voice was low and shocked, "do you mean to tell me that you—solicited money for a home for the blind—"

Ginger flushed crimson, and swiftly paled, but she did not flinch. "Yes, I did, father. By a chain letter. And it went like wildfire. Ten cents apiece. That's why I paid everything in dimes, Eddy."

"But, my child, it is—almost stealing—"

"Oh, father, no. Doesn't it say in the Bible that the servants of God are to get what they need? And you know we did need it!"

"But Ellen—it was plain begging."

"Well, all church work is. Collections are begging. And is it any worse to take money, if you can get it, from publicans and sinners, than from stewards and trustees?"

"There's at least a full bushel of mail at the office—" interrupted the inspector.

"A bushel of dimes!" she ejaculated. "And it's got to go back where it came from. Every cent of it." But even the inspector's severity had relaxed somewhat. "Now I guess we can fix this up, if you, sir, will go bail for it that she doesn't start any more funny business.

"I'm afraid you'll have to go down with us, sir. There's a deal of red tape to go through with. And the money to send back—"

"I will come at once. I—I am so surprised—so shocked," stammered the confused father, "I can't tell you how sorry I am. I never dreamed that—Ellen, if you had told me, if you had asked me—"

"Oh, father, I—only wanted to help you. I— Wait a minute!"

She ran quickly up the stairs, and in the hallway above they could hear her nervously quick movements, as she balanced the ladder against the wall, and pushed open the trapdoor to the attic.

"I can't imagine how she came to do such a thing," apologized the troubled father anxiously. "But she meant all right. She was so eager to take care of me—"

"Oh, she's just a kid," assented the inspector. "We all know what kids are."

Ginger's feet were pounding down the stairs again, and they awaited her coming in silence. She crossed the room and stood before the inspector, slim and slight, but with straight shoulders, as one willing to bear the burden of her wrongdoing.

"Here!" Into the hands of the astonished inspector she pressed an old doll's trunk, and it was heavy. "It's the rest of the dimes," she explained. "I don't know where they came from, I burned the little white angels—I mean the letters. And I spent lots of the dimes, too, for ever so many things, dresses, and stockings, and even food. These are all that are left."

"Well, now," said the inspector awkwardly, "I don't rightly know what to do with this—but I reckon I'd better take it along. Will you come, sir? We have a car."

"I will go with you," offered Hiram Buckworth.

"You'd better wear dark glasses, father," cautioned Ginger. "You mustn't see too much too soon. And, officer, if anybody has to go to jail, don't you take him. You come and get me."

"Oh, nobody'll have to go to jail. We'll fix this up. And you will promise to be a good little girl—"

Ginger nodded her head nervously. Her eyes glistened with tears that she held in check.

In a short while they were all gone and she was alone again with Eddy. The house was very still. She stood in the center of the room and stared blackly into space, stared and stared. Suddenly a great storm welled in her breast. The pain of it scorched her throat, tortured her eyes. She threw herself among the cushions in a corner of the couch, and sobbed as though her heart would break.

CHAPTER XIII

A shamed and huddled heap, Ginger lay in the corner of the big couch, weeping stormily, her slim shoulders shaken with her sobs, while Eddy stood awkwardly before her, sadly watching. After a while, unnoticed, he sank down beside her, and waited for the passion of her emotion to spend itself, and at last, unobtrusively, he put his arm about her, by gentle pressure drawing her from the shabby silken cushions to his shoulder.

"Don't cry, Ginger. It isn't so bad. They'll fix it up all right, and no one will ever know. Your father will just have to assure your good conduct in the future, that's all. Don't cry."

Ginger was not to be comforted. Her beautiful dream was dead—nay, had been ruthlessly murdered, choked by coarse hands, crushed by a heavy heel. All that she had hoped for, planned for, worked for, had come to naught.

"It was so beautiful," she sobbed. "It was just beautiful while it lasted. And now it is only ridiculous."

"Oh, no, Ginger. Nothing can be ridiculous that is done in love," he said wisely.

She squirmed uncomfortably. "Oh, I did it in love," she admitted, "but I was pretty stuck on myself for doing it, just the same. I was awfully hipped on myself—I thought I was pretty smart all right."

"Well, it was smart—in a way," he said carefully. "Of course, it was wrong, too—in a way. It really was false pretenses—and using the mails to defraud, and all that. But you didn't know it was wrong."

But Ginger was not willing to be lifted ever so little from the depths of her self-abasement.

"Well, I wasn't at all sure it was right," she confessed ruefully. "I always felt ashamed because the people said such kind things in their letters, and I knew they were being fooled. But I told myself that such a good man as father, and a minister and all, had a right to be taken care of. And I tried to tell father about it, but—always I didn't. I told myself I wanted to surprise him later on—but I think I knew he wouldn't let me."

"The trouble with you, Ginger, is your mathematics," he said very gently.

She gazed at him a moment in speechless wonder.

"Math—"

"Yes. You know that a whole lie is wrong—but you figure that a half a lie is no lie at all. I've—er—noticed that about you several times."

Ginger smiled tremulously at that, and a fresh rain of tears swept her face.

"I know it," she confessed abjectly, "I know it. But it is so much easier to get what you want that way—"

"Oh, Ginger!"

How Ginger wept! The past was a wreckage of delicate dreams, the present a wave of disillusionment, the future swept bare by the relentless winds of certain privation.

"Oh, Eddy, I can't stand it—I simply can't!"

Slowly, very gently, he turned her head upon his shoulder, lifted her face to his, and, for the first time, kissed the trembling, tear-wet lips. Ginger's hand gripped his shoulder. He held her close in his arms, moved his lips gently across her wet cheek, pressed them upon the damp curls that clustered at her temple. The slender little figure grew suddenly tense in his arms, her hand clung to his shoulder. After a long still moment she drew away from him, slowly, and looked at him mistily, with troubled eyes, whose tears seemed lost in wonder. Eddy did not flinch before that wide-eyed questioning gaze.

Firmly he patted away the last of her tears, and then, almost defiantly, before her very eyes, he leaned toward her, kissed her again. She did not protest. When he released her, she lay limply in his arm, her face close to his face, and stared as one spellbound—that old, familiar face, which seemed suddenly very new and strange—beautiful—to her.

"Like me, Ginger?" he asked gently.

Ginger's answer was a startled jerky bob of her head. A half-smile quivered to her lips, to be quickly banished by the strange wide look of wonder.

"Why?" he insisted. "Because I'm like your father?"

Her hand tightened its grip on his shoulder. Her cheek pressed his.

"You—you're not—just like my father," she whispered.

"Ginger, you darling—you dear little darling—"

No word of protest from Ginger.

His hands caressed her. His lips sought the curve of her slender throat.

"I know you hate to be pawed—"

"Oh, Eddy," she interrupted indignantly, "you don't paw. You're not that kind."

Her small hand found itself upon his cheek, her slim fingers touched it, stroked it, with a caressiveness as old as the world.

"I know I'm not at all a romantic figure—"

Ginger drew away from him. There was cold indignation in her eyes, scorn for herself, her young girlish folly. She saw, as for the first time, the tender warmth of his gray eyes, the fine firm lines of his kind lips, the strong assurance in the poise of his head—all the clean honest niceness of the old familiar face. And her heart cried out to him, remembering his thousands sympathies through so many exigencies, his unfailing humor, his untiring interest. And Ginger, humbled afresh before this sweet new revelation of the old, old friend, cried our reproachfully:

"Oh, Eddy—wasn't—I—dumb!"

[THE END]

Old Custom of Telling Bees of Owner's Death

A reader in the United States sends me a cutting from an American newspaper telling how the late Dr. Charles James, chemist and mineralogist, owned 14 hives of bees, and how after his death one swarm disappeared and was found buzzing about the flowers on his grave more than two miles away, Peter Simple writes, in the London Post.

Apparently, we are told, the bees had not been informed of his death in accordance with the ancient custom, which is still religiously fulfilled in country places.

I am afraid I can not enlighten my correspondent, who passes on to me the query of the journal in question: "Who first thought of telling the bees of the death of their master?"

As far as history carries us back we have some record of the keeping of bees, and the custom of telling the bees is very likely almost as old as bee-keeping. It has all the appearance of a rite which originated in very early times, and the fact that it still survives is a touching proof that we still cling, in some things at least, to the wisdom—or folly—of our ancestors.

Longest Lived Animal

A giant tortoise that was an intimate of the great Napoleon is still living on the island of St. Helena, says T. G. Boulenger, director of the London zoo, in Animal Mysteries. Tortoises attain a greater age than any other animal. Several of these creatures, weighing over 550 pounds each, owned by Lord Rothschild, the banker, were close on three centuries old when scientific claims put an end to their protracted existence.

JESUS TEACHING AND HEALING

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 13:53-16:12. (Print Matthew 15:21-31)

GOLDEN TEXT—Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus' Kindness to a Stranger.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus' Kindness to a Stranger.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Faith that Wins.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Faith Tested and Triumphant.

The material embraced in this section of Scripture is too abundant to attempt to cover in one lesson, therefore selection should be made in keeping with the lesson topic.

I. Without Honor in One's Own Country (13:54-58).

Jesus shared the common fate of men—unacknowledged in His own country. Even His own brothers did not believe on Him till after His resurrection (John 7:3-8; cf. Acts 1:14). Familiarity has a paralyzing effect, and at times breeds contempt. Because of unbelief only a limited work could be done there.

II. Jesus Healing the Multitude (14:13, 14).

1. He retired to the desert (v. 13).

The news of the cruel death of John the Baptist brought grief to the Master's heart, and He withdrew to a place of quietness to commune with His Father. The best thing to do in time of sorrow is to flee into the presence of God. Jesus accepted John's death as typical of His own.

2. Followed by the people (v. 13).

He could not be concealed. The peoples' interest was such that they followed Him on foot. Where Jesus is, the multitude gathers.

3. Jesus healing the sick (v. 14).

Although the rulers had broken with Him, He did not abandon His work. He continued to preach and work for the good of those who would hear. Though desperate and hopeless cases were brought to Him, nothing was found too hard for Him. The peoples' great need excited His sympathy. He is just the same today.

III. Jesus Healing the Daughter of the Woman at Canaan (Matt. 15:21-31).

The first twenty-one verses of this chapter should be considered in connection with this topic. The force of the lesson can only be seen in contrast with the failure of the people. Verses 1-20 represent the apostasy of Israel and her rejection of the Savior. In sharp contrast, we see in the healing of this woman, salvation typically going forth to the Gentiles.

1. The mother's awful distress (vv. 21, 22).

Her daughter was grievously vexed with a devil. The sufferings of the mother were perhaps as intense as those of the child. This Gentile woman had doubtless heard of the fame of Jesus. His power to heal had come to her notice and many times she longed for Him to come her way that her daughter might be healed. Now that He was in her neighborhood she came straightway to Him. Let parents be encouraged to bring their children to Jesus, even though they be demon-possessed.

2. The woman's fervent appeal for help (vv. 22-25).

She fell at His feet and pled for mercy. She besought Him to cast the devil out. Her appeal may be considered as a model prayer.

(1) She was sincere and earnest. (2) The prayer was brief and definite. (3) It was personal and humble. (4) It was believing and persistent.

3. The woman's faith rewarded (vv. 26-28).

(1) The Lord's apparent refusal (v. 23). He answered her not a word. The reason for His silence was that He was sent to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. This woman was a stranger to the Covenant people. Her appeal was on the wrong basis. She addressed Him as the Son of David, which only a child of the kingdom had a right to do. She must come in the right way. (2) The woman's quick response (vv. 25-27). As soon as she perceived the difficulty, she worshiped Him as Lord and cried for help. While only the Israelite could approach Him as the Son of David, all could come to Him and own Him as Lord. She willingly took her place as a Gentile "dog," recognizing that salvation is of the Jews. (3) The glorious issue of her faith (v. 28). She received more than she asked. Her daughter was healed at once and the instruction she received was worth much to her. She goes down in history with the Savior's commendation of her faith.

Life Needs a Good Pattern

Remember how swiftly the shuttle flies and how a broken thread may mar the fabric. Remember that without a good pattern, all weaving is to no purpose; take much thought, therefore, as to the pattern of a good life and be greatly instructed by that life which is the exemplar for us all.—Gaius Glenn Atkins.

Love, Faith, Obedience

Love, faith, and obedience are sides of the same prism.—McDonald.

Acidity

The common cause of digestive difficulties is excess acid. Soda cannot alter this condition, and it burns the stomach. Something that will neutralize the acidity is the sensible thing to take. That is why physicians tell the public to use Phillips Milk of Magnesia.

One spoonful of this delightful preparation can neutralize many times its volume in acid. It acts instantly; relief is quick, and very apparent. All gas is dispelled; all sourness is soon gone; the whole system is sweetened. Do try this perfect anti-acid, and remember it is just as good for children, too, and pleasant for them to take.

Any drug store has the genuine, prescriptional product.

ON REARING CHILDREN from CRIB TO COLLEGE

Compiled by the Editors of THE PARENTS' MAGAZINE

No thoughtful person can conceive of the education of the child as a thing apart from his home life. The continuing influence of the home with its strong emotional ties sets the pattern of his life to a large extent.

Do you slap your child to make him keep away from the vacuum cleaner? Or do you teach him how to run it?

Do you scold your child for taking dishes from the table? Or do you show him how to handle dishes without breaking them?

Do you punish children for being slow and untidy? Or do you practice with them dressing and toilet duties, under a time limit?

Do you punish children for getting their clothes dirty when playing? Or do you realize that play is more important for them than keeping clean?

Very few parents in this day and age refuse to allow either their sons or daughters to learn to drive an automobile. Yet they should have a proper interest in seeing to it that their children keep their car-driving proclivities within certain sane and reasonable limits.

It is quite legitimate for a mother to feel that she needs to get away from her children occasionally. They also are all the better for being away from her. After a short separation from each other, the mother and children find new interest and new tolerance for each other. In an increasing number of communities a nursery school or co-operative nursery offers an opportunity for this sort of personal holiday.

The old disciplinary way of bringing up children was never good, because it did not take into account the nature of boys and girls. Yesterday, boys believed in their "rights" as much as they do today, but they had to use their privileges of "self-determination" when out of sight of stern parents. Now conditions have changed.

There is a popular belief that if the hair is shampooed frequently the natural oil in the ducts around the hair follicles will dry and the hair fall out. This objection may be met, however, by applying liquid vaseline or hot oil the night before a shampoo. It should be rubbed well into the scalp and allowed to dry in so that some of it remains to supplement the natural oil even after washing.

In a home where there is a baby it is a problem to know where to hang the tiny garments washed daily. A solution is offered by a clothes-tree which furnishes space equal to forty feet of clothesline even while it takes only three feet of floor space. When closed it may be put out of the way in a corner.

Dark Hosiery Is Most Popular With Dark Frock

Shoes and hose must be more carefully considered when destined to accompany the new costumes. Longer skirts lose their grace when teamed with low heels and too light hose.

The opera pump or the street shoe with a high spike, or medium high heel, is considered the most appropriate with present styles. Straps enhance the slender foot, but the opera pump with a high spike or medium high appears to lengthen the lines of the ankle and foot and tends toward a nicer proportion between the hem of the skirt and the shoe.

Dark costumes require dark hose for the reason that there is thus no definite break between the shoe and the hemline. A graceful flow of line is to be desired this season, and to achieve this dark shades in hose are best.

Green and White Jersey for Spring Sports Suit

For spring wear, this charming Paris offering of green-and-white jersey is accompanied by a green felt hat with a medium brim.

Jacket and Cape for Spring Wear

Fur Much Favored in Paris; Moleskin Dyed to Match Milady's Dress.

About half of the book of Paris fur cout fashions is devoted to jackets, short coats, and hip-length capes of fur, says a fashion writer in the New York Times. These are the fur wraps that will carry over into early spring. Paul Poiret has designed one of the most attractive jackets shown in Paris. It is made of astrakhan, and is a cutaway eton, draped into a short scarf at the neck. The sleeves are three-quarters length and have long cuffs of black satin with bands of beige and red crepe to match the girdle of a frock that accompanies this jacket.

Cape Features Ensemble Designed for Spring Wear.

Chanel uses moleskin to make jackets that are intended for early spring and resort wear. She dyes the mole to match the dress with which it is to be worn. Especially effective is a navy blue mole jacket, worn under a topcoat of navy cloth, and matching a navy frock. Schiaparelli's pony jacket with youthful boleros and peplums are worn by some smart women with the black daytime dresses, and are particularly interesting because they demonstrate the trend away from the plain fur cardigan toward the dressmaker type of garment.

Frequently the fur jacket takes on new character and chic with the addition of a capelet around the shoulders. Some jackets of this design are made of fabric furs, which are now worn by smart women. The capelets are so arranged that they may be pulled up around the neck and draped like shawl collars. A belt at the natural waistline is a feature of many fur jackets, which are about fingertip length. Peter Pan collars, with ties of cloth to match the frocks, make these jackets very youthful and chic.

Short capes of lapin, nutria and beaver are being worn with sports clothes and particularly with tailored suits of tweed.

Even Hemlines Used on New Ankle-Long Skirts

Ankle-long skirts with even hemlines are sponsored by Paris dressmakers who make styles as well as clothes.

The dizzy hemlines of the past are straightening up a little, and wise ones expect them to be definitely on the way in a very short time.

Hemlines which lift in the front and dip to the floor behind are stamped "last season" by Parisian opinion. The higher the skirt lifts in front the more out of date it looks, and, contrariwise, the longer the skirt is in front the newer it appears.

One or two novelty-seeking designers have reversed last season's order and created evening gowns which touch the toes in front and lift halfway to the knees in back. These models are not taken seriously, however, and the general trend is not affected by them.

Afternoon ensembles are radically longer and also tend to even hemlines at ankle lengths. Paris makes a distinction these days between "5 to 8" ensembles and clothes for wear from 1 to 5. The rule is simple:

"The later the hour the longer the skirt."

Colors Being Offered for New Sports Blouses

The tucked-in-blouse with a slight blouse effect deeper at the back of the waistline is shown mostly in crepe de chine, satin and in voile, pale hues like pink, apricot cream or ivory being favored. The dark blouse with the lighter sports suit is the vogue, such as brown with a beige ensemble, or navy with a suit mixture in blue and white.

Tunic blouses with flaring hemlines are worn over very narrow skirts. Patou shows these in distinct color contrasts, silver and black, or red and black.

An Emergency Take-Off

By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD

(Copyright.)

THREE weeks after Mary Brent's return from a visit to her aunt in the East, an official looking envelope arrived through the mail for her father but not until he explained all about it did Mary understand.

"While you were away," he told her, "the Coast-to-Coast Airways corporation sent a couple of men to see me. It seems that our land lies directly on the route of the proposed transcontinental airline. They were thinking of using it for an emergency landing field and refueling station, and wished to sound me out on the proposition. This letter states the acceptance of my terms."

Mary's eyes shone. "And that means we would go East to live?"

"No, Mary, I am afraid not. I am to have charge here. See that the gas and oil supply are kept up, beacons lighted, weather records made. It means quite a little money and then, too, it is something to become part of a pioneer industry of this kind. Incidentally, it will interfere very little with the farming."

Ten years before Mary and her father had left their comfortable Eastern home to take up life in a climate better suited to her father's health. The step had been of benefit to him and the two had lived very happily. Mary kept house, with but one brief vacation when she had visited her aunt.

The stay had not been long but it had given Mary a taste of life in a great city. It had thrown her momentarily with a troup of gay young people. And it had made her western home seem desolate and remote.

The establishment of an emergency airport provided the lonesome girl with something to think about.

For weeks Mary ran hopefully to the door whenever the throb of a plane motor came to her ears. Then gradually, it was borne in upon her that the airport was for emergencies. She might live there all her life and not have one of the airships that daily winged overhead actually float to rest in her front yard.

One afternoon an accident occurred which could have—so it seemed at the time—only the most tragic of endings.

In an unguarded moment her father stepped into a clump of bunch grass edging the field. There was a quick, terrifying sound from a hidden, coiled menace, and John Brent staggered backwards, paling under the conviction that he was as good as dead.

Somehow he got to the house, did agonizing things to the deadly punctures which the rattler's fangs had made an inch above his high boots and bound on a tourniquet. Mary watched, speechless.

Suddenly, she screamed and ran to the door. Yes—a plane was actually circling, was coming down!

It seemed hours, however, before the propeller stopped and she could reach the young man rising from the cockpit. Then, "Oh," she cried, "could you possibly go to—" she named the nearest city, "at once?"

The stranger saw in Mary's face her tremendous need. "Certainly," he said, "I'm—"

She grabbed his arm and urged him towards the house, explaining between little gasps what had happened.

They managed to get her father into the plane. There was barely room for Mary, and as she crouched beside the pilot she forgot completely that she had never flown before until a quick lift of the plane made her heart do strange things.

A brief spectacle of the western range far, far below—a distant line of mountain peaks on the horizon—an entire city spread out below them in one small patch—

Then the plane was dipping, curving to the earth, taxiing down the runway, coming to a stop.

They reached the hospital with no time to spare. "Ten minutes more," said the doctor who gave the serum to John Brent, "and there would have been no chance."

Afterwards, Mary went straight up to the tall young pilot.

Holding out both her hands which were straightway gathered into his she tried to thank him. "If it hadn't been for your emergency landing—"

But the young man interrupted with a smile. "It was an emergency take-off, but not an emergency landing. You don't remember me."

"Don't remember you?"

"I watched you all one evening at the North Shore Country club dance. I found out who you were and, knowing your aunt, went to call on her the very next afternoon. You had left that morning. Shortly afterwards she told me of the establishing of an airport on your farm and right away I made up my mind to look you up. I hope you don't mind?"

And now, I ask you, could any girl object to a young man—a very good looking young man, too—flying more than half-way across the United States for the privilege of seeing her once more?

There were times in later years when Mary teased Alan Paige by saying she married him out of gratitude for saving her father's life, but Alan did not believe her, so why should we?

LADIES ENTERTAIN FOUR CLUBS

The Home Bureau of Concord township entertained the four townships, Jackson, Spencer, Fairfield and Troy, on Thursday afternoon, March 13, at the Gymnasium. Tht room was artistically decorated with the club colors, red and green. The ladies were received at the door by the reception committee, Mrs. Hattie Widney, Mrs. Pluma Hamilton, Mrs. Millie Shull, Mrs. Gertrude Borthwick, assisted by Mrs. Mary Krise and Mrs. Mayola Kinsey. The club colors were pinned on each lady as they arrived.

A program was prepared consisting of a piano duet by Mrs. Cora Curie and Mrs. Lela Northrup, after which the president Mrs. Borthwick gave a welcome. Singing led by Mrs. Borthwick, these songs were new in words but were to the tune of old familiar hymns composed by the leader. Reading of Club Creed by Mrs. Minnie Pepple; reading, Mrs. Louise Carper of Jackson township; reading Mrs. Guthrie of Spencer township; reading, Mrs. Millie Shull; reading Mrs. Faith Bard of Fairfield; reading Mrs. Hazel Miers of Troy; following this was remarks by the County President, Mrs. Carper, which was enjoyed by all.

A play entitled, "They do Say," was given. Cast: Mrs. Hattie Widney, Mrs. Daisy Woodcox, Mrs. Beulah Coburn, Mrs. Anna Tustison, Mrs. Mae Miser, Mrs. Maud Jenkins and Miss Thelma Curie. The play was well given and it created much laughter. Following was a trio by Mesdames Northrup, Woodcox and Borthwick. Committee in charge of entertainment, Mrs. E. R. Kinsey, Mrs. Beulah Coburn, Mrs. Mae Miser and Mrs. Mary Krise. The refreshment committee then took charge of the meeting, a very clever stunt was given by this committee, they were dressed in white with green and white caps. Mrs. Ann Sechler and Mrs. Aline Koch recited in poetry in which they invited all the ladies over to the domestic science room for refreshments.

On entering the room, to their surprise they found it beautifully decorated with green and white which was in keeping with the St. Patrick's season, the tables were in white decorated with green crepe paper, green candle sticks and a white candle with a green bow, each table contained a beautiful center piece of Irish Heather.

Dainty refreshments consisting of brick ice cream with a shamrock printed in, angel food cake and coffee were served. Favors were green gum drops holding a white candle. Rsfreshment committee consisted of Mrs. Arline Koch, Mrs. Lula Brodbeck, Mrs. Hulda Reasoner, Mrs. Laura Washler, Mrs. Inez Hadsell, Mrs. Cora Fetters, Mrs. Ida Herrick, Mrs. Della Brown and Mrs. Loren Means. Seventy guests were entertained and forty-four members were present. After the refreshments the ladies all retuned to their respective homes with many expressions of having spent a pleasant and enjoyable afternoon.

Veterans' Legislation In Sight

World War and Spanish American Veterans Benefited

(Special to The St. Joe News)

Washington, D. C., March 26th. Substantial benefits to disabled World War veterans will be granted by legislation now pending before the House of Representatives in that the period of service connected disability will be extended in all cases to 1925; veterans families will receive compensation during the time veterans are in hospitals, and the rate of casualty disabled veterans will be increased. Congressman David Hogg today announced that this would affect the pay of 800 veterans in the Twelfth District.

The rates of Spanish-American War pensions will be increased. Mr. Hogg has sponsored Bills in both of these increases and the legislation represents a compromise between pending Bills.

BENEFIT PLAY DRAWS FULL HOUSE

The play, Ace High, put on by the St. Joe Dramatic Club on last Friday evening, was attended by the largest house of its dramatic history. The seating capacity was not sufficient and many stood in the rear of the room. The proceeds of the play was for John Coburn, who had the misfortune of having a limb removed at a Peru hospital as a result of a railroad accident. People from all parts of the county and many from Hicksville, Ohio, were in attendance to witness the best performance in the history of the organization.

This dramatic club has been in existance for at least fifteen years and has some good actors, whose successful acting is due largely to their natural ability and years of experience.

The play was composed of three acts, lasting three hours, including very short intermissions between acts.

Miss Margaret Kilpatrick, of Fort Wayne, gave two splendid readings.

In this play all parts were heavy and of seemingly equal importance in the act. Approximately $150 was realized at the ticket office and the management thanks the public for its beneficent support.

The music was furished by Mr. Donald Kinsey's Syncopators, who contributed to no less degree, the success of the program. This musical organization is the last word in Mr. Kinsey's life long efforts to give St. Joe a musical orgaization for such events as Friday night and his ability as an orgaizer is shown by the many bids he has to place his musicians before the music loving public. Another factor in Mr. Kinsey's success is the fair low price he charges for programs.

This orchestra is to furnish the music at a Christian Endeavor Rally on the Harlan Lutheran Circuit next Sunday afternoon and evening.

AUTO SKIDS ON ICE; RAY REASONER HURT

Near the Hollis Dilley farm, Wednesday morning, Ray Reasoner's car skidded on the ice and made a dive for the ditch on north side of the road, turning over and around, landing in the field, injuring him slightly by cutting his head.

Ray was going east, to the home of his brother, Herman, where Mrs. Reasoner had been during the night.

The car skidded on the ice and snow and Ray had no chance to avoid the accident.

Hollis Dilley, who lives near heard the crash and rushed to the scene and assisted in liberating Ray from the car, as he was unabel to get out alone. Due to his cut on the head he was somewhat stunned and staggered about.

He was rushed home by his brother, Herman and a doctor summoned. He was bruised and scratched up considerable but will be about in a few days.

This is the report from the home just before going to press.

The car was damaged considerable and is at the Hanna & Storer garage for repairs.

Three Acres Is Farm Say Census Officials

Farm is all Land Farmed by One Person, Whether it it Three Acres or Three Thousand Acres

A farm, according to the Census Bureau, is all the land farmed by one person, whether it is three acres or three thousand acres.

Sounds simple, doesn't it? Well, it wasn't so simple for the Government officials to decide what should be considered a farm by the enumerators during the census to be taken in April. Much study and years of practical experience were necessary before the short, concise definition was agreed upon.

Dr. L. C. Gray and Dr. O. E. Baker, of the Department of Agriculture, assisted Census officials in deciding upon what should be called a farm.

The amount of farm land owned by one person has nothin to do with the definition of a farm so far as the Census Bureau is concerned. The question is not how much land does he own but how much does he operate or farm. A man who owns 300 acres might farm half of it himself and rent the other half out to 3 tenants, 50 acres each. This would go down on the ceusus records as four farms, because the land farmed by each man is considered as a unit.

On the other hand, one man might rent various tracts of land from 10 different owners. He might rent a few acres on shares, a few more from somebody else for money rent, and the rest from other people on different terms. The different pieces of land might be widely separated. If they were all farmed and managed by one man, however, they would all be put down together as one farm. If, however, a separate manager were hired to supervise a certain portion of the land, that portion would go down as a separate farm.

No tract of land of less than three acres will be registered as a farm unless it produced more than $250 worth of farm products last year. In the Census of 1929 if a piece of land of less than three acres was farmed by a man who gave his entire time to the task, it was listed as a farm regardless of how little it produced, but this year none of these small tracts will be counted unless they produced $250 worth of products, regardless of how many people spent their full time cultivating the area. (It is esimated that approximately 5,000 tracts of less than three

FISH HATCHERIES PREPARE FOR SPRING SEASON

Activities are under way at the state's five fish hatcheries for propagating several million young fish and fry for stream and public water stocking this summer, according to Richard Lieber, state conservation department director.

George Berg, superintendent of the department's hatcheries, says more than 1,000 parent fish were held over from last year, and this number likely will be augmented by donation from sportsmen. In case this number is less than desired for hatchery purposes, hatchery employes will net and catch with hook and line, the additional parent fish desired. Each year sportsmen of the state donate a number of the best fish they catch for hatchery use.

Seventy-three hatching and rearing ponds are used at the five hatcheries located at Riverside (Indianapolis;) Tri-lakes near Columbia City; Avoca in Lawrence county; Bass Lake in Pulaski county and Wawasee in Kosciusko county, of which the Riverside hatchery is the largest.

Last year the fish and game division which controls the hatchery work propagated over nine million young fish and fry, of which number seven million were pike perch and yellow perch fry. Of the two million fingerlings propagated and reared, more than 700,000 were large and small-mouth black bass, Berg says.

Fingerlings and fry were planted in streams, ponds and lakes in eighty-seven Indiana counties in 1929 in response to 1,745 applications for stock fish, records of the departments show.

STILL, LIQUOR FOUND IN FARMHOUSE RAID

Paul Dean, who has been living on a farm in Cedar Creek township on the Leo and Spencerville roads, was arrested on charges of possession of liquor and possession of a still by Deputy Sheriff Clarence Elixman and a federal agent Saturday afternoon about 2:30 o'clock.

The officers arrested Dean in his automobile just as he was about to turn into the driveway at his home. Five pints of whiskey were found in the machine.

A search of the house followed and Deputy Sheriff Elixman and the federal agent uncovered a 30-gallon still, five gallons of liquor and three barrels of mash.

Dean has been renting the John Bair farm. He is married and has one child. The charges were filed in federal court and Dean was released Saturday afternoon under bond of $1,000. His car also was seized by the officers.

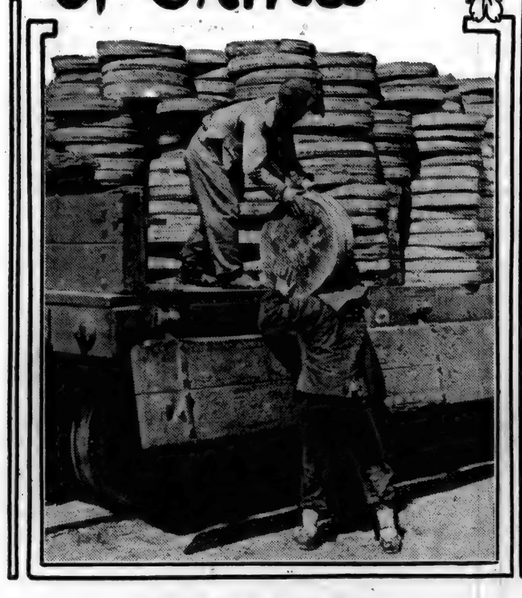
Foreign Bits of China



Unloading Soy Bean Cake at Dairen.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

THE plan of Great Britain to return to China the territory of Wei-hai-wei which she has had under lease since 1898, and the insistence by China that other special priviliges to foreign nations be abrogated, turns attention anew to the foreign patches maintained in China. These regions, which have actually been transferred, either by lease or cession, are not to be confused with the so-called "spheres of influence," which are more or less indefinite and many of which are not recognized by the Chinese.

What once threatened to be the great international "sport" of annexing parts of China began with the arrival of the first Europeans in the Far East. Those who blazed the trail around Africa, across the stormy Indian ocean, and up the east coast of Asia to rich Cathay, were the Portuguese. For half a century they came and went in their trading ships, but by 1577 they felt the need of a station to facilitate their commerce, and settled at Macao on the southern coast of China. A region of about four square miles was set aside for them partly as a reward for assistance in breaking up piracy in the nearby waters, and has been claimed by Portugal ever since. Formal transfer of this tiny fragment of China was made by the Chinese government in 1887.

Not only is Macao the site of the first European claim staked out on Cathay's coast, but it has cultural ties with Europe closer knit than the political relationships of controverted areas to the north. It contains the oldest ruin in China that is associated with Europe, and the tamarind and banyan shade the gardens where the Portuguese Chaucer, Cameons, composed half of the Lusiads, one of the half dozen world's great epics.

Inevitably, too, one associates the location of Macao, on a peninsula jutting from an island in the delta of the Canton river west of Hong Kong, with that colony of Portuguese Americans on the very tip of Cape Cod, made famous by Joseph Lincoln.

English Obtained Hong Kong.

More than two and a half centuries passed after the founding of Macao before China was again called upon in the name of commerce to give away more of her territory. By that time all the commercial nations of Europe, and the United States as well, were engaged in the remunerative China trade. Friction arose in the early part of the Nineteenth century between British traders and the Chinese, and after a war in which Great Britain was victorious, China, as a part of her indemnity, in 1842 gave Great Britain the island of Hong Kong, a few miles from Macao. This island with an area of 32 square miles and one of the best harbors in the world was actually ceded and became a part of the British empire. In 1860 Great Britain leased three square miles of territory on the mainland opposite Hong Kong and shortly afterward this, too, was ceded.

This island became the show colony of Great Britain in the Orient. It is a world port where celebrities and foreign war craft arrive so frequently that the din of official salutes is almost constantly echoing from the granite peaks. It is next to the oldest and in many ways the model foreign-owned community in China.

Contrary to popular belief, there is no city of Hong Kong. That well-known name belongs to the island and the mainland. The city of half a million inhabitants which is the capital of the island and the colony is officially Victoria. But the name is seldom heard. To the islanders the beautiful terraced town is merely "the city."

Grabs by Other Nations.

After Great Britain acquired Hong Kong island and the patch of mainland there was a lull in the staking out of claims by foreign nations to Chinese territory. What may be called China's period of "intensive land losses" began in 1895 and extended to 1900, with five nations participating. At the conclusion of the Japanese-Chinese war in 1895, Japan not only obtained Korea, over which China claimed a protectorate, but also the large island of Formosa with an area of nearly 14,000 square miles, off the central Chinese coast.

From that time on the political pot boiled furiously among the nations wishing to follow in Japan's footsteps, and at one time the world was informed of a new lease of Chinese territory nearly every month. Germany tried to lease Kiaochow bay on the coast of Shantung in 1896, but China refused her offer. In November, 1897, Germany seized the bay ostensibly because two German missionaries had been killed in Shantung. In December the Russian Asiatic fleet steamed into Port Arthur, 200 miles north of Kiaochow, and announcement was made that it would winter there. In March, 1898, Germany obtained a 99-year lease of approximately 100 square miles on the shores of the bay which she had seized; and the same month Russia obtained a 25-year lease to Port Arthur and a part of the Liaotung peninsula, with the right to extend the lease.

Only a few weeks after the leases had been granted to Germany and Russia, Great Britain obtained a lease on the shores and Bay of Wei-hai-wei, almost equidistant between Port Arthur and Kiaochow. This British lease was not for a definite number of years but provided that it was to run for the period during which Russia should hold Port Arthur. Later in April France entered the competition and took a 99-year lease on the Bay of Kwang Chow and approximately 23 square miles of territory on the mainland.

In June Great Britain increased her holdings at Hong Kong by leasing for 99 years 356 square miles of additional territory on the mainland and additional islands aggregating 20 square miles in area. In November, 1899, France added to her lease at Kwang Chow a group of islands dominating the bay. Finally in 1900 came one of the most ambitious steps of all in the acquisition of territory—the occupation of Manchuria by Russia. This brought on the Russo-Japanese war after which both Russia and Japan removed their troops from Manchuria which reverted to China but with the provision that Japan should have certain economic concessions.

Changes Since World War.

There has been a greater mortality in the recently acquired foreign patches in China than in the earlier ones. When Manchuria reverted to China, Japan succeeded to Russia's claims to Port Arthur and the Liaotung peninsula, and obtained an extension of the lease to 99 years. The other territories remained with an unchanged status until the World war. Soon after the outbreak of hostilities Japan stormed and took the German leased territory of Kiaochow in Shantung.

The Kiaochow lease to Germany covered an area along the coast roughly ten or twelve miles in diameter. In addition there was a neutralized zone 33 miles wide skirting the entire Bay of Kiaochow. On the leased plot Germans had built a typical German town, Tsingtao. The agreement had included concessions to build railways outside the leased and neutral areas, in Shantung proper; and coupled with the railroad concessions was the right to exploit mines in zones twenty miles wide traversed by the railroads.

The 255-mile railway line from Tsingtao to Tsinan, the capital of Shantung, was opened in 1904.

As a result of the adjustments since the World war, there are only five patches of China now formally governed by foreign nations. Three of these, Portuguese Macao, British Hong Kong, and Japanese Formosa, are owned outright by the governing nations. Of the long time leases, only Port Arthur and Kwang Chow remain. The former is under the control of Japan, the latter of France.

The SANDMAN STORY

ABOUT THE PIGS

"GRUNT, grunt," said Porky Pig.

"Now what's the trouble, squeal, squeal?" said Miss Ham.

"Yes, what's the matter, grunt, grunt?" asked Master Pink Pig.

"Do tell us, squeal, squeal," said Porky Pig.

"We want to know, grunt, grunt," said Brother Bacon.

"We'd like to know very much, Grandpa Porky," said little Black Squealer, squealing as he spoke, or speaking as he squealed, whichever you want to call it.

"Tell us, do, grunt, grunt," said Sir Percival Pork.

"By all means, grunt, grunt," said Sir Benjamin Bacon.

"Let us hear, squeal, squeal," said Mrs. Pinky Pig.

"Ah, let us hear, grunt, grunt," said Pinky Pig's mother, and Mrs. Porky's mother-in-law.

All Listened to Porky as He Sang the First Song.

"Do tell us," said Brother Bacon's mother.

"I will tell you," said Porky Pig, much pleased that all of the pigs were paying so much attention to what he was doing.

He looked, he knew, as though he had some secret. And he knew the others in the pen wanted to know it too.

Perhaps, they thought, it might be food which he knew about and which they might find, too, if only he gave them a hint.

But Porky Pig had other thoughts. He grunted and twisted his tiny tail now and looked sideways out of his funny eyes.

"I want to sing a song which I think would be a comfort to the pigs when there is no food around and when therd is still no nice spring mud, and while times are a bit hard.

"I think if we all learned to sing it there would be pleasure for all of us even when the food is not quite so plentiful.

"I've heard the family singing in the house. They gather around the piano and sing and their sounds seem to make them happy, so why should not ours do the same with us?"

"To save the rest of you the trouble I have written the song and it is called 'Porky Pig's Pleasure,' because I wrote it."

"I think the ladies could take the Pig soprano and alto parts—Miss Ham I'm sure would make a good alto singer, and the gentlemen pigs could take bass and barytone and tenor parts."

The pigs seemed to think this was quite exciting.

So they all listened to Porky as he sang the song first, with all the notes squealing ones save in the chorus when they were all grunts.

This was the song:

Squeal, squeal,
It's a pleasure to feel
That when food is not here
We can get all our cheer
By dreaming ahead
That we're being fed.

Then came the chorus which was like this:

Grunt, grunt, grunt,
But always be on the hunt,
For food, food, food,
Is good, good, good.

And then came the second verse:

Squeal, squeal,
It's a pleasure to feel
That later there'll be Large meals for me,
And thinking this way
We'll feel happy and gay.

As songs went, the pigs decided, it was not much worse or much better than others. And they liked squealing the part particularly which had in it the words "Large Meals for Me."

Each pig sang that with great gusto, but they were glad to give up singing when the farmer brought them their supper.

That, they all felt, was greater than any other pleasure.

How It Started

THE WORD "BEDLAM"

"THE police were called out to quell the bedlam that broke loose."

Here is a word whose origin it would be extremely difficult even to guess at did not one know at least something of the circumstances under which it was introduced into our language.

Everybody knows that "bedlam" means uproar. It is its secondary meaning, however, and the one of which few of us are aware that gives the real clew to its story.

For, in addition to meaning a tremendous noise, "bedlam" also comes to us as a modification of the name of the Hospital of St. Mary of Bethlehem (Bedlam), in London, an insane asylum.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

RICE AT WEDDINGS

AS EVERYBODY knows, a wedding, in order to be a success, must be supplemented by the throwing of rice over the bride and the groom as they go away; and few are the weddings at which this ceremony is omitted. It is as important as the throwing of the old shoe. The throwing of rice—or of some other grain—is a custom dating back into the morning of time and is found in many widely severed parts of the world. It is thrown to insure a fruitful marriage for it is the symbol of fertility. In it resides the spirit of the grain god and, as it showers over the newly wedded pair, it works by sympathetic magic.

In China, in India and in the islands of the Pacific there is the same throwing of rice at a wedding as in New York. But the throwing of rice at weddings among Europeans and Americans is a comparatively modern innovation, nevertheless. Our ancestors of the northern races knew not rice; they used grain for the bridal shower. But when the use of rice became world-wide it was substituted for grain, a shower of rice being much less "messy" than a shower of oats or wheat and its white kernels making a much better appearance.

With the Orientals, of course, it was always rice that was thrown, for rice was their principal grain. And rice or wheat, it is the same thing: the spirit of the grain god is there, which insures fertility. Many ancient marriage customs still exist in England which bring in the grain god at weddings in different ways but all have the same signification as the more common throwing of rice.

RAILROAD CROSSINGS

AN UNUSUALLY large per cent of automobile accidents during the year 1929 occurred at railroad crossings. An accident of this sort happened near the home of the writer of this article in which a dozen lives were lost. The exceptionally sad thing about it was that they were young people of high school age. Returning from a basketball game in a neighboring town, the driver not hearing the whistle of the approaching train, drove across the track just in time to receive the fatal blow. Upon examination it was discovered that the day watchman was relieved early in the evening and that no night watchman was on duty. Had a night watchman been on duty perhaps the accident would not have occurred. But this is only a conjecture. The night watchman, had he been on duty, might have been asleep at the time the train approached; or, being an old man as so many of them are, a sudden illness might have incapacitated him for service, in which case the traveling public, depending upon his signals, would have unconsciously assumed a tremendous risk.

L. A. Barrett.

Where the night or even day watchman is not on duty, gates are used at railroad crossings. Frequently automatically controlled red lights and bells are also used, but all automatically controlled devices are by no means infallible.

In some states the law governing public busses is that a stop shall be made at every crossing regardless of watchmen, gates, bells, etc. The driver is compelled to bring his bus to a dead stop even if no train is in sight. Having come to a dead stop, he makes his own observations.

By reducing the element of risk to a minimum, the safety of human life can be practically assured. Less speed at the approach of crossings and a dead stop before attempting to cross the tracks means safety first. Who is to blame? The operator of railroads, or the traveling public?

REVIEW

GOLDEN TEXT—Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The Mighty God, The Everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus the Savior.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus the Savior.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—He Went About Doing Good.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The King Serving.

Since the lessons of the quarter are bound together by the threefold unity of one book, one theme, and one person, the best method of review for young people and adults is to present the book of Matthew as a whole, and each lesson in its relation to Matthew's central purpose. The central theme is Jesus Christ, the King, the fulfiller of the Messianic hope.

Lesson for January 5.

God entered into convenant with David concerning the Kingdom (II Sam. 7:8-16). Christ's genealogy shows His legal right to the throne of David (1:1-17). The Messiah was not only said to be the seed of the woman (Gen. 3:15) and the son of a virgin (Isa. 7:14), but the mighty God (Isa. 9:6). Jesus Christ, the King, was begotten of the Holy Ghost and born of Mary, thus becoming Immanuel (Matt. 1:23, cf. Isa. 7:14).

Lesson for January 12.

The King entered upon His official work by being baptized. Christ's baptism was His act of consecration to the task of saving His people through the sacrifice of Himself upon the cross. Having received the official approval from the open heavens, the King went forth to the wilderness to meet and overcome the devil (Heb. 2:14). His victory demonstrated His ability to accomplish the work of redemption.

Lesson for January 19.

The voice of John the Baptist being stilled, the King becomes His own herald. His message was the same as John's, namely, "the kingdom of heaven at hand," which means the Messianic earth rule of Jesus Christ. He called helpers to His side and went through Galilee preaching with triumphant success.

Lesson for January 26.

This lesson shows the characteristics and responsibilities of the subjects of the kingdom, the beatitudes showing the characteristics, and salt and light the responsibilities. The life and testimony of the disciples are to light up the darkness of the world and preserve it from decay.

Lesson for February 2.

This lesson displays the principles which are to control the lives of the subjects of the kingdom. They should live a life of prayer, putting their trust in the Heavenly Father for temporal blessings. Spiritual affairs are to be first.

Lesson for February 9.

The subjects of the kingdom should be free from censorious judgments, be on the lookout for false teachers, avoid empty profession, and obey the words of Christ, the King.

Lesson for February 16.

In the performance of mighty works the King demonstrated His ability to adminster the affairs of the kingdom. He showed His power over the chief foes of mankind—sickness, sin, satanic power, death, sorrow, and storms.

Lesson for February 23.

The kingdom was to be propagated by sending forth twelve men to preach the gospel of the kingdom. Their mission was authenticated by supernatural deeds.

Lesson for March 2.

In the propagation of the kingdom, violent opposition arose, resulting in the plan to kill the King. Opposition will be experienced by all who go forth in Christ's name.

Lesson for March 9.

The parables display the admixture of moral and spiritual conditions in the world between Christ's crucifixion and second coming. The parabolic method of teaching makes clear the truth to those who love it, but conceals it from those who do not.

Lesson for March 16.

The parables of the wheat and tares, mustard seed and leavened meal, show the outward growth and inner decay of the work inaugurated by Christ in the interval between His crucifixion and second coming.

Lesson for March 23.

Though rejected by the nation, the King continued His ministry of healing and teaching.

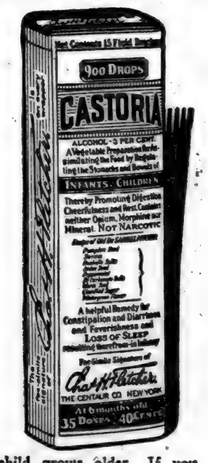
Straightning the Kinks

The kinks and tangles in our lives would straighten out wonderfully if we would let them come oftener under the influence of the calm, clear life of Jesus.—Presbyterian of the South.

Christians

The young Christian thinks himself little; the growing Christian thinks he is nothing; but the mature Christian knows that he is less than nothing.—John Newton.

Children CRY for it



It may be the little stomach; it may be the bowels are sluggish. No matter what coats a child's tongue, its a safe and sensible precaution to give a few drops of Castoria. This gentle regulation of the little system soon sets things to rights. A pure vegetable preparation that can't harm a wee infant, but brings quick comfort—even when it is colic, diarrhea, or similar disturbance.

And don't forsake Castoria as the child grows older. If you want to raise boys and girls with strong systems that will ward off constipation, stick to good old Castoria; and give nothing stronger when there's any irregularity except on the advice of a doctor. Castoria is sold in every drugstore, and the genuine always bears Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper.

Even if one is not exposed in his sin, there is the danger of blackmail.

To have more money than you know what to do with, encourages philanthropy.

Finds Youth's Fountain!

One Happy Woman Tells Where She Discovered It

"JUST one thing has contributed more than anything else in my life toward making me the radiantly happy woman I am today," writes Mrs. Walter Ruehl, of Glenbrook, Conn. "If this was selling at ten dollars a bottle instead of the few cents it costs, I would scrape the money together, and I don't mean maybe!"

"I guess a good many others feel the same way, judging by the number of people I know who swear by this 'Fountain of Youth.'"

Millions of people all over the world have discovered this simple secret, which is nothing but giving our bodies the internal lubrication that they need, as much as any machine. After you have taken Nujol for a few days, and have proved to yourself how it brightens your whole life, you will wonder how so simple a treatment can make such a great change in your health and your happiness. The reason is this:

Regularly as clock work, Nujol clears out of our bodies those poisons (we all have them) which slow us up, make us headachy, low in our minds.

Colorless and tasteless as pure water, Nujol cannot hurt you, no matter how long you take it. It is not a medicine. It contains no drugs. It forms no habit. It is non-fattening.

Try Nujol yourself and see how much better you feel. Get a bottle in its sealed package at any drug store and be sure it's trademarked "Nujol." It costs but a few cents—and it makes you feel like a million dollars! Start taking Nujol this very night!

If a mean man is wise he will move out of the neighborhood instead of trying to live it down.

A girl can sometimes suddenly put a young man out of his misery by refusing to marry him.

Any COLD

That cold may lead to something serious, if neglected. The time to do something for it is now. Don't wait until it develops into bronchitis. Take two or three tablets of Bayer Aspirin as soon as you feel a cold coming on. Or as soon as possible after it starts. Bayer Aspirin will head off or relieve the aching and feverish feeling—will stop the headache. And if your throat is affected, dissolve two or three tablets in a quarter-glassful of warm water, and gargle. This quickly soothes a sore throat and reduces inflammation and infection. Read proven directions for neuralgia, for rheumatism and other aches and pains. Genuine Bayer Aspirin is harmless to the heart.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

The question is, Will farm relief remove our grief?

We are all actors on the stage of life—the big show, and the spectators are always asking, How does he act?

It looks like we are getting near the time when, in the words of a chinaman, we will be going according to the rule of: No cashie, no hashie.

Some people talk themselves out of business, some people talk themselves into business and some talk themselves from one business into another, you just can't tell which way the little ball goes,

Saying nothing pessimistic or optimistic but just looking things over sort of unconcerned like, it seems like we are living in a day that it is mighty hard to convince the general public that there is still a Christian at large.

Hats off to any preacher that has the courage to earn his money.

Some one has suggested that we write an article on, "Is this an age of the survival of the fittest or the fit of the survivalist?" We find that the subject is enirely too heavy.

"Counting Dry—Wet noses in twenty states" has been the Literary Digest's joy for a few weeks. When the press relys on noses to tell the political status of the country, it only goes to show how "noses" figure in on everything that happens. Nobody knows how a nose knows—but it does.

The "Golden Hearted" William Howard Taft was so named, not because he was a republican, but because he remained true to the republic of the U. S. A., trying to help Lincoln dedicate us to the proposition that all men are free and equal and that justice should not perish from the earth. The dignity of the duties of his office as a member of the supreme court did not cloud his vision as to his duties to common humanity.

The best argument in all the world in favor of High School education for our young Americans is the man who is no friend of education. Its human nature to hate things we do not possess and hate usually determines what we believe. Men believe in the things they like, so having acquired no education they hate it. The uneducated person usually cites himself as a brilliant example of what just can be done without a High School education. "Look at me," says a man, I never had an education. Well that is just where the world gets inspiration for building high schools and churches—from men who don't know. Ignorance might be bliss and it might be folly to be wise and there might be places in the world where ignorance might be justifiable but it don't happen to be in this country. Education edifies, inspires, guides, and admonishes the youth in this country to be of value to the world and their parens that gave them an existance. What parent would deny a child a chance to do for himself what he as a parent failed to do for himself. The folly of wisdom might be alright to preach but its nice to know the difference between a lemon and a peach.

Detroit fires 1600 alien employees to give jobs to American citizens. The act is considered on the surface as a nasty, unjustifiable deed, which will react on our good will as a nation, by some press dispatches but the city explains that they are feeding thousands of Americans while the alien workers come across from Windsor on the ferry boat and take our citizens jobs. The industrial situation today presents one of the most problematical networks we have to deal with. Labor saving machinery, economical programs in industries, women and children taking the jobs of the men of the house, old maids and bachelors, high rents and taxes, the farm relief, etc., are only a few of the griefs that beset us—not mentioning the fact that we spend two dollars were we earn one. But laying all reasons aside for the conditions that are, and looking old man Future square in the face, we might just as well prepare to save two dollars and spend one and get out of debt. Let old Lizzy set and say, Legs, do your stuff.

A peasant with a troubled conscience went to a monk for advice. He said he had circulated a vile story about a friend, only to find that the story was no true. "If you want to make peace with your conscience,' said the monk, "you must fill a bag with chicken down, go to every dooryard in the village, and drop in each one of them one fluffy feather." The peasant did as he was told. Then he came back to the monk and announced that he had done penance for his folly. "Not yet," replied the monk. "Take your bag, go the rounds again, and gather up every feather that you have dropped." "But the wind must have blown them all away," said the peasant. "Yes, my son," said the monk, "and so it is with gossip. Words are easily dropped but no matter how hard you try, you can never get them back again."

William the silent, got into history by saying nothing. Teddy R. got into history by saying much. William, the silent, is not credited with any great works. Teddy R. is credited with the use of the Big Stick. As a general rule the main objection to too much talking is the person so afflicted has little time to do anything else. And on the other hand another objection says that people who want to sleep don't want much talking around. It isn't whether you say little or much, or the things you handle or touch but the motive you have in view that is going to see you thru. Talk should be the expression of the soul to guide weary travelers to the heavenly goal and not the affliction of parrot's disease which throws our friends affection to the breeze. So let's say what we believe and believe what we say, and let the ships fly where they may; for we must remember that we have not long to stay, and the time is short for us to make hay. So let it make no difference whether we hit or we miss, the thing to do is to grind out our grist; keep on saying and doing up to our best, we'll be silent enough when we get our long rest.

OBITUARY

William H. Moore, son of Moses and Margaret Moore, was born in Scipio Township, Allen Co., Indiana, June 6, 1869 and departed this life at his home in Spencerville, Indiana, March 17, 1930, aged 60 years, 9 months and 14 days.

Mr. Moore's parents were pioneer residents of Scipio Township, having settled there when the country was yet practically a wilderness. Here they built their home and reared their family, of which William was the eldest. The parents preceded him in death quite a number of years, but there remain, who mourn his departure: three brothers, Joseph, Moode, and Charles, and one sister, Mrs. Ella Schepelman.

Of these, Joseph and Charles reside in Scipio Township, Moode in Hicksville and Mrs. Schepelman in New Haven.

Besides these he leaves a wife, a foster daughter, Marcella and a host of relatives and friends.

The deceased remained with his parents in Scipio Township until his marriage with Miss Stella Zehner, May 15, 1898.

He and his bride then moved on a farm in DeKalb Co. In 1908 they removed to Spencerville where he resided until his death. About ten years ago Mr. and Mrs. Moore took into their home Marcella, an infant niece who soon became as their own daughter, and who has since resided with them. Mr. Moore's illness had been long standing, covering the twenty-two years of his residence in Spencerville and even beyond, but such was his patience and fortitude, his natural wit and cheerfulness, that few of his friends even suspected his suffering.

The past year he grew steadily worse; at times his suffering became almost unbearable, yet, through it all he was not heard to complain, and was ever ready with the kindly wit, the friendly word, and the hopeful cheerfulness that won him the friendship of every one he met.

Sermon for Today

(Rev. Homer Studabaker)

THE LORD ALWAYS

"I have set the Lord always before me." Psalms 16: 8.

This Psalm gives a prophetic picture of Him who existed in the form of God and made Himself no reputation and took upon Him the form of a servant, who humbled Himself and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. We hear Him giving in this Psalm expression of His trust in God and to the certainty of His victory over death and the grave. Our blessed Lord walked down here in the path of obedience, and thus He had His Father always set before His heart. The path He has gone through this world He has graciously left for His redeemed people to follow. His own grace and power of His spirit, whom we have received as one of the blessed results of His finished work on the cross, make this following after Him possible. Thus all believers are enabled to say, "I have set the Lord always before me," and live daily and constantly with the Lord before the heart. Such a life is a life of blessing and victory, a life unto the praise of His Name, which yields abundant fruit.

Have Kidneys Examined By Your Doctor

Take Salts to Wash Kidneys If Back Pains You or Bladder Bothers

Flush your kidneys by drinking a quart of water each day, also take salts occasionally, says a noted authority, who tells us that too much rich food forms acids which almost paralyze the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken; then you may suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

To help neutralize these irritating acids, to help cleanse the kidneys and flush off the body's urinous waste, get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in the system so they no longer irritate, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink.

One of the most popular clergymen in Belfast, Ireland, is Rev. Mount Teichelmann, which is more than 10,000 feet high, and the only peak in the southern Alps of New Zealand which had not been scaled, was recently conquered by a woman. She is Miss Kate Gardner of England. She was accompanied by H. E. L. Porter, an English alpinist. Porter declares that the views of Mounts Tasman and Cook from the summit of Mount Teichelmann "took one's breath away."

AUTOMOBILES NOW CONTROLLED BY VOICE

R. J. Wensley, engineer of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing company, demonstrating how an auto works by "voice control," a new development of the "electric eye," a light-sensitive cell. By calling into the phone, "Go," "Stop" and "Back Up," the sound impulses were transferred into waves and are picked up by the electric eye, which in turn operated the car as directed. Traffic officials at the National Automobile show, where the demonstration took place, were favorably impressed.

EUROPE IS AFTER SPEEDWAYHONORS

Manufacturers and Drivers Making Extensive Plans for 1931 Race.

Europe has definitely decided to wrest speedway honors of the world from the hands of American speed car builders and drivers—if not this year, certainly in 1931.

This is the observation of T. E. "Pop" Myers, general manager of the Indianapolis Motor speedway, who has just returned from a lengthy jaunt over the Old world gathering foreign entries for the International 500-mile race, which will be held here on May 30.

Plan for 1931 Race.

"In France, in England, in Germany and in Italy," says Myers, "manufacturers and drivers are casting their plans for competition in the Indianapolis classic. This year we are certain of the finest representation Europe can muster. But already, while they are planning for the 1930 race, they are making more elaborate and extensive preparations for the 1931 race.

"Europe took the measure of American speeds from 1913, when Jules Goux headed a foreign contingent that kept control of American speedways, until 1919, when the late Howdy Wilcox started a series of Yankee victories that kept foreign competition in the background.

"But just as England spent years and many thousands of dollars preparing for the successful shattering of the 156.04 miles an hour straightaway record of Tommy Milton, made in 1919, so is all Europe working to break the speed rule of America in the 500-mile race at Indianapolis, which is rightfully looked upon as the outstanding speed test for cars and drivers in the entire world.

"Whereas the foreign competition in May will be confined largely to individual entries, with possibly two teams of factory cars, it is definitely admitted that England, France, Germany and Italy will have one or more teams of national cars in the 1931 contest.

Importance of Preparation.

"Conscious of the importance of preparation for the gruelling test of man and metal in a 500-mile race running at Indianapolis, the speed car builders are content this year to permit individuals to carry on the task of representation. But the following year European factories will sponsor the cars which will carry their national colors in the big international race."

The survey recently made by Myers in his European trip indicates that there will be more foreign cars in the coming 500-mile race than any year since 1916. He anticipates that in 1931 at least half of the cars starting the race will be of foreign make.

Mousetrap Burglar Alarm Quite Effective on Auto

How Mousetrap Alarm Is Set to Blow the Horn If Thief Moves the Steering Wheel.

of the car. When the trap is set the circuit is open. When sprung, the circuit is closed and the horn blows continuously. The trap can be placed so that moving either the steering arm or clutch pedal will spring the trigger. —Popular Science Monthly.

Spark Plugs Often May Cause Engine "Bucking"

Missing of the engine and "bucking" frequently blamed on the carburetor are often due to nothing more than improper adjustment of spark plug or breaker point gaps or both. Before making carburetor adjustment in high compression engines the car owner or mechanic should make sure that the plug gap is adjusted according to the car manufacturer's recommendations, and breaker contact points are filed square and likewise adjusted.

Dirty or worn out plugs also cause trouble often blamed on the carburetor, and spark plugs and breaker contact points should be examined at least twice a year.

Operating Costs Lower on Average Automobile

The cost of operating an average automobile has declined 3½ cents a mile, or 35.7 per cent, since 1924. Greater fuel and lubrication economy, as well as longer life of present cars and improved highways, account for the reduced cost. The items involved in the cost are gasoline, oil, tires and tubes, maintenance, depreciation, license, garage, insurance and interest. F. A. Bower, an automotive engineer, credits three engineering contributions—oil filters, air cleaners and crankcase ventilation—with reducing cost of operation more than a cent a mile. These devices have decreased the necessity for bearing adjustments and have reduced wear on rings and pistons and materially lessened oil consumption.

May Be More Cars Than Roads Can Accommodate

The American automobile industry is making so many automobiles every day that if placed end to end the average day's production would stretch for 45 miles. The same people who used to worry about the automobile saturation point have figured out that this 45 miles a day is much faster than roads are being built, and they foresee the day when there will be more cars than roads. Statisticians, however, calculate that it will be something over two million years before this occurs.

AUTOMOBILE HINTS

Soon we will begin to see advertisements announcing the sale of houses having all the comforts of an automobile.

• • •

Exhaust valves are liable to cause trouble in the engine because of extremely high temperatures to which they are subjected.

In order to give the cooling system proper care, once each week is not too often to completely drain the radiator and refill with fresh water.

It is just a mental slip that makes so many drivers think they are helping the engine start when they use the choke before the starter gets into operation.

Loose lugs permit the tire to weave from side to side and thus induce considerably more tire wear than that due to the normal turning motion of the wheel.

Since the state of Pennsylvania has declined to pay damages to the owner of a motor car with which a deer collided, there seems to be nothing to do except start proceedings against the animal.

Note Not Exactly What Perkins Had Expected

Perkins, the waiter, gazed at the picture postcard that had just arrived for him. Then a wave of purple ascended his rotund neck and spread over his face. The hallboy who had brought him the card burst into fits of laughter.

"You little hooligan!" gasped Perkins. "What the—"

"Why, what's the matter?"

"Matter!" spluttered Perkins. "Do you remember that bragging, swanking American who left here last week? I waited on him hand and foot, and when he left he said he wouldn't insult me by offering me a few paltry shillings, but would send me a note when he got to town."

"Has he sent you a banknote, then?" asked the boy.

"Not much!" gasped the infuriated waiter. "It's a picture postcard of a monkey, and the note underneath reads: 'Thy bright smile and winning ways haunt me still!'"—London Tit-Bits.

News Sheet for Tramps Published in England

Appearance of the Abraham-man's News, the new Birmingham (England) news sheet for tramps, has not only originated one of the unique publications in the world, but also revealed a language that has a place alone. "Abraham-man" is slang for vagabond. The paper is a single sheet of typed matter, evidently produced on a cheap duplicating machine. The price is one "flach," the equivalent of two cents. The newspaper contains information about "Irishmen's theaters" (prisons) and has a guide for the "blackberry swagger" (hawker) and other itinerant visitors. The best of the "wool-holes" (workhouses) are given honorable mention, and all the "gunny vials" (towns where the police dislike hawkers and tramps) are listed. The "screever" (pavement artist) is informed where he can loan chalked pictures.

Silly Old Superstition

One of the most persistent ideas during ancient and medieval times, was that jewels had sex. Dark-colored stones were supposed to be male and the lighter ones female. Under proper conditions they were said to reproduce, and in the Middle ages everybody had a cousin who had a friend who had actually encountered the phenomenon.

The Mutiny of the Albatross

By Wyndham Martyn

COPYRIGHT IN THE U. S.

Abduction and kidnaping for ransom, seizure and looting, crimes once common to the high seas, are now practically confined to the land. Why should it be so? Desperate characters still take to ships. The opportunity for successful pursuit would seem to be less on the ocean than on the land. Occurences of modern piracy are rare, but it is not illogical to expect them now and then.

In this tale of devilry at sea, the author has pictured a series of adventures that are well within the realm of probability and are about as pulse-stirring as any of those glamorous episodes celebrated in buccaneering lore. There is high romance too, not any the less pleasing because it is placed in the Twentieth century and not in a distant past.

Just picture a millionaire aboard his staunch and luxuriously appointed ocean yacht, awakening to the realization that, by a skilfully engineered plot, most of his honest crew have been replaced by a selected band of escaped convicts—all killers—men who have followed the sea and are desperate to take any chance. Picture these outlaws, inflamed by money lust and under the diabolic guidance of a master mind. Imagine the things that may happen and the rare sort of pirate story that will evolve.

The skipper was dependable and there were others brave and trustworthy, but it was soon obvious to Elgar Radway that he and his guests were under a dire menace. It was the menace of criminality backed by brains. The steward was no ordinary functionary of the type. In him you will find a mystifying personality, an arch-criminal new to the pages of adventure fiction.

CHAPTER I

Mr. Unwin Makes a Call

The financier, sitting alone in his remote and splendid library, looked up with a scowl at the apologetic secretary who came softly in.

"But," the secretary was reiterating, "he says he is a very old friend. Unwin is the name. Tubby Unwin, sir. He said you would remember him by that."

He could see that his employer remembered. Something of the hardness fell from the face. Gibbons had gone back in that moment of recollection almost twenty years. Of course, he remembered "Tubby" Unwin. And with Tubby there swam back into memory that other one of the three, Howard Bettington. They were inseparables at Cambridge in the old days. Every year they swore to have a reunion; and in the eighteen years that had gone by he had not seen them once!

"Tell him I'm too busy to see anyone for three days. Then ask him to dinner." Gibbons thought a moment. "Find out from him if Betty—Howard Bettington—is in New York. If he is, ask him to dinner and let me know when they are coming."

The secretary, assuming an intimate of his employer's must be of the favored classes over whom kind monetary angels hover, gave Unwin the message and supposed he was telephoning from another fine residence.

Floyd Unwin's home was not of the kind to awaken envy even in a Gibbons secretary. It was a small apartment on the fourth floor of a structure now dwarfed by light-absorbing and scornful buildings which hemmed it in. Unwin's daughter, Mary, used to say it looked as though it wanted to run away and hide, but dare not. If the place had no beauty it was home to the Unwins; and there was a roof garden which endeared the commonplace flat to them.

It was to this retreat that Floyd Unwin took his way on the receipt of Gibbons' message. His wife, who spent most of her invalid hours on a couch, looked up with a smile. She was one of those really good women who accept bodily ills as God's judgments; she felt her long illness was sent in some mysterious way to prepare her for eternal life.

"I'm to go there to dinner next Wednesday," Unwin said, "and I'm to ask Howard Bettington. Gibbons is a very big man. They say, in ten years' time he will be the greatest capitalist in the country." Unwin mused a moment. "He was always inclined to be hard and masterful. . . . And yet, to think that but for me and my coaching, he would never have got his A. B."

Unwin fell into a mood of depression. At college he had been esteemed brilliant, and Gibbons had been accounted dull. And Gibbons was a multi-millionaire. And Floyd Unwin solicited advertisements for a trade journal and was its associate editor! Then he thought of Howard Bettington, who had made some success as a painter of seascapes. Bettington was the best of the three. He was better looking, better bred and could have attained eminence in anything he set his mind upon. And he had chosen to adventure into far corners of the earth and seas and every now and then exhibit his unusual canvases to the appreciative few who admired but did not buy.

"Did you close that contract?" he heard his wife ask. The contract had been talked over a great deal. The commission would have removed the steady calling of an intolerant individual who concerned himself with payments of furniture on the instalment plan.

Unwin removed a dead leaf from a plant. He did not want to meet his wife's eye.

"The time was not ripe," he said, a little weakly. "Next month, perhaps."

His wife said nothing. To her it was an evidence that God desired her to be yet more strengthened and purified by suffering.

"Do you think Mr. Gibbons will?" she asked presently.

"Yes," Unwin answered. "Why shouldn't he? It's a solemn moral obligation and I'm not sure it isn't a legal one also. Gibbons was always a man of his word. I know he has the name for being hard in his dealings, but this is different."

He paused as he heard footsteps. "But not a word to the children. I don't want to raise their hopes and then have to disappoint them."

It was Mary, eighteen and sweet, and now hopeful. She held in her hand a packet of the literature that Smith college sends out to those who seek to know her charms and terms. Mary was more than anxious to enroll. And during the last week her father had been letting fall sly hints that Northampton might not seem so far away as she thought.

"Did you close the contract?" she asked, when she had kissed them.

"Money is tight," said Unwin, again plucking leaves. "I shall try them in a month's time."

He saw Mary droop a little. He knew the disappointment. It nerved him to give her uncalled-for encouragement.

"I've something up my sleeve better than that old contract. On Thursday morning ask me what I mean. It may mean Smith for you and Tech. for Bob."

"It seems too good to be true," the girl said. "Daddy, I'm so tired of being Mr. Radway's stenographer. I'm in a constant atmosphere of fear and it's bad for me. Every one in the office trembles when he comes in. If it weren't that he pays more than I'm worth I'd leave tomorrow."

When she had gone down to prepare the evening meal Unwin looked at his wife anxiously. "Mary is a very beautiful girl," he said. "I wonder if undesirable men try to force themselves on her." He walked about the roof garden aimlessly. That was his chief defect, this uncertainty of aim.

Bob, the seventeen-year-old son, with the mechanical turn of mind, came in. Unwin turned to greet him with a cheerful smile. He anticipated the unasked question.

"I didn't get it," he said; "money was tight. I went in at a bad time. Next month, perhaps. I'm sorry, Bob."

The boy was taller than his father. In a sense he was a more resolute and reliable man. He put his arms about the elder with a protective gesture. "I know you did your best," he said simply.

And all through the dinner poor Unwin was haunted by the certainty that he had not done his best.

* * * * * * *

When the hour for dinner drew near Gibbons was inclined to blame the pale secretary that men like Bettington and Unwin, with whom he had now no common ground of intercourse, should be his guests.

Outside the house Floyd Unwin was waiting for Howard Bettington. He needed moral support. He had come, so he told himself, upon a task that hardly promised success. He cursed himself for his perpetual enthusiasms. It had looked so simple, so probable, so assured. He had been losing courage ever since he had donned his ancient evening dress.

He had not seen Bettington for almost ten years, but there was no mistaking the tall form that came toward him out of the gloom. Together they knocked at the bronze doors. In the few moments that elapsed before a footman opened to them, Bettington found himself ashamed that the old friendship had meant so little. He was conscious, vividly, of the good, dreaming student days, when Unwin had been so close a friend. He had forgotten Unwin after the first few years. Unwin had married while at Cambridge. Then came the girl and the boy. Bettington had once sent his old friend a painting. That was all. As to Gibbons, that was different. The financier was so constantly spoken of that he was fresh in the mind. But all these years Howard Bettington had not once tried to meet him. He had heard him speak at a public banquet and had seen that the man he used to like was dead. In his place had come the grasping, unscrupulous capitalist who was to carve his way to power.

The footman, when he had ushered the guests into a hall, where the butler stood commandingly, looked curiously at them. He knew they were not habitues of the Gibbons home, or, indeed, of any of those great homes where such as he were content to serve. At Bettington the lackey looked with faint approval. Bettington wore, as was his custom, a black velvet dinner coat. But it was well cut and the man moved as though these magnificent halls were his usual haunts.

It was at Unwin, poor Floyd Unwin, scholar and failure, that the menservants looked with scorn. Such garments were not now worn. Bettington saw that Unwin was losing what small confidence he possessed. He patted the shorter man almost affectionately on the shoulder and simulated approval. "You look splendid," he murmured, "I suppose I ought to have worn full dress, too."

Unwin trotted by his side vastly gratified. Gibbons was standing with that faint sneer on his face which had become habitual. The financier was prepared to be thoroughly bored. He judged man by his ability to make money; and with these standards he had only contempt for the small, nervous man who peered through thick lenses at him. He looked with deeper interest at the painter.

"It doesn't seem possible we are all of an age," he said, when they were seated. "Tubby looks fifty, I look forty, and I'm d—d if Betty doesn't look ten years less. How do you do it?"

Bettington resented the sneering manner in which the successful man of affairs regarded Unwin.

"To me you look the elder," he said suavely. "Tubby may have put on weight, but there's age in your face, Three Brass Balls, and wrinkles a half-inch deep."

Gibbons flushed. He had not forgotten the old nickname given him in jest, for his ability to make small gains in loan and barter. He looked across the silver-laden table at Bettington. The painter had a clear eye and a clear skin. There was a youthful poise of body and a litheness which had long since left Gibbons. He glanced sourly at the other man. Even there he felt beaten. Unwin's gaze was serene and untroubled. There was a certain simplicity and directness about him which seemed childish.

"I've worked," Gibbons snapped; "that gives one lines and wrinkles."

"You've hated," Bettington answered; "your face is a chart of uncharitable emotions. Your sort of success stamps its victim. Tubby and I have worked, too, remember."

"Indeed, I have," Tubby sighed and thought of his non-success as a solicitor of advertising.

Gibbons looked about him. His guests, following his glances, saw what he meant. There was superb luxury everywhere. Did not these two men realize that they were being sumptuously entertained in magnificent rooms by one who had no greater opportunities in youth than they? Less opportunities. Unwin was always a student to whom academic tasks were easy. Bettington had a small property when Gibbons had but an allowance from a distant relative. From the pale secretary Gibbons had learned that Bettington had passed his life mainly in traveling and painting the sea in her sterner moods. His pictures were not such as to attract the dealer, although his fellows revered him for his art. Economically he was a failure. And yet Gibbons could not rid himself of the feeling that they were not impressed by his position. There was something stinging and irritating in it.

And he was annoyed to find that these two quiet guests were re-establishing that sense of unasserted superiority which they had exercised in college. There had been a time when these two meant more to him than any other men. And when success came to him he forgot them. Gibbons grew a little ashamed; but the feeling lasted only a few moments. His arrogance banished it. He had succeeded; they had failed. He was even a little gratified when the pale secretary bowed his way in with two cables which demanded immediate attention.

"Made a million or so?" Bettington asked quizzically, when the secretary had taken down the answers and gone out. "Or lost one?"

"Radway is the loser," Gibbons smiled. "I have just taken a railroad from him and he's too drunk to know about it till tomorrow."

Tubby Unwin made an unexpected remark.

"That will be the Memphis and Toledo road," he said. "It is Radway's pet lamb."

"How the h—l do you know that?" Gibbons snapped.

Unwin came to himself with a start. He realized that he had repeated something Mary had told him in confidence. He made a gesture as though to say, financial secrets were not hidden from him entirely.

"Well, as you know so much about Radway, you'll be astonished to learn I've got him on the run. There isn't room in New York for Radway and me."

He told them something of his detestation for Radway; of how these five years he had been setting snares for him. "I never forgive or forget," Gibbons boasted.

"I see that all marked on the chart which is your face," Bettington answered.

"Anything else you see?" Gibbons sneered.

Bettington gazed at him steadily. The painter's good looks and splendid features forced themselves on the capitalist.

"I see what all charts mark. Rocks, quicksands, reefs. You're headed for them, Gibbons."

There was something dominating about Bettington. Gibbons felt it even in his magnificent home in a moment of financial triumph.

"The unsuccessful," he said acidly, "always feel they have the right to criticize. It's about the only thing they can do; and they do that badly."

"So you call me unsuccessful?" Bettington demanded. Then he smiled a little. "You are wrong. I've accomplished what I set out to do. And I have what you will never have—contentment. The difference between us is we measure success by different standards."

"I'm the unsuccessful one," Unwin declared. "I have not done what I set out to do."

"You don't have to advertise the fact," Gibbons said, still a little irritated. "I can see it."

Bettington felt the protective instinct calling him to defend the small, shy friend of other days.

"It amazes me to think you troubled to give so elaborate a feast for two unsuccessful men. Why?"

"Ask Unwin," the host returned. "He told my secretary he had important business with me, and as I was busy all day and every evening but this I suggested a dinner. Thinking of Tubby brought you to my mind, and I asked you, too. I'm waiting to know just how important this business it."

Unwin drew from his pocket a half sheet of paper and passed it across the table to Gibbons. The dinner was now at the coffee and liquor stage, and menservants had withdrawn from earshot. Gibbons took it with a frown and read it through.

"We, the undersigned," he read, "being about to separate, do hereby swear that if one of us attains fortune and the others do not, the lucky one shall aid the unsuccessful cheerfully and unasked in any way he is called upon to do.

"HOWARD BETTINGTON ('Betty').
"FLOYD UNWIN ('Tubby').
"ALFRED GIBBONS ('3 Brass Balls')."

Gibbons handed it back to Unwin.

"It's interesting," he admitted, "but not legal. It would have no value in a court of law. I tore my copy up years ago."

Bettington reached for it and scanned the document.

"I'd forgotten all about it," he said.

"Had you?" Gibbons said with a sneer.

"It may not be legal," he heard Unwin saying nervously, "but in a matter of old friendship the spirit counts, not the letter."

"Which shows you to be as foolish at forty as you were at twenty," said the financier.

Bettington was conscious more fully than ever of Unwin's dejection. The hope which had sustained him seemed now to have left him dull, broken and speechless. Bettington put his arm about the bowed shoulders.

"Oh, Tubby," he cried, "are you so poor a judge of human nature as to come to Gibbons for help? If I had known you were in need you might not have had this humiliation. Within this very week I've bought a camp and paid for it. I could have deferred payment easily enough. What do you need it for?"

"It's my children," said Unwin quietly. "They are crying, not for food, but for education. It's another species of starvation. I thought if Gibbons would advance enough money to get them where they want to be, I'd pay it off little by little. I see I was wrong. He is not the man we knew."

Gibbons moved a little uneasily. The years he had almost forgotten awoke in his mind with a peculiar distinctness. He did not like to remember that he was the author of the document and executed it with the feeling that he was a beneficiary under its terms. He had thought nothing could stay Howard Bettington in his fight for fortune. Even Tubby Unwin, distinguished scholar, seemed far more likely to make a name than the undistinguished Gibbons. Changes. Changes.

"How old is the girl?" he demanded.

"Eighteen," said Unwin. "She wants to go to Smith."

"What about the boy?"

"He's a year younger. They tell me he's a genius mechanically. He yearns to enter the Massachusetts Institute of Technology."

"Nothing to it," said Gibbons scornfully. "If he had a yearning for business I might help. Let him think it over. What's the girl doing?"

"She is one of Radway's stenographers. She has great opportunities there, but her heart isn't in the work."

"Radway!" Gibbons snapped. "That's a good way to recommend her to me. Radway is my open and avowed enemy." He frowned as he thought of it. Then he smiled almost amiably. "Private stenographer?" he asked. "Or just one of the bunch in the office?"

"Private," Unwin answered. "You see, she knows French and Spanish perfectly. Even Radway approves of her."

"She knows a lot about his private affairs, I suppose. I wondered how you learnt of the Memphis and Toledo road. You got it from her. Look here, Tubby. Tell her the chances of bright women in business are enormous; they far exceed any jobs colleges offer. I may make a place for her in my organization if she is as bright as you say. Send her to see me tomorrow. If she's bright she'll make more money than her father."

"This is one of the times I wish I had taken to commerce instead of art," Bettington commented. He had every sympathy with a girl who wanted more education; apparently Gibbons had none.

"You'd have failed at it," Gibbons retorted. "Men of your kind always seem to think any fool can make a success of business and get where I am. I'm the sort who wins. Where would you be in a situation where supreme courage and resolution were required? I'll answer. You'd be found wanting. You've lived a remote life. If you haven't liked a place or a climate you've gone somewhere else, looked for something easier."

Bettington smiled a little. "I don't know," he said. "I've been in some tight places in far corners of the earth and I have not always lost. After all, Gibbons, what do you know of me or Unwin?"

"I know," said the capitalist hotly, "that one seeks the security of a trumpery job and the comfort of a pitiful pay envelope, and the other gets out of the fight by daubing canvases." His manner became less bellicose. "Don't forget to send the girl around. I'll see that she is sent right into my private office and that's a privilege some would pay high for."

His guests understood that the audience was over. Alfred Gibbons had no more interest in them. In a sense they were dismissed.

Bear's Propensity for Hugging Termed Myth

The proverbial hugging propensity of bears is probably a myth, notwithstanding a vast amount of alleged testimony to the contrary. Literature, reference books and works on natural history contain numerous references to the "crushing embrace" or "deathly hug" of bears. Pope, for instance, says, "'Tis a bear's talent not to kick, but hug." Nearly all careful observers are agreed that this notion is erroneous. It probably arose from faulty observation. Dr. W. Reid Blair, director of the New York Zoological park, says on this subject: "In regard to the proverbial hug, the story is apparently devoid of foundation. A bear, on account of its anatomical structure, strikes round with its paws as if grasping, and the blow of its powerful arm drives its claws into the body of its victim, which action apparently gave rise to its hugging reputation."—Exchange.

Christmas Fireworks

Both the Chinese and Hindus employed fireworks in their religious festivals long before Europeans knew of gunpowder. Other people copied them. Ancient races used firecrackers, roman candles, and fireworks in connection with the winter solstice celebration. Such pagan ideas have since been incorporated into modern religious and other observances. In Italy and other countries this pagan feature continues in some Christian religious festivals to this day. Christmas eve in some of the Southern states resembles the Fourth of July. There are elaborate fireworks displays, and the children get firecrackers in their Christmas stockings.

Historic Cathedral Bells

In the fourth story of the north tower of the famous cathedral of Chartres are two fine-toned bells, cast in 1840, from the tenor of which the Angelus rings out each evening. Four further bells—named Anne, Elizabeth, Fulbert and Piat—occupy the fifth story; these are dated five years later and one at least possesses an interesting history. When Anne of Brittany visited the cathedral she was so impressed by a boy's voice that she begged the authorities to release him to her, which they did, whereupon she said: "You have given me a small voice and now I will give you a big one." Years ago this bell was rung for an hour every evening during a certain period of the year, that there might be abundant harvest.

Reno's Odd Income

Matrimonial entanglements enriched Reno by more than $1,500,000 in 1929, according to an estimate by the county clerk, E. H. Beemer. He said the figure was conservative. Fifty dollars each was paid by 2,106 applicants for divorce as court fees and their attorneys charged $250 as a minimum retainer, while several paid between $10,000 and $25,000 for their decrees. The county clerk estimates living costs at $25 a week and each person had to reside within the county at least 90 days. With the 3,210 permits to wed issued during the same period, Beemer said newlyweds spent about $30,000 for the permits and fees to the ministers of the city.

Makes Life Sweeter

Children's stomachs sour, and need an anti-acid. Keep their systems sweet with Phillips Milk of Magnesia!

When tongue or breath tells of acid condition—correct it with a spoonful of Phillips. Most men and women have been comforted by this universal sweetener—more mothers should invoke its aid for their children. It is a pleasant thing to take, yet neutralizes more acid than the harsher things too often employed for the purpose. No household should be without it.

Phillips is the genuine, prescriptional product physicians endorse for general use; the name is important. "Milk of Magnesia" has been the U. S. registered trade mark of the Charles H. Phillips Chemical Co. and its predecessor Charles H. Phillips since 1875.

With the advance in the use of canned meals, why doesn't somebody invent a multiple can opener that will open six at a time. Mrs. Shook Entertains Bureau Ladies

Spencer Township Home Bureau Holds St. Patrick's Party

Mrs. Winnifred Shook very pleasantly entertained the ladies of the Spencer Township Home Bureau at a St. Patrick's party at her home Wednesday afternoon, March 18, 1930.

Mrs. Claudia Hafner opened the regular meeting with the song, "The Wearing of the Green." Mrs. Gertrude Wasson gave her work and trip to the Purdue Short Course. Mrs. Eva Wilmot gave half of her work she received at the first project lesson in Auburn. The rest will be given at the next meeting.

The Irish program was in charge of the hostess, Eva Wilmot, and Gaylon Tustison. The ladies were all given green crepe hats and an Irish name for the afternoon. The roll was called by their Irish names and they responded by giving Irish jokes.

The members were called on by their Irish names to sing and give solos and readings. A quartette was also selected to sing "The Pig in the Parlor." A sextette was asked to sing, "The River Shannon." This caused a lot of fun and laughter as no one was prepared to give their part of the entertainment.

Refreshments were served by the hostess and committee.

HOME BUREAU MET AT COUNTRY HOME

The Home Bureau meeting for March 21, was held at the pleasant country home of Mrs. Ann Sechler. Meeting was called to order by the president. The meeting was opened with singing led by Mrs. E. R. Kinsey, following was the business session in charge of the president, Mrs. Borthwick. Secretary's report of previous meeting was read and approved, roll was called with twenty-four members responding with their favorite song.

Talk by Mrs. Clay Coburn "How to Use Essential Foods," which was very interesting and instructive. We were then favored with music on the Victrola. Following were short talks on "Resolved that good taste is more important than wealth in making a beautiful home," by Mrs. Inez Hadsell, Mrs. Marie Draggoo and Mrs. Grace Dilley, which was enjoyed by all. After which was a song, "Home Sweet Home." Project leaders, Mrs. Laura Washler and Mrs. Neva Jennings, gave very interesting talks on "Home Furnishings." We were pleased to have with us one guest, Mrs. Frank Sechler.

Delicious refreshments, consisting of angel food cake, pineapple whip and coffee were served by the hostess and committee.

NEGLIGENCE OF BANKER BLAMED IN FATAL CRASH

The death of Beverly Alwood, the Butler girl killed March 16 in an automobile accident north of Waterloo on state road 27, was due to negligence on the part of G. M. Semmes a Gary banker, according to the verdict of Coroner John R. Clark of Auburn.

Semmes attempted to drive around two other cars on the brow of a hill when he could not, according to his own testimoy, see 500 feet ahead, as required by the Indiana law. He admitted that he could not see more than 200 feet ahead. At the same time an automobile was approaching from the opposite direction and in order to avoid a head-on collision Semmes steered his car in front of a light roadster driven by Joffrey Williams of near Auburn. Semmes' heavy car struck the roadster and caused it to turn over down the hill. Miss Alwood was in the roadster and she died a short time later from her injuries.

It is expected that Richard W. Sharpless, prosecuting attorney, will bring the case to the attention of the grand jury which is now in session.

MR. FARMER: ARE YOU SATISFIED? IF NOT, WHY?

It is not our purpose in this discussion to attempt to offer a panacea for all the farmer's troubles. That would be presumptuous. We wish to make only some suggestions which might be helpful in developing a different line of thought. Everywhere we hear farmers complaining about their failure to make money. Surely there must be some causes for this. These we wish to discuss briefly.

The farmer produces and markets his products competitively. Comparatively very little has been done in either cooperative buying or selling. In most other businesses just the opposite is true. Purchases are made in large quantities at a much lower cost than if bought in small quantities. Restricted immigration is helping to raise the standard of living of the factory laborer by removing the competition of cheap foreign labor, but the living standard of the farmer is not correspondingly raised. This raises the price of the commodities which the famer has to buy. Taxation is based upon property values and not upon income except in the case of taxes collected by the federal government upon large income. The farmer is thus forced to pay a higher percentage of taxes while the high salary industrial worker escapes with a comparatively small tax. Due to lack of cooperation, over production of grain and live stock keep prices down. Another thing which in some cases keeps him poor, is that he does not keep records of his business, and therefore does not know what phase of his business is making money and what one is losing money. How long would a manufacturer or merchant remain in business if he kept no cost accounts?

This is in brief a statement of the situation. Now for some remedial suggestions. Cooperation in production and in buying and selling would help to solve the problem. The Federal Farm Board is organized for the purpose of assisting the famers to control production, to cut down any articles of over-production and to increase articles of under-production, and to assist in distributing the marketing of his products over a larger period of time which would materially increase his returns. A movement has been initiated to amend the state constitution of Indiana to do away with property tax and to substitute for it an income tax. This would place the burden of taxation upon those best able to carry it. The farmer who is not receiving a large income would not pay very much taxes, and the man who is receiving a large income whether it be from industry or from agriculture, would carry his proper share of the burden.

If instead of scoffing at suggested new methods of farming, the farmer would try these out, he might be benefitted. Those who practice proved best methods in a business like way are making money. We know some of these. For example, if he kept cost accounts, he would know which cows are making a profit, and which grain crops are making a profit, and of course would get rid of cows which are merely boarders and would cease raising the crop which is not making a good profit. Some say the farmer has no time for this. He must work long hours. He cannot take time for such foolishness. It is possible that he might reduce his hours at physical labor at no profit by using some mental labor and increase his profits. The day for independent action and antequated methods is passed. We must use business methods and cooperate if we would hope to compete successfully with other businesses.

Vocational Teacher.

acres in the United States are farmed by individuals who give their full time to the occupation.) This change in the classification of farms is the only difference between the Census Bureau's regulations for farm enumeration in 1930 from those of ten years ago.

There is necessarily a borderland between what is a farm and what is not. Small places on the edge of towns or villages are often the homes of city workers who undertake to keep a cow, some chickens, and probably cut a little hay or raise a large garden or small crop. If the agricultural products from such a place amounted to more than $250 in 1929 it will be returned as a farm, regardless of how much or how little time the city worker gave to his farming pursuits, and regardless of how small the tract of land tended. Indeed, if a man living on Fifth Avenue of New York City raised more than $250 worth of strawberries or asparagus on a lot 50 by 100 feet, his place would be returned as a farm. The value of the agricultural products is the criterion.

On the other hand, a large country place of 10, 15, or 20 acres may not necessarily qualify as a farm. Actual farming or agricultural operations must be carried out before any tract of land will be classed in this category. A large country estate of a retired capitalist is not a farm if all the work done around the place consists in mowing the lawns and clipping the hedges. If the estate is of more than three acres, however, a very small amount of agricultural products could give it the rank of a farm, regardless of whether the products amounted to $250 or not. In such a case as this, it would be up to the judgment of the census enumerator to decide whether agricultural operations were being carried out. Farm land is considered "operated" not only when it is used to any significant extent for pasture or for cutting hay.

A number of agricultural pursuits not usually considered by the average person as farming comes within the Census Bureau's definition. All market and truck gardens, fruit orchards, nurseries, greenhouses, poultry yards, places for keeping bees, and all dairies in or near cities, even though little land is employed, are, for census purposes, farms, provided they produced in 1929 agricultural products of the value of at least $250. If such places are of more than three acres, they are farms regardless of the value of their produce.

In 1925, the last year in which a farm census was taken in the United States, there were 15,151 farms of less than three acres. The total number of farms in the nation was 6,371,640.

The general definition of a farm —"All the land which is directly farmed by one person, either by his own labor or with the assistance of members of his household or hired employees"—has remained practically the same since 1870, the first year in which it was used by the Census Bureau. If the figures for different ceususes are to be valuable for purposes of comparisons, they must be based on the same definitions. When the census records show that there were six million farms in the country at one time and five million at another, the meaning of the word "farm" must be the same for the two periods if useful conclusions are to be drawn, census officials have pointed out.

Sermon for Today

Rev. G. D. Stoll

Jesus: " "When I sent you without purse, and script, and shoes, lacked ye anything?"
The disciples: "Nothing."

(Luke 22: 35.)

In a certain sense the answer to the question above is not literally true. They had lacked things: they did not have purse, scrip, or shoes. And they lacked other things. For months they had been traveling with their Lord, they had spent comfortless nights lodging in boats or under trees, they had no certain food supply eating from wayside fig trees and from fields of standing grain. Sometimes they had the warm hospitality of kind friends or of their own homes. They had left all and followed their Master. Their Lord once said to one asking permission to follow him, "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head."

The end is near; it is just before his entering into the Garden of Gethsemane. He is ascertaining the value the disciples have attached to Him. Peter had just said, "Lord, I am ready to go with thee both to prison and to death." Immediately after the question under discussion, Jesus intimates they shall soon need a purse, and scrip, and shoes, and continuing the metaphor even a sword. In child-like misunderstanding they said, "Lord, behold, here are two swords." And he said, "It is enough."

We believe these disciples answered the question honestly when they said, "Nothing." They had something more valuable than purses and shoes. Even if they did not have things which purses and shoes symbolize, nevertheless they did not lack. If one has a pearl of great price which is worth the value of all other pearls, he does not lack a tiny little one. And, so, the disciples with constraining loyalty to their Lord had something more satisfying than silver and gold and clothing. They did not have worldly things, and neither did they lack them.

In our journey of life have we assorted our baggage? Are we carrying the wrong things? Are we bent with many worldly burdens and yet lack the things we need? "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me: for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls."

"Take they then our life,
Goods, fame, child, and wife,
When their worst is done,
They yet have nothing won:
The Kingdom ours remaineth."
(From the Reformation Anthem.)

WHEAT CONDITIONS IMPROVED BY RECENT SNOWS

The wheat fields of Indiana show an improvement since the recent snows according to reports received this week from over the state.

The wheat fields needed moisture as the soil had become so dry in most counties that strong winds were baring the roots by displacing the dry dirt and considerable damage was anticipated. However, the recent heavy snow covering provided sufficient moisture to prevent further damage and the prospects for a normal crop have been greatly strengthened.

Very little growing wheat was winter damaged as the crop was protected with snow coverings during the hard freezing periods. Reports from the various sections indicate a good growth for this time of year stating that the plants are green and nearly cover the surface of the fields.

It is thought that the "fly" will not trouble the crop to any extent this year. The total acreage of wheat in the state is about seventy-five to eighty per cent of normal proportions indicating an approximate yield of 28,000,000 bushels under favorable conditions from this date.

CIVIL WAR VETERAN CELEBRATES 86TH BIRTHDAY

On Thursday of this week finds Isaac Meese, veteran Civil War soldier, stomping about hale and hearty and to use his words, "eating three meals a day and feeling fine."

Of the fast diminishing number of old soldiers, Mr. Meese is among the number to hold out against the ravages of old age and exhibits a great deal of pride in the fact that he is the only veteran living in the township. The hard, long winter which we have undergone, told on the old soldier but he has recovered from his recent sickness and is much the same as spring ushers in. Mr. Meese belonged to Company H, 88th Indiana regiment which marched 2200 miles from Louisville, Ky., to Washington, D. C., participating in all of the important battles of the war, lacking two months of serving three years of actual service.

Mr. Meese was wounded twice during the battles, at Missionary Ridge and Chickamauga. In one instance his rifle was demolished but he received only a wounded hand and limb. But in all the entire war he did not spend a single day in the hospital or sleep anywhere but on the ground rolled up in blankets. Mr. Meese says that it is one of the mysteries of life how any man can go throuh three years of—what Sherman said war was—and not be killed but live to be 86 years of age and in pretty good health.

Mr. Meese believes in a supreme being and he figures out his getting through along these religious lines. He is a member of the Christian Church at this place. If he lives until next Decoration Day we will see "Ike" among the decorators, doing his bit, as has been his custom every year, of laying wreathes on the graves of his comrades in commemoration of their noble sacrifices of maintaining the union.

A "UTILITY-BUILT COUNTRY"

"America may be called a utility-built country," says the Manufacturers News." Our expansion in territory and business has always been measured by our industrial development. Our world leadership is by reason of our industrial genius and unprecedented progressiveness. "Utilities have made the United States great and we have made the utilities great. . ."

It is a fact that practically all of our social and industrial propress has occurred in the brief period since the beginning of the utility industry.

The first electric street car came into use in 1888. The telephone was invented in 1876 but many years passed before it was generally employed. The electric industry is of recent origin. It is only in the last few years that gas has come to the front, to find 21,000 uses and 70,000,000 users. Many living people can remember when the first railroad track was laid across the continent.

Practically every business depends to a large extent on electricity, gas, the telephone and fast transportation of persons and products. If we lead the world in all industrial development it is because our utilities are the most progressive and efficient. If our people have the highest living standards and wages, utilities have made this possible. The United States is indeed a "utility-built country."

France in America

View of Point a Pitre, Island of Guadeloupe.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

FRANCE'S far-flung colonial empire was advanced at the London conference for the limitation of naval armaments as a reason for a large French navy. The vast area that France once owned in the Western hemisphere has shrunk while her possessions in Asia and Africa have greatly expanded. But even in the Americas the French flag still flies at a number of scattered points.

France's farthest north territory in America, the Miquelon island group off the southern shore of Newfoundland, is little known. Even this tiny parish of granite-ribbed, fog-shrouded islets that recalls the rich empire of New France has had a stormy time of it remaining under the French flag.

It had been captured from France by Great Britain before Wolfe's victory at Quebec marked the beginning of the end of French control in Canada; and when the defeated nation ceded its vast areas to Britain, the latter gave back the Miquelons as a sort of "consolation prize." The little islands were to serve as a base on this side of the Atlantic for the French fishermen who had built up an important industry on the Newfoundland banks, as had the British themselves. The unsettled status of the islands continued, however, and between 1763 and 1815 they changed hands half a dozen times, sometimes being depopulated. Since 1815 France has held undisputed control.

St. Pierre, the capital and chief port of the islands, became very prosperous as a result of the thriving French fisheries, and in 1884 it was the the leading fishing port of the world. There were handsome homes in the little town and a social life that made St. Pierre a miniature Paris. But the Miquelons' prosperity and gaiety were cut short by a prosaic factor—bait. Affairs of empire in 1904 moved statesmen in Paris to sell the French treaty rights to catch small fish on the Newfoundland coast for some millions of francs and territory in Africa. The Newfoundland fishermen had been jealous of their French rivals on the banks, especially since a generous government subsidy enabled the French to undersell all competitors in the principal world markets. Newfoundland soon passed the "Bait Act" which prohibited the sale of bait to ships of aliens, and from that time the prosperity of the islands has waned.

Miquelon Islands Now of Small Value.

St. Pierre is now only a gray little village with a past but no apparent future. A quarter of the houses are vacant, and the quays, once thronged with vessels whose yard-arms interlocked, now have but a sprinkling of ships, even at the height of the fishing season. When bait was plentiful St. Pierre was a real base of operations. Now the decimated French fishing fleet operates from France, putting in at St. Pierre only incidentally. Economically these last of France's North American possessions amount to little; but France values them for the same reason that Great Britain has valued Newfoundland: as a field for the training of seamen, and therefore as a strengthener of her navy.

The Miquelon archipelago consists of Grand Miquelon, some twelve miles long by six wide, Petite Miquelon or Longlade, a trifle smaller, and St. Pierre, only seven miles by two. In addition there are a number of tiny rocky islets of little importance. St. Pierre, though the smallest of the three major islands, has always been the center of population because of its harbor. In the days of its prosperity the town had 6,000 residents and 10,000 additional Frenchmen sometimes thronged its streets during the fishing season. Now the village never sees more than 3,000 people at any time. Many of its discouraged residents have emigrated to the United States.

What was long the only French cable to the New world emerges from the Atlantic at St. Pierre and then continues from that station to the Massachusetts coast. But even as a news door to America the Miquelons no longer seem essential. Since 1898 a second French cable has stretched directly from France to the United States.

A political detail is eloquent of the changed status of the Miquelons. At St. Pierre is the "governor's residence." But no governor now graces it. In these, the days of their decadence, the affairs of the Miquelaise are attended to by an "administrator."

France's next American possessions, islands at the eastern edge of the Caribbean sea, Gaudeloupe is the largest of the Lesser Antilles. This island group has suffered many natural calamities.

France in the West Indies.

To the visitor going ashore, Point a Pitre, the commercial capital of Guadeloupe, does not look like a town prepared for the worst. But it always is. Point a Pitre is prepared, and Basse Terre, the capital, and all Guadeloupe is prepared for hurricanes, earthquakes and volcanic eruptions. Its preparedness is to be seen principally in the construction of its houses. When a news story says that suburbs of Point a Pitre have been laid flat, it gives more worry to the outside world, probably, than to the Guadeloupians. Frequent experience with hurricanes has taught them to build with light wood. Let the wind blow their houses down. This type of house can be built quickly and cheaply.

Guadeloupe, with its nearby islands, Marie Galante, named for a Spanish flagship; Desirade, named because it was the desired island sighted by Columbus; and the Saints, comprise an area half as large as our smallest state, Rhode Island. All year around the natives enjoy the perfection of a tropical sea climate; all the year except when a hurricane bursts out of the east.

Two shipping lines connect Guadeloupe to France. The island people are proud of France. They copy her sidewalk cafes and her food; they cling to a French patois; three thousand of them marched to Moscowswith Napoleon; and many of them served under the Tricolor in the World war.

By travelers, however Guadeloupe is remembered chiefly for her porteuses, her swizzles and for obeah.

The swizzle is a drink made of ingredients produced by the islands—Guadeloupe rum added to crushed limes, ice and a little sirup. The concoction is whipped into a froth and sipped at the end of each sentence during a leisurely conversation.

Obeah, on the other hand, is something that does not exist. Almost no one can be found who will admit he believes in it, yet many do. Obeah is a charm; it is black magic, allied to the practices of voodoo worship. In the past sudden and unaccountable deaths have been charged to the obeah "doctors" so the government and church authorities have tried strenuously to eliminate this pagan custom brought from Africa. Advice sometimes is given to strangers that in a crisis they can escape any difficulties with the natives by shouting an obeah curse which will make them scatter like chaff in a hurricane.

Fame of Martinique.

Farther south, beyond the British island of Dominica, lies perhaps the most famous of French American possessions, Martinique, island birthplace of Empress Josephine. The island has an area of 385 square miles, much of it mountainous. The population is about 250,000 and is therefore very dense—much greater in the inhabited portions than the indicated average of 649 to the square mile.

Martinique suffered a great tragedy in 1902 when its famous volcano, Mt. Pelee, erupted and totally destroyed the nearby city of St. Pierre with a loss of 40,000 lives. There was even a suggestion that the whole of Martinique be abandoned; but only one-tenth of the area was devastated, and the island is now more prosperous than before, while the population has increased from 182,000 to 250,000. St. Pierre, which was the metropolis and most beautiful town on the island, has never been rebuilt. Fort de France, the capital, has grown rapidly since the catastrophe and is now a city of more than 40,000 inhabitants.

The southernmost of France's American territories is French Guiana on the mainland of South America. This, too, is the most extensive patch of French land in the Western hemisphere, embracing 34,740 square miles. The area of the colony is thus slightly greater than that of Maine or South Carolina. In this extensive region there are less than 50,000 inhabitants (exclusive of native tribes) and about one-third of the 50,000 live in the chief town, Cayenne. French Guiana is, on the whole, hot and moist, and large areas are covered with dense forests. The colony is best known, perhaps, because of its off-shore penal colony, Devil's island, to which France sends her most hardened and notorious criminals.

The SANDMAN STORY

NURSE FOG'S STORY

"IT'S a splendid life," said Nurse Fog, "as it's so exciting.

"Maybe you wouldn't think it exciting, but I do, at any rate."

"I should think at times," said Billie Brownie, "you'd become tired of hanging so heavily over the water and over places."

"Oh, no," said Nurse Fog, "I love it. You see, I have friends and relatives and there are my raindrop charges."

"Have you many friends?" Billie Brownie asked.

"To be sure," said Nurse Fog.

"I shall tell you about them if you would like to hear," she added.

"I would indeed," said Billie Brownie.

"In the first place," said Nurse Fog, "I always come around when warmer air begins trying to play with the cold sea. That mixing of the two never fails to bring me about. So I call the warm air together with the cold sea both great friends of mine.

"Not in the Least. I Am Not Sensitive," Said Nurse Fog.

"Then when my sister Valley-Mist is about, the same thing is happening, only it is the cooling of the land mixing with the air that causes the dew mists in the country.

"In the winter hoar frosts take the places of the dew mists of the summer time, but they are all my friends wearing winter costumes.

"They're my foggy friends and relatives.

"In the winter instead of having rain you have snow, but when the raindrops freeze and let themselves be covered with rain again and then freeze still more, you say you have hailstones."

"I think you and your family are most interesting, Nurse Fog," Billie Brownie said, "but I do love the sunshine almost best of all, I do believe. I hope you won't think I'm rude."

"Not in the least," said Nurse Fog. "I am not sensitive, anyway.

"But, Billie Brownie, maybe you give the Sun too much credit. If it weren't for all the particles of spray from the ocean and dust from the ground and all the parts from flowers, and the countryside and even city dust that go flying through the air, the sun would not be so beautiful.

"It is because of all these that the sun is able to cast his blue rays and lights about the sky and make the beautiful blue sky. He can't do it all by himself.

"Every one and everything need help. No one can act all alone, you see, Billie Brownie."

"I am sure this is all news to me," he added.

"And I shall tell them this as soon as I get back to Fairyland and Brownieland."

"And you'll tell them that old Nurse Fog told you?" she asked.

"Yes," promised Billie Brownie.

"Give them my love," she said after a moment. "Now I must put my great shawl about me and see my friends Warm Air and Cold Ocean."

So Billie Brownie said good-by and went back to Brownieland and Fairyland thinking of how the particles that fly about in the air scattered the beautiful lights and rays from old Mr. Sun, so that people could have a beautiful sky and colors of such beauty to gaze upon.

"Certainly," he said to himself, "we all need some help.

"Even old Mr. Sun has to have it."

He arrived home and gathered all the Brownies and the Fairies and the Elves and the Gnomes and the members of the Bogey family and the members of the Oaf family, old Mr. Giant, Witty Witch and all of the others, and told of his remarkable talk with Nurse Fog.

And all in Fairyland thought it was one of the most interesting tales he had ever heard, which he had brought back to them this time.

They sent the Breeze Brothers about with messages to tell others about this, too.

For the news was too wonderful to keep to themselves. Much too wonderful for that!

For the Brownies and the Fairies and the Elves and the Gnomes, and all of the rest of their great families are never selfish.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

"THE BATTLE OF THE GIANTS"

NO KIND reader, this is not a story of any of the Dempsey-Tunney contests, even though these as well as many others have been referred to as the "Battle of the Giants."

There is no doubt that many of us reading this expression, possibly for the first time, in connection with pugilistic encounters, thought it a particularly apt, clever and original metaphor.

However, apt and clever though it may have been, it was not original. For the phrase "Battle of the Giants" was first used about four hundred years ago. At that time it was an allusion to the Battle of Marignano (1515), between Francis I of France and the Swiss under the Duke of Milan.

Both armies were distinguished because of the great height, strength and valor of their soldiers. So much so, that the phrase "Battle of the Giants" became classic for its apt application to these circumstances.

BLACK CATS AND LOVERS

Wherever the cat of the house is black The lassies of lovers will have not lack.

AND again to the same effect: "In a house where a black cat is kept, the spinster portion of the population will never lack sweethearts." The connection between the cat and Isis and the moon in Egyptian mythology been explained; also the reason why the black cat was especially significant because of its coat like the night and its eyes like the moon.

The idea that Egyptian mythology was a "straight out" religion is erroneous. There appear to have been as many cults and sects differing in the conception of the proper elaboration of fundamentals in Egypt under the pharaohs as there are existing in the world today.

The relation between a black cat and lovers would appear to arise from the conception of the attributes of the cat-headed goddess Pasht, who was not only identified with Isis but also with Hathor, a goddess who had many local names and forms and can with difficulty be distinguished from Isis herself if she can be at all. Now Pasht equals Hathor and the Greeks identified Hathor with their Aphrodite, the goddess of love who, in later times, became the Roman Venus. Thus we have Pasht's black cat traveling by a devious route, through some few thousands of years, to become the love inducer in a house of marriageable maidens.

THE BOY WHO STAYED AT HOME

THE parable of the Prodigal Son is a very interesting story about a boy who asked his rich and indulgent father for his inheritance. The father foolishly granted his son's request, with the result that the inheritance was rapidly wasted in self indulgence. When the money was all spent the boy decided to go home where he could have plenty to eat and not much work to do. Upon his arrival home he was greeted with the same indulgent paternal love, fully forgiven and immediately restored to his former place in the family circle. Whatever we may think of the resolutions of this runaway boy to return home, the fact remains that he would have appealed to us much more of a man had he earnestly endeavored to earn back some of the money he spent, so that he could have reimbursed his father upon his arrival home, thus giving a sacrificial evidence of the sincerity of his repentance.

L. A. Barrett.

The brother who remained at home interests us quite as much, if not more, than does the boy who ran away. Of the two brothers he is the stronger. He furnishes us an example of sustained energy and strong moral convictions. He possessed courage of the very highest order. It does not take courage to do the wrong thing. The easy way is often times the wrong way. It takes real courage to do the right thing, especially under unusual and difficult conditions. The boy who stayed at home possessed far more real courage than did his brother. Let us talk more of the boy who stayed at home. He had the resisting power which his brother did not have. He commends himself to us as the stronger and more manly of the two.

The boy who stays at home is the person needed in the busy and complex life of our modern age. He is not fascinated by the passing pleasures which self indulgence offers. The man who stays at home, be he scientist, business man, or farmer, is the real hero of the day. Doing the best we can with the materials nearest at hand, is a sure road to victory in any undertaking. Conserved strength and the power of deep and time tested convictions guarantee a successful career. Upon the strength both of character and convictions of the men who stay at home rest the future progress of our Christian civilization.

HER HEART NOT BROKEN BUT IT WAS LOST

(©, by D. J. Walsh.)

WHEN Veronica Long looked up and saw Doctor Byfield coming along the hospital corridor she knew instinctively that he was about to ask her to perform some unusual duty. She was not prepared, though, for the extreme oddity of the commission he imposed upon her.

"Mr. Leighton will send his car for you this afternoon," he told her. "You're to go right to the young man's room as soon as you arrive. He will probably be napping, but when he stirs you're to begin at once trying to pull him out of himself. You're to pose as a distant relative who has arrived for a visit unannounced. Mind—no uniform—only your prettiest and most becoming frocks. No hint of hospitals or medicines. You're to tease him, tantalize him, boss him—anything to arouse the spark I know must be left in that otherwise healthy makeup. He's in bad shape. Sneaked off and got into the war when he was a mere infant and he has never recovered from his terrible experiences overseas. I know you can help him. His family are desperate over his failure to respond to any of their efforts."

"Why pick on me, Doctor Byfield?"

"Because you're the only nurse on my staff that I'd trust to go there and not lose her head. Bob Leighton is a handsome devil and I don't want the heart of the best nurse I've got broken. Are you sufficiently forewarned?"

"Amply. I'll be good and report every day or two."

Ronnie Long was strangely confident that she knew exactly how to handle Bob Leighton's case. She had been overseas herself and was not altogether unfamiliar with cases of America's finest whom the tragedies of the World war had turned from men into seemingly immovable, stony-hearted images.

Robert Leighton, Sr., greeted her very cordially and asked her if she understood the terms of their contract. When she answered affirmatively he asked her to lose no time going to the young man's quarters.

When she opened the door softly she found herself in a large, pleasant room, beautifully furnished. One whole side of it was screened and open to a view of the mountains. Stretched out asleep on a long lounging chair lay the man whom she knew must be her "patient."

She sat down across from him and a little way off, opening her book to read, planning to begin operations by startling her patient with her presence when he awakened. Losing herself in the first interesting pages of the novel, she finally looked up quickly to be startled herself. Bob Leighton was looking at her as though he had been at it for hours, with a pair of soft brown eyes, weary in spite of the amusement in them.

He spoke first. "Are you real or make-believe?"

"You'll find I'm very real," she answered with a little chuckle. "I'm Veronica Long. You didn't know you possessed a Far Western cousin with nerve enough to wish herself on you for a visit without being invited, did you?"

"Let me see—I believe I have heard such a person mentioned, but I didn't know she hailed from the West."

Ronnie decided that she had made an auspicious beginning. Already she had aroused him to the point of feigning knowledge of her instead of stubbornly refusing to talk to her, as Doctor Byfield had warned her he might do. That night Bob decided to try dining with the family and got by with only one short lapse into one of his deadly apathetic spells.

As days lengthened into weeks the process of the treatment she was using gave Nurse Long some question. She teased Bob from his dark moods of despondency; inveigled him into doing things he utterly refused to do at first; she even angered him occasionally.

The black, dangerous moods passed slowly. She felt that she was winning, but the state of her own heart and mind, as her patient grew to be more and more himself, worried her considerably.

"Idiot!" she told her image as she was combing her hair one night before retiring. "Here you are doing exactly what Doctor Byfield warned you against. You're losing your heart to a man who is so far above you socially that he won't stop to dust his shoes on you when he learns the truth."

It had been arranged that Ronnie was to accompany Bob on a fishing trip in the Maine woods as a climax to the good work she had been doing, but she had made up her mind that she simply could not carry it through. She spoke to Mr. Leighton about it and in spite of his earnest pleading, she said she was determined to return at once to the hospital. Then she went to Bob's room to say good-by and collect a few of her minor belongings.

"What's doing?" he asked casually, watching her flit about the room. "You act as though we were starting for Maine today instead of next week."

"I am not going to Maine," she began, turning her back so that she needn't see his face. "The show's over, Bob. I'm not your cousin Ronnie from out West. I'm Veronica Long, a nurse, and I'm returning to my hospital today."

Before she guessed what he would do or say he slipped up behind her and caught her to him. Then he turned her face toward him and crushed the soft scarlet of her mouth beneath a deluge of caresses.

"My dear," he finally stopped to say, "I knew who you were and why you were coming even before you arrived. I heard Dad and Doctor Byfield plotting over the telephone one day when they thought I was asleep—listened in on my room phone here. At first I was furious and wasn't going to allow you to come in. Then some devilish, unnatural impulse prompted me to let them bring you here so that I could make you miserable, but the very first time I set my eyes upon you, as you sat here reading, I knew what was going to happen. I'm here to tell you, Ronnie, you've done the work you came to do so darn well that I'll have the most awful relapse you ever heard of if you don't promise this instant to marry me and go to Maine with me as we planned. I've known for days that I was going to try, at least, to make the trip a honeymoon. Won't you listen to me, dear? I'm no longer a sick man, but I swear to you I will be if you refuse me."

"But you and I belong to such different social strata, Bob. I—I'm a working girl, you know."

"Stuff and nonsense! Didn't we both fight to make the world safe for democracy? Wasn't the imprint you just helped to obliterate made by lying in filthy trenches alongside plumbers and gas men and butchers and bakers and candlestick-makers? Can't you make yourself care for me just a little?"

"W-e-l-l," she hesitated helplessly, "if you insist on knowing, I was running away from you because—anyway—you're the one who'll have to tell Doctor Byfield that his best nurse's heart isn't broken—it's lost—irretrievably lost!"

Obligation of Kinship Pretty Well Shattered

It is well that fathers and mothers are beginning to discover that it is hard work making their children's acquaintance, and that before they have done so it will be just as well not to bank too heavily on the innate love and wisdom which the mere fact of parenthood is supposed to give them.

There is no reason why parents and children may not be the best of friends, but it is getting to be believed that frankness is a better preface to such friendship than the mysticism of blood.

It is not merely that much of the mythology has been squeezed out of the parent-child relation, but that the greater independence of the individual within the family has brought with it the necessity of taking some effort to establish any and all of the truly valuable relations that are implicit in the family instead of taking them for granted as prior necessities.

Brothers and sisters have to earn each others' esteem. Temperamental differences disqualify the close of kin for long-enduring friendship just as they disqualify complete strangers in the world outside the family. That the younger brother fags for the older is no longer felt to be a law of nature, nor need one make it a point of honor to distribute one's deferences evenly between the maternal and the paternal kinfolk. Grandparents are no longer semidivine.

Kinship is a glorious opportunity for the meeting of minds and hearts, but in itself it constitutes neither an obligation nor a privilege.—Edward Sapier in the American Mercury.

Submarine Finds Wrecks

A one-man submarine, which can search for wrecks on the bed of the ocean, has been built at Milan, Italy. It is a torpedo-shaped boat, 53 feet long and 10 feet wide, with twin propellers, operated by electric motors, capable of developing 400 horsepower.

The underwater detective sits in a steel chamber, like a conning tower, and a similar chamber behind him contains enough oxygen to allow 60 hours under the water.

The vessel is equipped with a movable searchlight, a mechanically operated camera for taking photographs and a telephone to give the course and distance steered. Dial recorders give the depth, and there is a log to record the mileage.

Another Epidemic

The very pale-faced man entered the doctor's consulting room.

"Well, sir," said the medico, "and what is the matter with you?"

"I believe I've caught insomnia," confessed the patient nervously. "I cannot sleep a wink until round about three in the morning."

"Nonsense, man!" replied the doctor. "Insomnia is not contagious."

"It is in my case, though," returned the other. "The baby in the flat below has it."

Medieval Dining Tables

A conspicuous peculiarity of medieval dining was the fact that the guests sat only on one side of the table, the other side being reserved for the service. When there was a banquet, the tables were often arranged in the form of a horseshoe, both to facilitate the service and to provide space for dramatic performances or "cabarets," as they would be known today, which were often introduced between courses.—Detroit News.

Drives 23 Miles To Buy Gold Medal Flour

"Gold Medal 'Kitchen-tested' Flour Never Fails —Makes More Bread Per Sack" Says Miss Pearson

Miss Elna Pearson, Sioux City, Iowa

"I prove my preference for Gold Medal 'Kitchen-tested' Flour by driving 23 miles to buy it," says Miss Pearson. "Gold Medal Flour never fails. Makes more bread per sack than any other flour, and the pie crusts I make with it are the flakiest I've ever seen."

This New-Type Flour Banishes Baking Failures

WOMEN all over the country declare they have taken the "guess work" out of baking . . . Now they get perfect results every time with bread, cakes, pies and biscuits.

They use a new-type flour for all baking purposes—GOLD MEDAL "Kitchen-tested" Flour—that simplifies baking remarkably and banishes the cause of most baking failures.

Failures, experts found, were mostly due to the fact that 2 sacks of the same flour often acted differently, even with the same recipe . . . it was not uniform in oven action.

So now all GOLD MEDAL Flour is "Kitchen-tested" before it comes to you. As each batch comes through the mill it is tested by actual baking—bread, cakes, biscuits, pastries—in an oven just like yours. Only flour which acts the same perfect way every time is allowed to go out to you. Thus you know in advance exactly what your results will be.

(Changed Every 3 Months)

Please accept, free of charge, simplified recipes for 12 of Betty Crocker's most delicious baking creations. Recipes for the daintiest cakes, the finest cookies, the most popular pastries known. Each one is "simplified" until it is remarkably easy, too.

All 12 of these simplified "Kitchen-tested" recipes are inside every sack of GOLD MEDAL "Kitchen-tested" Flour. You can get a full set today—simply ask your grocer for GOLD MEDAL "Kitchen-tested" Flour.

Radio Playlet, "Romance of the West"

The Lincoln Country War, a bitter factional fight in New Mexico in the early seventies, is the background for the Conoco Adventurers' radio playlet of the western country.

Billy the Kid, one of the most famous outlaws of the Old West, who, when he was still a beardless youth of eighteen, carried several notches on his gun, is one of the principal characters in the radio playlet, "A Romance of the West." It tells the story of the three days of continuous battle which finally ended a bitter factional strife centering around the town of Lincoln. There is woven into the sketch an interesting love story, illuminated by the chronicle of the bravery of a settler's daughter, who is finally won by one of the participants in the "Lincoln County War."

Special musical effects have been devised to lend a convincing sound background to the action, and there is a touch of comedy, too, in the character of the pioneer wife who owned the only piano for miles around, and was ready to defend it with her life.

The Conoco adventurers may be heard each Thursday at 10 p. m., CST, over the NBC network.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

Deep gruff voice: Well! come on with that paved road.

May 6, Democrats will be called upon to solve another "Riddle" in this district.

No man can suffer too much, or too soon, in the interest of his country.—Daniel Webster.

Praise your neighbor for the good that is in him and praise will come back to you. Criticize him and you sleep alone.

Two old hounds discussing barn yard topics: Say, Joe, why in thunder is it that every year about this time we have to hide out or face the firing squad, while all these darned cats are left on the job to eat up the milk?

On the importance of the radio and its educational and entertaining aspects, it is remarkable how easy it is to tell who has a radio in the home. A person's conversation, the tune he whistles can be traced to the radio in his home.

And now we are reminded by politicians that we are soon to enter another year of political battles and election promises. We have just emerged from a long hard winter and now we are called upon to go through this campaign. But let her come, the American people can run through anything.

A musical composer recently wrote a selection entitled, "My Sins." We naturally assume that, owing to the fact that musical numbers are usually played by everybody, that the author meant to convey the idea that all would find use for the composition. Most authors know that everybody has a couple of sins stuck around somewhere in their reputation.

Did you ever hear this one: "If anybody aint got no more sense than to trust some one else with his money he ought to lose it." That's where the tragedy of life comes in—trying to be a Good Samaritan and a darned fool at the same time. Nevertheless there are people to be found even in this modern day who appreciate a financial favor, however few.

Are people afraid to live—to be alive, move, think, talk, censure, praise, advocate, teach, profess? Are people afraid to take a stand for the right and against the wrong? Are they ashamed of the religion of the Christ? Do they shrink at the thoughts of defending the patriotic statis of this country? Do they fear unpopularity and lonely road over which men must travel in following a conscientious rainbow? In short, have the American people developed into a generation of delicate personalities, who go about groping thru life like they expect a serious unpleasant thing to happen, if they would dare give vent to a political, religious, or moral idea that would meet with opposition? Minister and layman shy at each other. Politicians hop on a neutral fence to escape the overt question of "Wet and Dry." Merchants evade controversial subjects that would in any way put them in unfriendly relation with the customer and his dollar. The salve box has been substituted for the old fashioned out-spoken citizen of the sixties, who used to chase Indians, invading armies, and unscrupulous citizens out of the country when he failed to adhere to the moral and spiritual standards of the land. The political condition of this country has established this unmistakable fact that the United States still needs men who are not afraid of the chance to be outspoken on the issues of the day. He-men are still in demand.

Fish and Game Club Information

Mr. S. F. Zufall, of New Albany, has been appointed assistant superintendent of fisheries and game, and Mr. James Flynn, of Indianapolis, controller of game wardens. Both of these gentlemen long have been interested in conservation matters, and have been connected with various sportsmen's organizations, all of which, together with their high recommendations, assures their fitness for the respective positions. Mr. Ray D. Thompson, of Rensalaer, has been appointed custodian of the Jasper Pulaski County State Game Reserve. He was among the first to suggest the establishment of this reserve, he assisted the state in the recent purchase of the land, and is thoroughly qualified for the work.

In the fisheries service four crews will begin on April 1, the work of removing gar and dogfish from lakes. Spawning grounds in certain lakes will be staked off and fishing will be prohibited within the area until July 1. The five hatcheries are preparing for the season's operations. At Riverside and at Tri-Lakes additional ponds have been constructed, and at the latter the new plant has been completed. At both these hatcheries pike-perch and yellow perch will be hatched artificially, in addition to the natural propagation of the nesting fishes.

At the Brown County state Game Reserve the construction and improvement of roads and fire lanes is being continued. Fencing of the reserve with a single strand of wire will also be continued when the survey for same has been completed. About 15,000 evergreen trees procured from the Forestry division will be planted within a few weeks. The construction and assembling of equipment for the propagation of pheasants and wild turkeys is progressing, and the plant will be ready for operation in the season, though a late start will necessitate a moderate production the first year.

At the Jasper-Pulaski Game Reserve the construction of fire lanes and at least one road is contemplated. A survey will be made with the view of stopping up certain lateral ditches for the purpose of creating water and marshes suitable for waterfowl. About 15,000 evergreens will be planted in this reserve this spring.

The Fish and Game Division is financing the construction of a lake of 50 acres at Shakamak State Park with co-operation of the Divisions of Engineering, Forestry and Lands and Waters, this work is in progress, with prospect of early completion.

Orders have been placed for 19,000 ringneck pheasant eggs to be distributed to 127 sportsmen's organizations which have applied therefore within the time limit.

In February the wardens made 25 arrests and 18 convictions. One case was dismissed and six cases are pending. Fines and costs $436.50.

DEMOCRATIC LOVE FEAST SUCCESS

In spite of inclement weather, the Democratic love feast held in the K. of P. hall at Auburn on last Wednesday evening, was a success. This feast was the opening gun in the political activities of the community fall election and primary and the Democrats over the county came out strong, a full house being the result. A two-course banquet was served while Bill Fitzsimmons and his band of Auburn entertained the guests.

T. R. Riddle, a candidate for congress, 12th district, was the first speaker of the evening. He spoke exclusively on what he thot to be the evils of prohibition and autocratic government. Herby W. Morley, another candidate for congress, same district, spoke on the oppression of the farmer. J. I. Farley, a third aspirant for the 12th district job spoke on "Seeing things for the future." Sam Cleland, attorney of Fort Wayne, and Hon. Bernard Shiver, or Marion, Ind., were the principal speakers of the evening, who poured broadside after broadside into the ranks of the present administration on law enformecent, farm relief and unemployment situation. They ask the question, if the Democrats are to accept the blame for Grover Cleveland panic, who is to accept the blame for the present panic?

RESULTS OBTAINED BY DRIVERS LICENSE LAW

Indianapolis, April 2.—Since the drivers automobile license law went into effect, there has been 431 licenses revoked and of this number 419 were convicted of intoxication, four for petit larcency and the others for failure to stop after an accident, reckless driving, false statements in application for license and under age. The total number of licenses revoked since the first om March is 64.

This should be a warning to automobile drivers that when a license is revoked, it is a revoke to which there is no appeal, except for the first thirty days after conviction and that before a Judge of the Circuit Court. The law has "teeth" in it and it is the purpose of the law to protect the public against avoidable accidents of which a large number is traceable to wreckless driving, intoxication, and other violations of the law that endangers life and property.

This law was enacted after a strong pressure was brought upon the legislature by the newspapers, the public and users of the public highways. Several attempts had been made to enact a law, but a lack of general interest delayed action until the session of the legislature of 1929 when a law was enacted that meant all it was intended to mean and is looked upon as one of the best laws of like character of any state in the Union. Many plans were suggested, some of them good while others were unworkable, but after making special investigations the present law was put into effect. Otto G. Fifield, Secretary of State, became personally interested and that he might be well informed, he has visited a number of the states where drivers license laws were in operation and by getting the best of several laws, he succeeded in getting the present law enacted.

When the law went into effect, there was a general uprising against it, but since its good effects are beng recognized, it is being proclaimed as one of the best laws on the statute books for the protection of life and property. The toll of life taken in automobile accidents was so alarming that something had to be done and the drivers license law is the result of this popular demand.

We notice an Illinois candidate for congress making the following statement in his political ad—A vote for — — means a vote for personal liberty and immediate modification of the Volstead Act. Some guy indeed, that he can assure his supporters all that. And we just wonder if he really thinks that people will believe such a statement, and too, we would like to know how he could bring this about immediately?

One of the most striking factors in the development of the telephone in this country has been the wide distribution of ownership. At the end of 1929 there was one telephone for every six persons in the United States and ownership of the industry was distributed among about 500,000 persons, or one for every 40 instruments. Nowhere else in the world has customer and employe ownership of great industries been developed as in this country. EXPERT ADVICE
The average person knows little or nothing about the problems which arise when there is a death in the family. There are so many legal formalities, social customs and business details involved, that the layman finds himself in a bewildering maze. At such a time he naturally turns to the modern funeral director, who is prepared by training and experience not only to furnish the necessary merchandise and professional service, but to give reliable counsel and advice on all matters related to it.

SHERIFFS HAVE RECORD OF YOUR CAR

Volume one of the major numerical list of 50,000 names of owners of automobiles is now ready for distribution to all county sheriffs and chiefs of police in cities of 5,000 population or more. Another 50,000 will be sent out within the next few days and all will be mailed out by April 1. Monthly supplements will be issued during the year. Alphabetical township lists will be distributed to all county assessors by about April 10.

These lists contain the names of all owners of automobiles, their addresses, name of car, engine number and full description making it easy to trace a car when stolen or for any other purpose of identification. By the placing of this list in the hands of county assessors, hundreds of cars that heretofore escaped taxation are now on the tax duplicates. Otto G. Fifield, Secretary of State, is supervising the making of this list and the state is reaping the benefits of the splendid operation of the law. Criminals have a dread of this law, as a number of them now in the penitentiary can testify.

Bible Schools over the world are making great preparations to celebrate June 8 as the 1900 anniversary of the church. The Church of Christ here is swinging into line and making an effort to gain the goals set, such as an enlarged Bible School, every member at the communion table and some visible results in additions to the church. They are also reviving interest in reading and memorizing the Bible, four adult classes have read 1900 chapters in the last week, the younger pupils have memorized 181 verses in the same time. Pentecost must urge us on to three things, unity, prayer and evangelism, these things will vitalize its latent power as nothing else can do.

Lesson for April 6

THE LAW OF THE CROSS

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 16:13-26.

GOLDEN TEXT—If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow Me.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Proving our Love for Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Proving Our Love for Jesus.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Denying Self for Christ.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Cross-bearing in the Christian life.

The lesson topic is narrower than the Scripture text. It includes Christ taking account of His ministry, Peter's confession, Christ's prediction concerning His death and His teaching concerning the cost of discipleship.

I. Christ, the King, Taking Account of His Ministry (vv. 13-17).

1. The place (v. 13).

It was at Caesarea Philippi, the northern limit of Jewish territory, practically in Gentile territory.

2. The time in Christ's ministry.

The cross was only a few months away. The King had already been rejected. They had charged Him with being in league with the devil and sought to kill Him. It was highly important that the disciples have clear views as to Christ's person in order to stand the test of His trial and crucifixion.

3. Peter's confession (vv. 13-16).

(1) The occasion (vv. 13-15). Two questions asked by Jesus Christ provoked this confession. a. As to the opinion of the people concerning Him (vv. 13, 14). They recognized Him as a teacher and prophet of more than human authority and power. Had He been content with this, He would not have been molested in Jerusalem. It was His persistent claim of being the God-man, the very Son of God, that sent Him to the cross. b. As to the personal opinion of the disciples (v. 15). It was not epough for them to be able to tell what opinion the people held concerning Jesus. It was necessary that they have definite, correct and personal knowledge of and belief in Him. (2) The content (v. 16). It consisted of two parts. a. "Thou art the Christ." This avowed Jesus to be the Messiah—the fulfiller of the Jewish hopes and expectations. b. "The Son of the living God." This acknowledged Him to be divine. It was the recognition of His glorious person in keeping with the Jewish hope (Isa. 9:6, 7).

4. Christ's confession of Peter (v. 17).

Those who confess Christ shall be confessed by Him (Matt. 10:32, 33). Christ pronounced a blessing upon Peter—not in the nature of reward, but a declaration of the spiritual condition of Peter because of his clear apprehension of his Lord.

5. Christ's charge to the disciples (v. 20).

He asked them not to tell any man that He was the Messiah. The time was not ripe for such testimony.

II. The New Body, the Church, Announced (vv. 18, 19).

Following the confession of Peter, Jesus declared His intention of bringing into existence a new body, to the members of which He would give eternal life, and into whose hands He would entrust the keys of the Kingdom. Peter was to have a distinguished place in this body. Association in this new body cannot be broken by death, for the gates of Hades shall not prevail against it.

III. The King Predicts His Death (vv. 21, 23).

This prediction was no doubt startling to the disciples. They did not yet realize that redemption was to be accomplished through the passion of the cross. So unwelcome was this announcement that Peter cried, "This shall not be unto Thee." Later Peter saw through the darkness to the sunlight on the hilltops beyond. A new hope filled his breast (I Pet. 1:3, 4). Victory through death is yet the stumbling block of many.

IV. The Cost of Discipleship (vv. 24-26).

Life can be saved only by losing it. If we are going to be Christians, we must share Christ's suffering.

1. There must be denial of self (v. 24). There is a wide difference between self-denial and denial of self. All people practice self-denial, but only real disciples of Christ deny self.

2. "Take up His cross" (v. 24).

This cross is the shame and suffering which lie in the path of loyalty to Christ.

3. Follow Christ (v. 24).

This means to have the mind of Christ—to be like Christ.

The Mutiny of the Albatross

by WYNDHAM MARTYN

COPYRIGHT IN THE U. S. WNU Service

THE STORY

Floyd Unwin and Howard Bettington take dinner with an old college chum, Alfred Gibbons, financial magnate. Unwin produces a written pledge taken by the three at college to help each other in adversity, explaining that he needs financial assistance to educate his son Bob and daughter Mary. Gibbons scoffs at the "legality" of the pledge, but agrees to make a place for the daughter in his organization.

CHAPTER II

The Planning of the Cruise

"The place stifled me," said Unwin, when he was alone in the street with Bettington.

"Walk as far as my studio," Bettington suggested. "Isn't it strange that we should have lost sight of one another, I feel guilty. . . . It's true I'm not often in New York. . . . Tubby, I'll not lose sight of you now."

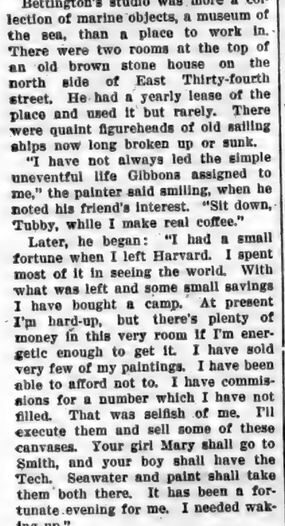
Bettington's studio was more a collection of marine objects, a museum of the sea, than a place to work in. There were two rooms at the top of an old brown stone house on the north side of East Thirty-fourth street. He had a yearly lease of the place and used it but rarely. There were quaint figureheads of old sailing ships now long broken up or sunk.

"I have not always led the simple uneventful life Gibbons assigned to me," the painter said smiling, when he noted his friend's interest. "Sit down, Tubby, while I make real coffee."

Later, he began: "I had a small fortune when I left Harvard. I spent most of it in seeing the world. With what was left and some small savings I have bought a camp. At present I'm hard-up, but there's plenty of money in this very room if I'm energetic enough to get it. I have sold very few of my paintings. I have been able to afford not to. I have commissions for a number which I have not filled. That was selfish of me. I'll execute them and sell some of these canvases. Your girl Mary shall go to Smith, and your boy shall have the Tech. Seawater and paint shall take them both there. It has been a fortunate evening for me. I needed waking up."

Unwin thought of how soon this miracle might be accomplished, which should give his children their opportunities. The narrow things at home had trained him to calculate with great niceness such adjustments. Bettington planned to start for the painting expedition within two days' time. He would start at Gloucester and wander up the coast, reaching his new camp in far northern Maine in a month's time. It were wise, he thought, to send Mary to Gibbons' office. The pictures might not sell. Gibbons might offer the girl a splendid stipend. He might seek to make amends for his brusqueness by unexpected kindnesses. Perhaps they had wronged Alfred Gibbons.

Mary looked at him next morning over the breakfast table and her eyes



"Sit Down, Tubby, While I Make Real Coffee."

asked the question her lips did not formulate.

"Smith must wait just a little," he said, "but don't be cast down, Mary. There is hope; you will yet win to Northampton. Take an hour off this very day and go and see the great Alfred Gibbons. He wants to see you. Commercially speaking, your fortune is made. He is expecting you."

* * * * * * *

Mary Unwin had been almost a year an inmate of the office of Elgar Radway; she had quickly accommodated herself to the routine of her work. She worked always at top speed, as did her employer himself, and was paid eighteen dollars weekly. The people were kindly, and Radway—notorious as a man-about-town—never mixed his pleasures with his work. She was as free from harm when taking his dictation as she would have been with a decent-minded man.

It was to him she preferred the request for an hour off. He was not pleased.

"I'm busy," he grunted. "I'm off for a vacation soon, and there's a lot to do. Don't be longer than an hour."

He looked at her curiously as she went from the office. As a connoisseur of women he admired her charm, but she was worth more to him in the office than out of it. Radway was a voluptuary of sixty who was finding out that he lived now in a soberer age and could not adapt himself to it. Gibbons' victory pointed the moral. He did not greatly fear Gibbons. He comforted himself that after a few weeks on the sea he would come back refreshed for the big game.

He was thinking of Gibbons' triumph over the Memphis and Toledo road, only made possible by the treachery of a trusted manager, when Mary Unwin entered the office of her father's one-time friend.

Gibbons was often a matter of speculation among the Radway staff. It was known that he had once been Radway's clerk and had left suddenly, breathing threats against his employer. And it seemed he had devoted his life to getting even for some grievance of whose origin none in his office had any definite idea.

Mary looked at him with a curiosity that had nothing to do with his financial position. She looked at him as one who had in the other years been a close friend of her poor, blundering, clever, but unstable father, whom she loved the more because she saw his need.

Gibbons was not prepared for a beauty. It was true, Unwin had fine features and brilliant eyes, but one remembered Unwin as the man who perpetually failed and looked apologetic. There was a cloud of depression about Unwin, which seemed to make his carriage mean and inconspicuous.

Mary was slim and held herself as though no failure or self-depreciation had ever come near her. There was something fine about her. And the brown eyes which looked at him under level brows raised a doubt in his mind as to the successful outcome of the scheme which was working in his crafty head. He first set himself to disarm her by the adoption of the air of an old and privileged friend.

"So this is little Mary Unwin," he exclaimed, shaking her hand. "Well! Well!"

It was a banal beginning, the girl thought. But she smiled. There must be something good in a man whom her father had liked.

"So you want to go to Smith?" he went on.

He could see her vivid interest now.

"More than anything on earth," she answered. "I don't suppose you can ever guess how much I want it."

"Perhaps I can," he smiled. "Your father helped me to understand."

His air was one of delight in well-doing. There was born in her heart a fluttering hope that for old friendship's sake he was going to help her. The cheeks that were usually pale took to themselves a lovely flush. She could not bring herself to ask what he meant for fear of meeting disappointment. It was good to hope after so much despair.

"I told your father I would help you. The world knows me as a hard man, but it knows me for a man of my word. I'm going to help you and your brother."

"Oh, Mr. Gibbons," she cried, "I can't believe it. It is one of those things too good to be true! How can Bob and I ever thank you enough."

He looked at her keenly. This was the ripe moment.

"You would like to feel you earned the money, rather than be under a monetary obligation to me? Is that what you mean?"

"Of course," she replied, "I should expect to earn it. But how can I?"

He leaned over the glass-topped table.

"You can," he said. "You can very easily repay me for the few thousand dollars your education will cost. You are Radway's private stenographer. Very well, you must have taken many letters from him to three men named Harrod, Harte and Buford. Haven't you?"

"Yes," she admitted.

"What I want is this. I wish you to leave Radway and bring to this office the notebooks with the letters written since the fifth of the month to these men. You will find a typewriting machine in the adjoining office. You will transcribe the letters and then forget all about it."

"Forget?" she answered, "forget all about it?"

"That's the idea," he said delightedly. He was very much relieved. He had dreaded the idea of tempting her. "Forget it entirely. Go to Smith and feel that you have earned the money. I'll tell your father it is a loan, so he will feel satisfied."

She rose listlessly; the color had gone from her cheek. She felt physically weakened. After all it was to be a life of office drudgery. Gibbons did not understand this sudden alteration.

"What's the matter?" he said irritably.

"Oh, not very much," she said, "I was only wondering how my father could ever have called you his friend."

"What?" he exclaimed. "You are going to throw away a chance like that?"

She made a little gesture of despair.

"I am going to throw it away."

He was now thoroughly angry. He had not been so upset for months.

"You deserve to starve," he snapped, "with that d—d fool of a father of yours; and will will, too."

She shook her head.

"I shan't starve, but I think I'd rather starve than do that."

* * * * * * *

Gibbons had been wrong in declaring that the Memphis and Toledo road had been taken from Radway because he was drunk. Gibbons had bid so high, that one on whom Radway relied wholly had sold him. Well, that would not happen again. For the moment there was a lull in the warfare.

It was not until some allies of Gibbons returned from Europe that the struggle would begin again. And before that happened there would be one month on shipboard, where he could fill himself with alcohol and feel he was not ruining his prospects. It was the debauch of an alcoholic long denied his pleasure.

Elgar Radway always deceived himself and others about this annual voyage. But he never deceived his wife. There had been a day, ten years earlier, when he was a national figure in politics. The death of a governor had made him, a little-heard-of lieutenant governor, the head of a great state. His financial knowledge was at the service of the White House at a moment when a black panic seemed about to devastate the country.

Senator Whitburn, of his own state, looked upon Radway as his own discovery, and talked of him so much, that his daughter, carried away by that spirit which is found so much in Washington society, found the disparity in years more than offset by his name, prominence and promise.

From the beginning the marriage was unhappy. He had found that the scandals discovered by a political rival were not to be lived down in an era when women were powers. He had gone back to his financing in New York. Evelyn Radway was a splendid hostess. She was beautiful and she was clever. The Radway dinner parties were internationally famous. He was bound to admit that she had been a great asset to him.

It was at a dinner party that he announced his intention of taking a month's vacation. There were as guests some foreign financiers.

He knew that his wife realized why he was going. He had never been able, wholly, to met the glance of those almond-shaped violet eyes with the calmness he wished. In ten years she had learned most of his secrets.

"One hears," said the president of a Paris banking house, "that you work even when making holiday, but I never believe that. No, no. It's what you call the bluff."

"I'm taking a secretary and a wireless operator," Radway retorted, "and they're there for business. And my wife will probably come, too—that is, if she cares to."

"Thank you, Elgar," she answered to his extreme surprise, "the change will do me good."

He smiled as though the prospect entranced him. He now saw himself committed to at least two extra guests. What on earth had he wanted to talk about taking a secretary for? He was even more astonished to find that his wife consented to come. She did not care for the ocean as a rule. He rather suspected that his physician had been warning her that this trip might be dangerous if he reverted to his old habits. She was coming to see that he kept within bounds.

"I am glad you are coming, Evelyn," he said when his guests had gone. "It will do you good."

"You are really taking a secretary?" she demanded.

"Certainly," he said, a trifle impatiently. "This is a business trip, as I told Monsieur Detampe."

"There's accommodation for my maid?" she said.

"Ample," he answered.

"What secretary will you take?"

He thought a moment. The two men in his office who might answer were well enough in their way, but the enforced intimacy of shipboard would probably discover unsuspected shortcomings.

"Would you be annoyed if I took a pretty girl?"

"Do you mean that slight dark girl I have seen? Oh, Elgar, how wish you would. It would be such company for me."

"If you can arrange it, I'll take her. Probably her people wouldn't let her come if I suggested it. I'll phone you her address from the office tomorrow and you can go and see her mother, if she has one. Tell her she will get twenty-five dollars a week. She ought to jump at it."

It was with the hope the girl would go that Mrs. Radway called next morning at the Unwins' home. Mr. Unwin recognized her instantly. At her marriage Sargent's portrait had helped to make her famous; since that time the society columns and Lavery's painting of her had kept her in the public eye.

The Unwins were delighted at the idea of Mary getting a whole month on shipboard. And the additional saving meant something to them.

It was Mary herself who seemed dubious. She confided in her brother.

"I have a feeling," she said, "that I ought not to go. It's a kind of presentment, I wish you could come."

"I wish they would find a job for me in the engine room," he exclaimed. His eyes brightened at the prospect of such nearness to machinery at work. "Gee! wouldn't that be luck. Sis, do you think it could be managed? Do you think there's something I could do?"

"If there isn't," she decided, "I won't go."

Radway was astounded at her demand.

"What do I want with an engine-adoring boy aboard?" he snapped. "Perhaps your father would like to go also?"

She colored a little. He decided that when she flushed she was prettier than any girl in the Winter Follies.

"I'm rather relieved," she said quietly. "I didn't want to go and now I certainly shall not."

"I suppose I shall have to find a place for him," Radway grumbled. He took up some plans and glanced at them. "There are four boats carried, I see, and one of them's a twenty-one foot launch. He shall look after it. Of course, he'll have to mess with the crew. Tell him to report to Captain Hallett, of the Albatross, at the New York Yacht club float, at the foot of East Twenty-third street. She leaves Bar Harbor tomorrow night and will be here by Sunday."

When she was gone, Radway sank down into his padded chair and told himself he was getting old. There were physical troubles multiplying with a frightening rapidity. After all, he might not be able to turn this trip into one of the old-time carouses. Presently he rang a buzzer and Mary came in.

"Take this telegram," he said: "'W. Clement, S. S. Albatross, Bar Harbor, Maine. Ship competent doctor aboard for trip. Health not too good.—Radway.'"

As she was leaving the room he called out more cheerfully. "You can insert 'young and handsome,' if you like. You'll have some one to play with then."

CHAPTER III

The Kidnaping of Howard Bettington

Bettington, as he made his way northward from Gloucester, felt a sense of happiness in that he had engaged himself to lift the Unwin family from its monetary troubles. The sketches he made—which would afterward be transferred to his big canvases—were the best he had ever done. He was pleased, who was ordinarily a hard critic. "This," he cried, as he looked at a study of surf and rock, "will pay Mary's tuition and board for a year."

He was perched upon a little island of rock, some three miles from Blackport. His enthusiasm led him to overlook the signs of a coming storm, the worst storm which late August ever brought to the Maine coast.

With the first puff of that fearful storm a great wave, like a tidal bore, rolled in and overwhelmed the rock. Only owing to his great strength and ability as a swimmer was Bettington able to reach shore.

With the storm came an awful darkness which presently merged into night and left Bettington bruised and weary, trying to make his ways to the village. It was midnight when a dim light showed him he was near a small house. Fishing nets and lobster pots were evidence of the calling of the owner.

Bettington had come to the shack of one Jonathan Gibbs, a surly man, who had no traffic with his neighbors. He supported himself indifferently with his fishing and chickens. He was known for a bad-tempered man who preferred his own company to any other.

There was no answer to his knock upon the door, so Bettington, now chilled to the bone, opened it. He found the shack had but two rooms. A living room with a bed in a corner of it, and a kitchen. A soapstone stove gave what heat the larger room required. Driftwood furnished the visitor with his fuel and he was soon thawing before the fire. Bettington knew the fisherfolk; they were hospitable men wherever one met them. He had no fear he would get a reception that was not cordial.

But he did not know Jonathan Gibbs. The process of getting warm was so comforting that Bettington did not hear footsteps outside. Gibbs had been out to drag his bouts from their customary moorings at the dock to the shelter of the shore. The first premonition that a stranger had invaded his home was the pungent smoke which beat down on him as he came toward the front door.

He stopped suddenly. His spare form tautened. Weariness had given place to sudden, bewildering fear. He retreated stealthily, noiselessly.

At the side of a rowboat, he paused. His blanched face took on something of its normal color. The instinct to flee was conquered. There came yet more strongly to him the desire to know by what he was menaced. But his progression to a woodshed showed no abatement of his caution. From the top of a closet he took down a shotgun, into whose twin barrels he put No. 4 cartridges.

He opened the door of his living room so softly that Bettington did not hear him. It was the cold gust that made the painter look round. He saw a tall, keen-faced man at whose shoulder was the butt of a twelve-bore.

"Don't move," said the fisherman.

Gibbs advanced slowly into the room. He had never, to his knowledge, set eyes on this stranger. But he looked so searchingly and with such obvious menace that Bettington broke the silence.

"I ought to apologize for this, I suppose," he said, "but surely, on a night like this a man may seek shelter without being threatened with a scattergun."

"Who were the two men you were with in the post office yesterday?" Gibbs demanded.

"I was not in any post office yesterday," said Bettington stiffly. "I have not been in company with any two men for a fortnight."

Gibbs lowered his gun. He tried to assume a look of amiability, but there was still anxiety written plainly. Bettington, watching, noted that the gun was still in such a position as to constitute a threat.

Bettington related his misadventures.

"A painter, eh?" said Gibbs. He crossed the room, took down from a shelf a pencil and a piece of paper. These he handed to the other.

Satisfied Yearning to Punch Cash Register

A certain resident of an exclusive New Jersey suburb startled his friends recently by opening a book and magazine store in the town. He was known to be wealthy and did not need more money, and as he was a bridge and golf addict and had other and varied interests, they could not catalogue his innovation as a hobby, even though he spent nearly every evening at the store.

Then it occurred to a close friend to ask him outright. The new book store owner looked a little sheepish as he explained:

"I'll tell you if you promise not to mention it to anyone. But all my life cash registers have intrigued me. Every time I made a purchase I've yearned to punch the key. In fact, on a number of occasions I've bribed a clerk to allow me to ring up my own money. It's a queer sort of complex, I know, but as long as I enjoy punching cash registers I'm going to continue it."—New York Sun.

Phosphorescent Light

In damp woods and dark marshes a phosphorescent substance forms, commonly known as foxfire. When a dry spell occurs, accompanied by wind, oftentimes a mass of this formation rises and is carried gently along in the form of a cloud. It is luminous, and presents a weird and strange appearance.

Virginia Home of Culture

Localism alone can produce, in the case of America, a thoroughly authentic type of man; this type alone can be the germ cell of an authentic American nation. Again, localism alone can lead to culture; it must start as a singular and single and, therefore, small thing. It will grow and spread as time goes on. The only really cultural atmosphere one finds today in America is that of Virginia. The cultured men who were born in its field of force are responsible for most that is of cultural value in America. But how different Virginia is from all other states! Its culture is a particular one; it is not only a matter of age but of kind as well.—Hermann Keyserling in Atlantic Monthly.

Dame Fashion Smiles

By Grace Jewett Austin

There has been much talk for months about "costume jewelry," and the term brings a clear vision to mind of bright gilded arrow-like chains, and large crystals or stones in various colors that harmonize with costumes or enhance the values of colors worn. Now there seems to be another jewel name on the horizon, which may make us all feel a bit more aristocratic. These are the so-called "crown jewels." The type of these is just as easily recognized as the costume jewelry; the chains or bracelets are of colored stones set around about with diamonds or pearls—or perhaps for the most of us, by rhinestones. Real jewels of this kind are offered, with prices in five to six figures, while even the imitations are not precisely cheap, and may be of much beauty.

Grace J. Austin.

Has it made you sad to lay aside fur scarfs at the time when they were superfluous from the presence of your fur coat, or your much-furred cloth heavy coat? And yet perhaps you have an evening wrap of black velvet or some deeply rich color. Dame Fashion saw an example of this the other day when a friend had taken a fur scarf, inherited from her mother, and had applied it as a collar on an evening wrap with beautiful effect.

Probably "fashion" is the most subtle word in the English language. No one can define it exactly, and illustrations of it vary with every step you take and every person you ask. Fashions in fishing tackle, furniture and fruit are just as real as fashions in frocks, frills and flounces. Fashions of a really long gone day, now counted as antiques, are very much in fashion. A pretty little shop that specializes in antiques has an atmosphere appreciated by the most up-to date. So the paradox comes about that the one hundred-year-old article, or its design, may be more in the mode than a five-year-old creation. This is why the date "1830" reverberates so much in this far different year of 1930.

After a practically brimless winter in millinery styles, good old Mr. Brim is returning to fashion. Before the days when straw makes its entire entrance, for hat-wear, it comes creeping in by way of bands and trimmings, or of straw brims on felt hats. There are indications that the summer will be more of a straw season than it has been in several recent years.

Dame Fashion gets a really happy thrill in seeing the phrase "carnation pink" repeated more and more often, as a season color. Gowns for evening—or morning in the kitchen, for that matter!—win high praise when they are in carnation pink, and a pink chiffon frock has always the possibility of revealing some girl as a dream of beauty. The faded-out pastel shades promise to be entirely eclipsed this year by what are called "vivid pastels."

Once upon a time there was a representative in congress who was never seen upon the floor of the house without a carnation in his buttonhole. That was perhaps 25 years ago. It may be men are more self-conscious now and could not stand such fragrant publicity. There was a wife in that family who supplied that daily carnation. Perhaps the wives of 1930 have too many and varied interests to obtain 365 carnations in a year for their husbands. But the fact remains, that in gown-color or sentiment, there are great possibilities in the carnation.

Wind is a Close Second to Fire

In destuction and damage to property, high winds are almost as culpable as fire. A wind need not be of tornado force to do serious damage; nor is wind damage a hazard peculiar to any section of the country. Exceedingly high and dangerous wind movements have occurred in almost every section of the country and history will undoubtedly repeat itself. Windstorm Insurance is very moderate in cost.

Alice in the Subway

By JANE OSBORN

(Copyright.)

HE WAS the kind of man who seemed to be holding a perpetual competition for the "prettiest girl" or "the most beautiful girl." In this competition he was sole judge and the contestants were girls he chanced to meet or to see anywhere. It seemed to be a game that interested him immensely and that made even a ride in a crowded subway car something of an adventure.

Thus he was engaged one afternoon when the offices of the business section had just poured forth their girls on their way homeward. This time the laurels were awarded without delay. The girl who stood opposite him in the vestibule of the subway car was so fresh of face, so gracefully proportioned, so brown of eye and golden of hair that she won with flying colors. In fact, she was perhaps the prettiest girl he—

Then the surprising thing happened. The pretty girl quietly stepped over to him.

"You're John Laurence, aren't you?" she said.

It was surprising because he wasn't John Laurence.

"You bet I am, John Laurence's my name all right."

"You don't remember me?" she asked, with disappointment.

"I remember your face—couldn't forget that," he assured. "But the name has slipped me."

"Alice," she reminded. "I used to sit in front of you in school. You used to walk home after school, too, and carry my books."

"So I did, so I did. You look just the same. Let's see, how many years ago was that?"

"Ten, wasn't it?" she figured. "We were fifteen then and we're twenty five now."

Enormous satisfaction swept over the man. He was thirty-two.

"I guess I look a whole lot older than you," he flushed.

"Well, maybe, but then I suppose you have worked pretty hard. I heard you had graduated from Harvard and had gone in business," she said.

"And I'd really like to see you again and talk over school days." She put her hand out. "Come and see me some time. I live exactly where I did ten years ago. I am getting out here tonight to see a friend."

And there the man stood glued to the side of the car. When he came to his senses and tried to follow, the subway door promptly slammed in his face.

Jim Kelly took time the next day to drop in at the Harvard club in town and find from there something of one John Laurence. He found that he operated a factory, some sixty miles out of the city. The next day was Saturday and Jim took a two o'clock train.

He found John Laurence, and was not flattered at having to consider himself his double. To be sure they were of the same build and coloring. Their features were similar, though John Laurence looked his junior by ten years.

"I've come on a rather curious errand," he began in a grandiose manner. "You see, I happened to meet a little girl—a chance meeting, but we got rather well acquainted. She gave me her address written on a card and somehow I lost it. Now I didn't want to disappoint her. Being a man of resources I tried to work on what clews I had. She spoke of having gone to school with a John Laurence—said that she thought we might be cousins because of some slight family resemblance.

"So I happened to be out here today and thought I'd drop around and get you to give me her address. I can't remember her last name, but her first name is Alice. She said she lived exactly where she did when she knew you. She said she hadn't thought of you once for ten years until something in my face reminded her distinctly of you."

Something in the last remark brought the color rising to John Laurence's face.

"I thought you'd give me the address. I have other ways of getting it, but—"

"You'll have to use your other sources, then," said John Laurence. "And I wish you good afternoon."

Jim Kelly did not feel entirely thwarted by this rebuff, and two weeks later when he chanced to see the charming Alice in the subway one evening he felt that the had been peculiarly blessed.

"This time I'm going to get your address, little lady," he said.

Then he noticed the circle of diamonds on her left hand. Perhaps she had drawn her glove off on purpose.

"Does that ring mean anything?" asked Jim awkwardly.

"It has the most wonderful meaning in the world. You know the time I saw you first I thought you were John Laurence, and I guess I didn't give you a chance to say you weren't. A few days later the real John Laurence came to see me. He was a very good friend of mine and now, now we're engaged. Don't you think that was a wonderful coincidence?"

"Oh, I don't see anything very remarkable about that," said Jim Kelly. The subway train had stopped and he suddenly decided it was time for him to get off. "Who'd have thought," he said to himself with a smile, "that old Jim Kelly would play cupid in spite of himself!"

For the first time in the 36 years the Winona Lake chautauqua has been operating the assembly ground will be open to the public this season. The gates to the park in the past were closed during the six weeks the season was on and admission was by ticket only. When the town of Winona Lake was incorporated a special act of the state legislature gave permission to so operate, thus making it the only incorporated town in the United States where residents could not leave and come home without showing a ticket of admission. There has been a growing sentiment in favor of throwing the assembly ground open to the public, and this year the directors decided to give it a trial after the Warsaw Chamber of Commerce had underwritten the coming season for $7,200, guaranteeing the sale of 1,200 season tickets at $6 each. Admission this summer, therefore, will be charged only at the auditorium where entertainments are being held.

THE LONDON CONFERENCE

Christian citizens who are constantly concerned about the status of time worn customs and ordinances, seem not to know nor care about the fight now being waged in London, between the conferees of several leading nations, looking toward the goal of peace. That our representatives there are being dragged down from the highest American ideals, should engage the prayerful consideration of Christians of all denominations. That churches are so easily satisfied in times like these—in weekly counting their own, in engaging in numerical contests and banqueting the winners, in spending half hours in questionable comparison of personal wit or wisdom—is a prime cause of religion's low ebb. For the last three months the high call of the Spirit has been to universal prayer for the success of the London conference—a service in which Christian conscience should easily unify.

That the American conferees are just now looking toward a consultative pact which is far short of the pacific conversations indulged in by Herbert Hoover and Premier MacDonald, should challenge the churches everywhere to their highest and holiest activities. A keen realization of what God wants us to do now, should be an approach to Christian Unity and Universal Peace—the very heart slogans of Jesus. It should also constitute a convincing evidence to the world, after these twenty centuries, that Jesus still leads us, and that we still follow Him.

J. N. Scholes.

THOUGHTS ON MAN

It is common for some types of people to sneer at man's former idea of his spiritual significance and greatness, since so much has been discovered about the immensity of the universe; nevertheless, those who are capable of looking at things whole are not influenced by such puerile thoughts.

Man is the highest creature in the universe. He is the only gauge of the value of anything that exists. The immensity of the universe subtracts nothing from his worth. The mere multiplication of material stars, suns, comets and infinite reaches of space does not prove man of any less greatness of value.

We have no way of proving that a universe the size of ours was not necessary for the development of man. Indeed, a small or limited universe would be a great disappointment to the human race, and as easily subtract from the worth of man as a large one; for, some would reason, man is not of such great worth, or else he would have been given a universe of immensity for the joy, wonder and occupation of his mind.

Is the ponderous size of the universe to serve as the measure of the worth of man, who is Mind or Spirit, or is Mind, which weighs and measures the heavenly bodies and space, to judge its worth by the feats which it is able to perform in the universe?

The inane argument, that man's former conception of his greatness is to be modified by reason of the fact of his comparative smallness with the universe revealed by Science and Astronomy, is an argument that creates disgust in any mind that is capable of properly relating all the facts of life and existence.

He is engaged in gardening and in about one hour he sold a small load of onions and radishes that he had raised this year. He is also engaged in mowing and trimming lawns at his spare time and the following is a sample of his clever way of advertising his business:

"Dear patrons don't forget your grass
That you so often pass,
And let it grow tall and tough,
It always cuts hard enough.
Better service I can render
If cut while young and tender.
Don't ask me to book it
We might over look it,
Then there would be no pay

The SANDMAN STORY

ABOUT CIRCUS ANIMALS

"THERE is going to be a week set aside of every year," said one of the horses in the circus, "when people will go about with their pockets full of lumps of sugar and horses will all be given a special treat.

"It will be called something like being-kind-to-animals week. And it will show people how nice it is to be kind to animals and how much better they will feel for being kind.

"Then it is hoped people will continue being kind all the time, of course. But this week will show people the nice things there are to be done.

"And anyone seeing people unkind or cruel to animals will stop them and make them feel ashamed of themselves for bullying and ill-treating and being thoughtless and unfair."

"It sounds like a wonderful idea," said another circus horse. And the other circus horses said, "neigh, neigh," which was their way of saying, "Yes, yes!"

"Just as Absurd," Said the Circus Hippopotamus.

"It began a year ago, I believe," said the first circus horse, "and this year will be the second year of it."

"Neigh, neigh, good, good," said the other circus horses.

"Some can't tell me from Neighbor Rhinoceros," said the circus Hippopotamus. "People come and stand before me and they say, 'Is that a rhinoceros or is that a hippopotamus? It's one of those big animals, anyway.' Now, did you ever hear of anything so unintelligent?"

"Never," said the circus rhinoceros. "Of course, it is true we're big animals, but such ignorance is absurd. It is as though we saw a boy and a girl coming along and we said, 'Which is the boy and which is the girl? One or the other is the boy and the other one is the girl.'"

"Just as absurd," said the circus hippopotamus.

"They say that the people in charge of us answer questions about us all the time and that the ignorance shown toward us is very great," the hippopotamus continued. "And it is also said by those in charge of us that grown-ups know far less than children, yet they're supposed to be bigger and wiser.

"Of course grownups may know more about other things; but, alas! they don't know as much as they should about the hippopotamus and the rhinoceros."

"People don't know the difference between us half the time," said the leopard and the tiger together.

"Sometimes, all the time," said the leopard.

"Sometimes, three-quarters of the time," said the tiger.

"It is said," the leopard continued, "that that is one of the reasons the hyena laughs so much. Yes, a wise man known as Dexter Fellowes, who has much to do with the circus, said that was the reason. And I'm sure he must be right. For Dexter Fellowes is very wise, very wise, indeed."

"So they all say," the tiger remarked. "I must say I have never talked to him long enough to tell for myself, but I'm sure every one must be right.

"So many couldn't be wrong, especially when it is about one of their own kind."

"People know more about people than they do about animals. Well, I would like it if Dexter Fellowes would come and have a chat with me some time. But I don't believe he will. He said to me once, 'Tiger, you're a handsome fellow, but I wouldn't choose you for my pal.'

"So I think he prefers to keep a respectful distance from me. But certainly everyone thinks the 'world and all,' as they say, of him. And I'll tell you one thing, leopard."

"Yes," said the leopard, "pray tell it to me."

"And that is," the tiger went on, "that he most certainly has the most marvelous and the most patient disposition I've ever seen in all my circus life. And he can tell most beautiful stories of the circus. Oh, they sound so grand and so magnificent, and he can tell them so easily. He's just a born story-teller, and he tells the truth, too. Oh, my, yes, he tells the truth!"

Small Towns to Become Centers of Industry

Not long ago the nation was stirred by the drift of population away from farms and rural areas into the great cities. Young men, attracted by the high wages paid by industry and what appeared to be the superior social and economic advantages of urban life, deserted the soil for the city.

In the past quarter-century rural America has made tremendous progress. Better schools, good roads, the automobile, telephone and radio have created a rural civilization greater than any in history.

Industrialists, attracted by such factors as lack of labor difficulties, low taxes and uncongested, pleasant living and working conditions, were barred from entry into the small town only because of lack of power.

Now, according to authorities, the smaller towns are on the road to industrial leadership of America and the countryside is staged for the next scene of our industrial progress. The drift of population has turned. At present the only pronounced gain in industrial wage earners is taking place in the country.

It is safe to say that many towns which are almost unknown today will be the great industrial centers of the future. The industrial revolution of the Eighteenth century apparently doomed rural progress—now the electric revolution of the Twentieth is reversing the process. — Longview (Wash.) Daily News.

Extensive Survey of North Carolina Roads

Reports from various fronts in the battle to reclaim and preserve our roadside beauties are constantly being received by the American Nature association.

One of the most interesting developments is the inauguration of a demonstration survey by the National Council for the Protection of Roadside. This is the new name of the organization previously known as the National Committee for the Restriction of Outdoor Advertising, through which more than one hundred organizations joined to work in this common effort.

North Carolina has been selected as the state for the survey, particularly on account of the progressive attitude of the highway department of the state, which has been doing effective work in roadside planting and beautification. The survey will be thorough and cover the entire state. Each highway of importance will be covered, mile by mile, and extensively photographed. A complete consideration will be given to the various phases of North Carolina's particular problem and a full report with recommendations will be made and published as a part of the demonstration. At least two months will be devoted to the study.

Renovate Where Possible

In some cases it might be necessary to raze an existing building in view of the fallacy of the belief that all that is old is good. In other cases it would be folly to do so because sometimes additional structural features and an architectural treatment are all that would be necessary to achieve a fine result. There lurk in some of our shabbiest streets, possibilities for the finest of banks, theaters, stores and office buildings, multiple garages, professional buildings and great beauty—in fact, all those elements contributory to civic excellence with which the architect conscientiously concerns himself and which, in conjunction with city planning he will eventually bring about.—Exchange.

Think Before Buying

Some things are essential in the selection of the place where you are going to have your home.

Think of transportation, churches, schools and your neighbors. When you have decided to buy a lot or a home already built, buy it not for speculation or resale but for the specific purpose of owning a home. Let the idea of a home be the dominant thought. That will make it a safer purchase and bring greater assurance of happiness rather than grief.

A two-apartment building is sometimes a safer and more conservative home than the proverbial bungalow.

Rubbish Pile a Menace

Sixty per cent of all persons burned to death met this tragic end in their homes. Approximately one-half of this number are children less than ten years of age.

The majority of dwelling-house fires have their origin in cellars, attics and closets. Rubbish accumulation is generally the cause.

Experience has demonstrated the fact that periodic and systematic inspection of all buildings for the elimination of fire and health dangers has materially improved the general outlook and safety of communities.

Drab Roof Departs

The day of the drab roof is gone—the roof that simply shuts out the rain and weather. True, the roof of a home must give protection against the elements. It must last. But as one of the most prominent architectural features of the home, the roof should also add much to its beauty.

For Meditation

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

THE CURSE OF THE PHARAOHS

SUPERSTITION which dominates the emotional life of a large number of persons plays strange freaks. When the emotional element controls one's judgment, most absurd things seem to occur. An illustration of this is the recent death of Lord Westbury, who committed suicide in London. In explanation of this act the press reports state that he was driven to it by being haunted with the thought that he, like others before him, was under a curse because of their part in the excavation of Tut-Ankh-Amen's tomb. Lord Westbury was the twelfth person, of those who had part in the archeological work of the tomb, to die a tragic death.

L. A. Barrett.

The first to die was the secretary of Mr. Carter, who discovered the tomb and who had the chief responsibility for the excavation work. He died in Egypt within a year of his discovery. His death was caused by poison from the bite of a mosquito. His death was followed by eleven others, all of whom had some part in the work directed by Mr. Carter. The last to die was Lord Westbury who had already reached the age of nearly eighty years.

The idea shared by many persons is that the pharaohs pronounced a curse upon any person who molested their tombs. The curse translated reads something like this: "To any person who even touches the tomb of pharaoh, let him die a death which shall come upon him as swift wings." The twelve persons who have died are thought to have come under the spell of this ancient curse.

To the less credulous public, the question seems to be, would not these same twelve persons have met their tragic deaths had they never even heard of the Egyptian tomb? Are not their experiences easily explained by perfectly natural causes, any one of which occur almost every day? Remove the thought of the curse and no mystery is involved. Introduce the thought of the curse, and the twelve deaths seem to take on an aspect of the supernatural. On the contrary each death can be explained by natural causes from the first caused by poison from a mosquito bite to the last who committed suicide. Besides, the twelve deaths occurred in about ten years. Had they all happened at the same time one might conclude that some poison had been concealed within the tomb; even then the explanation would have been a natural one. Problems are more readily solved by an appeal to common sense than to superstitious fear.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

"A BEAU BRUMMEL"

"HE IS a regular Beau Brummel." It is so that sometimes a word or two will completely sum up a person's personality.

For when we say of anyone that he is a Beau Brummel, we immediately appraise him as one who is good-looking and conscious of it, who is particular about his clothes to a painful degree, who is meticulous to the point of embarrassment about his manners, and who is altogether a dandy.

The term has come down to us from the early Eighteenth century when it was first applied to George Bryan, who enjoyed the reputation of being the greatest of the English dandies and the leader of London's fashions.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

APRIL FOOL

MUCH erudition and research have been expended by various persons interested in such matters in trying to ascertain the why and wherefore of "All Fool's Day" and the "why" of the custom of people "fooling" each other on April 1. There is no doubt but that "All Fool's Day" is a survival from remote antiquity and that people cried, "April Fool"—or words to that effect—to their friends in dim and unrecorded ages of the past. The best evidence appears to be to the effect that April 1 was originally celebrated as a feast of the vernal equinox. In Maurice's "Indian Antiquities" it is stated that "All Fool's Day" is "equally celebrated in India and Britain." Maurice cites as an evidence of the great antiquity of the "feast" that India still patently celebrates the vernal equinox and it must, therefore, have been instituted at the time when the equinox occurred on April 1 instead of on March 21 as it does now. Colonel Pearce says that the celebration takes place in India on the "Last day of March" and that people "fool each other" then in the same manner as we do on April 1. Others say that the observance of the day is a remnant of a Persian festival celebrating the vernal equinox and was originally set for April 1 because on that day the Persian year began. There appears to be little doubt but that "April Fool's Day" was an Asiatic feast and there is also strong tradition that it was a feast observed by the Druids of Britain and France. Some have even seen in the name "All Fool's Day," a corruption of "Auld"—that is old—"Fool's Day" and surmised that the Druids were the "Old Fools."

This, however, is more ingenius than convincing. As to why on the day of this feast people celebrate by "fooling" their neighbors no explanation has been advanced which is more than a far-fetched surmise unworthy of serious consideration. All that we can say definitely is that April Fool's day is a survival, an extremely ancient feast of the vernal equinox, a remnant of nature-worship.

Cottage Type Prettiest on Wooded Sites or Natural Surroundings

This seven-room frame home with its unusual roof treatment provides room for a large family, there being four bedrooms and bath. The first floor bedroom is a convenience not found in many two-story homes

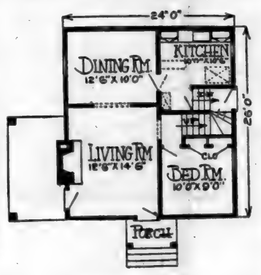
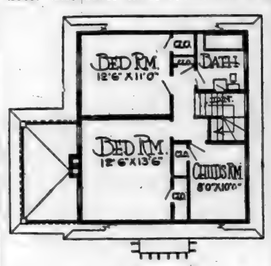
Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to practical home building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as editor, author and manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 407 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

Homes to be built on wooded sites or where there are natural surroundings oftentimes are prettiest when they are of the cottage type of home building design. The house shown in the accompanying illustration suggests a cottage but it is a full two-story frame home containing seven rooms and bath. The suggestion of a cottage is achieved by the unusual roof lines which come down at a steep pitch from the ridge at the front giving the effect of a story and one-half house. Wide dormers on either side, however, give the head room necessary on the second floor to make it a full size. The floor plans show a bedroom on the first floor adjoining the enclosed stairs with three other bedrooms and bathroom on the second floor. The other three rooms are the usual living room, dining room and kitchen.



First Floor Plan.



Second Floor Plan.

The size of this house is 24 feet by 26 feet exclusive of the porch. The sizes of the rooms and their relation one to another are shown by the floor plans reproduced.

How attractive this home may be with its well planned interior, and the open porch is shown by the reproduction of the exterior. It has a roomy inviting appearance and still is simple and suitable for a lot on which there are many trees and shrubs or which has trees and shrubs as a background for a house.

This is the type of economical frame home which will appeal to many prospective home builders. It has abundance of space in the inside; is attractive from the exterior and it is low in cost which will be an added inducement.

Casements of Steel Add Distinctive Air

"Judging by the general appearance of their surroundings, these people have about $5,000 a year to spend," reflected the young banker, an intimate of the family.

His friends in question owned a charming home, acquired a new car each year and enjoyed a month's vacation with travel every summer. And yet they could not be called extravagant. They simply had a faculty for getting the most out of life, for enjoying things inexpensively.

What was it about their environment that impressed our young friend so accurately? For it happened that he was correct in this case, as he later on learned when he helped the young couple make out their income tax report. Is there some direct relation, after all, between personal belongings and private means, some factor by which one can translate possessions into equivalent terms of yearly income?

The banker's line of reasoning was perhaps unusual; but it must be remembered that he possessed a talent for figures and was naturally interested in trying out a theory. Finances, of course, are part of a banker's stock in trade.

In this instance he simply reasoned backward from effect to cause, from the general appearance of things to their apparent cost, and so succeeded in arriving at a more or less clever estimate of his friend's situation.

When the tax appraiser visits us and glances around for a piano or a sewing machine, he, too, is only applying our banker's test in its simplest form. Pianos and sewing machines have always connoted a certain standing; otherwise our munitions workers would not have bought them so lavishly during the war, nor paid spot cash for them as they did in so many cases.

And when the tax authorities in France go by the number of windows a house or an apartment possesses, they apply an even more curious test of prosperity.

An abundance of windows increases your tax; less than six and you are exempt. But to put a premium on household gloom strikes Americans as incongruous, accustomed as they are to plenty of windows throughout the house. We want not only more but better windows—graceful steel casements that open outward on side hinges like doors.

Improves Fireplace

If your fireplace is lined with fire clay and you do not like its color, paint it black. In this way it becomes inconspicuous.

Insulation Is Within Reach of All Purses

Formerly insulated houses were undoubtedly a luxury.

Insulation, being an added expense, could be used only in the erection of elaborate houses. Now an insulated house can be built for the same cost as the old-fashioned, loosely constructed homes, and in many localities the cost is somewhat less.

An insulated house retains the temperature which is created inside its walls for an indefinite period. In hot summer the house must be cooled by the opening of windows after the sun goes down. In the morning when the heat of day again approaches the windows should be closed and the shades drawn so that the effect of the insulation in retaining the night coolness will not be lost by heated air wafting through open spaces.

Every housewife knows this trick of keeping the house cool, but it is invariably unsuccessful in the upper portions of the house, as the hot rays of the sun actually penetrate the materials of which the old-fashioned house is built, making sleeping quarters unbearably warm.

By observing a small fraction of the precaution which is exercised with a refrigerator in keeping the doors closed so that the warm air will not melt the ice and spoil the food, an insulated house may be maintained with unusual comfort in the hottest weather.

By the token the same caution should be used in the winter to gain full benefit from insulation. It is obvious that no matter what materials are used in the construction of the house, the heating plant will be ineffective if the windows and doors are left open during the cold weather.

Some homes are so loosely constructed that they aggregate an amount of infiltration of air around windows and doors that is equal approximately to one good-sized door opening.

Galvanized Iron Needs Coating of Red Lead

If the galvanized iron has been exposed to the weather six months or more it needs no previous treatment before painting. New galvanized iron, however, should be given a good wash before applying any paint. The first coat of paint should be red lead, which is said to be the best-known protective material for all exposed iron surfaces. Over this coat of red lead paint a white lead paint may be applied in sufficient number of coats to cover the bright red color. Generally, two coats of white lead paint will do this. The white lead can be tinted to any color desired.

Small Pickings, but Easy

JUDGE and Mrs. Adam Welcher were entertaining at bridge. It was nearing midnight but the Welchers and their guests had no idea of the time.

The Judge was bidding four spades when all were startled by a crashing sound in the shrubbery at the side of the house.

"Come down out of that, you, and drop that gun" bellowed a commanding voice.

The Judge raised the sash, the light revealing a husky, young man in the uniform of a state policeman struggling desperately with a fat man in a cap and faded sweater. The stout person held a revolver, but it fell from his hand as he sank to his knees under the policeman's vicious attack.

"What's the matter, officer?" demanded the Judge, from the window.

The policeman yanked the fat man to his feet.

"Caught him trying to get in your second story window," answered the cop, breathing heavily. "If you will let me bring him into the light I'll go through him and see if he got anything."

"Yes; yes. By all means. Bring him in," replied the Judge hastily.

"A burglar," snorted Mrs. Murgatroyd-Dewhickle, "how common."

Inside, the guests crowded around as the officer pushed his prisoner into a chair and handcuffed him expertly. Then he turned to the Judge.

"I'm Sergeant Railey," he explained. "I've been on this bird's trail for a month." He turned to the prisoner. "You're Fatty Daniels, ain't you? I recognize you from the pictures."

The prisoner, looking rather sick, murmured defiantly, "I ain't sayin' nothin'."

"All right, Fatty," said the sergeant, grimly. He proceeded to go through Fatty's pockets. His search revealed a jimmy, a wicked looking knife and a second revolver.

"Loaded for bear, all right," said Railey.

The guests shuddered. The Judge began a rather rambling speech of thanks, but Railey raised his hand.

"First thing you do, Judge, is to take a look around and see if anything is missing. Then I'll march this bird down to the hoosegow."

The host departed on a hasty search, while the prisoner sat scowling balefully at his captor. In a few minutes the Judge returned, announcing that apparently everything was O. K.

"Except the telephone," he said. "He's cut the wires outside."

"Sure. He would do that," nodded Railey, "a bad egg, if I ever saw one. It's a good job I spotted him when I did."

"We owe you our heartfelt gratitude," said the Judge, the guests joining in the chorus.

"Glad to be of any assistance in upholding the law," said Sergeant Railey soberly. Then he turned to the prisoner.

"Well, come along, Fatty, you for the jailhouse."

The prisoner rose dejectedly. Judge Welcher spoke up.

"Will you accept a small token of appreciation, Officer?" he asked softly, thrusting a wad of notes in the sergeant's unwilling hand.

"Well," said Railey, hesitating, "It's against the rules in a way, but if you gentlemen will keep quiet—"

"Sure, sure" exclaimed the guests. "Not a word."

"Here let me in on that," said a red-faced man tendering a tenspot, "we might all have been murdered."

"How common," murmured Mrs. Murgatroyd-Dewhickle, staring glossily at the officer.

"All right, Fatty, let's go," said Railey, pocketing the notes and pushing his handcuffed prisoner toward the door.

"If you need any assistance, Sergeant," said the Judge, "we will be glad to go with you to the police station."

"Thanks," returned Railey, "I can handle him all right. Good night, folks, and much obliged."

"Good night," cried the Judge and his guests, retiring indoors as Sergeant Railey marched away, grasping his prisoner roughly by the arm.

One hundred yards down the tree-lined road stood a small car. Officer and prisoner got in. Railey drove. For ten minutes there was no sound save the even hum of the motor. Then Railey stopped the car at a deserted crossroads under an arc light, pulled out a key and unlocked the fat man's handcuffs. The fat man reached in his pocket for a cigarette, lit it and leaned back comfortably.

"How much did we get Mack?" he asked.

"Fifty bucks," said the man in the uniform.

"Here's your twenty-five."

"Not bad," said Fatty, "you sure make a fine looking cop, Mack. For a couple of minutes you had me almost believing I was pinched."

"Cut the comedy," grinned Mack. "Who is next on my list?"

Fatty drew a paper from his pocket and in the dim crossroads light began to read.

"The Misses Ardsley, Myrtle avenue and Knights road. Old maids. One butler and one maid servant."

"O. K.," said Mack reaching for the starter, "let's go over and give the girls a thrill."

Bride Tells Her Secret

"FOR a young bride of twenty-one to lose her vitality and pep is disastrous, almost a sacrilege," says Mrs. George E. Pillow, of Franklin, Va. "That, however," she continues, "is just what I did."

"I had only been married a few months to an athletic husband, who went everywhere and did everything. I tried to keep up with his pace, and simply collapsed under the strain. I never was really ill; just sallow-skinned, depressed, and lifeless. Swimming, dancing, golf, I just couldn't face them. When I began to lose my clear complexion, I was desperate.

"Then one day a girl friend came to pay me a visit. In the bottom of her little bag of clothes lay a crystal-clear bottle—Nujol! A short woman-to-woman talk—a telephone call to a neighboring drug store—and my future happiness was settled.

"That was a year ago. Now I too am never without Nujol, which has brightened and cleansed my body like a cake of pure soap. I eat, sleep, swim, and hike with the enthusiasm of a child. My complexion is all it used to be—and best of all—I am my husband's little pal again."

The wonderful thing about crystal-clear Nujol is that it is not a medicine; it contains no drugs—it cannot hurt even a baby. It is simply the normal internal lubrication which your body needs. Let Nujol clear the poisons out of your body (we all have them), and flood the sunshine of happiness into your life.

It sounds like a fairy tale, but millions of people have proved it. So can you. Get Nujol at any drug store—sold only in sealed packages, with the Nujol trademark. It costs but a few cents and it will make you feel like a million dollars!

EDITORIAL COMMENT

And as yet: "A prophet is without honor save in his own country."

Read the bible: A chapter a day will keep the "blue" birdies away.

"Never explain: Your friends don't need, and your enemies won't believe you anyway."

In the final analysis, any old hide is good for a tanning or it isn't good for anything.

Straw votes: So named because straw usually covers up that which is found beneath the straw.

There is a lot of difference between the gospel truth that people tell us and that found in the good book itself.

It used to be book and insurance agents; now it is the assessors, automobile agents and candidates.

Say good things about your neighbor and you have an ax to grind; criticize your neighbor and you are a knocker; keep your mouth shut and say nothing and you are not interested in anything good for the community. Isn't life just lovely.

Its just a little hard to understand with any degree of accuracy how people feel and vote concerning the wet and dry issue. For instance: The drys who failed to vote at all were "all wet" or they would have voted dry and the wets who voted wet did so because they were dry. There you are.

The systems of competition and efficiency have dominated our political and religious efforts of the past and have contributed to our national success as a nation. Now we must change cars. We will be dominated by the systems of cooperation and good wholesome, sensible construction. Progress can only be achieved by dealing with a changed world.

A great deal of interest is shown by the foes and friends of Prohibition in the recent examination conducted by the Senate lobby committee of April 4th, in the alleged contribution of John J. Rascob to the Association against the Prohibition Amendment. It will be remembered that Rascob, who had been a member of the Republican party mysteriously for sook his party and accepted the chairmanship of the Democratic National Committee two years ago.

As a result, the voting element of the country did not take well to this kind of leadership and had a suspicion that there was something rotten in Denmark. The results of the election of two years ago and the results of the senatorial investigation just closed, reveals the indisputable fact that their fears and suspicions were well founded.

In answer to the questions asked by Senators Walsh and Robison Rascob stated "We are trying to convince the people that the Eighteenth Amendment ought to be repealed, I am pledged to $30,000 as an annual contribution." Robison said, in conducting the investigation, "I want to show that he left the Republican party because he can influence legislation better in the Democratic party."

No one questions the fact that the wet element of the country are in open conspiracy to dampen up the land and drag the old wet and dry mummy out of its tomb into politics to be used as a foot ball to occupy the minds of the political U. S. and keep them off of much weightier problems that demand solution for the present. Because of the coming election this fall, and in order to clean the Democratic party of the name of having been used in malicious manner to further corrupt and sponsor un-American legislation, F. M. Simmons, North Carolina Democratic leader, demanded the resignation of Rascob as a menace to Democracy and the party for which it stands. On the floor of the Senate he said: "All will recognize the impossibility of Mr. Rascob's continuing as titular head of the party in his fight to destroy prohibition."

The Democratic party is not an organization composed of underrate adherents, who vote for and sponsor the destruction of all the good laws and traditional customs that our prosperity has seen fit to establish for the general good of humanity. The best element of the Democratic party will control its own party or there will be no party—the element of progress, be it divine providence of the common horse sense or ordinary humanity will not surrender to the enemies of constitutional government made by and for the people.

It's easier to build fences with RED TOP STEEL DRIVE POSTS

IN a single day one man unassisted can drive 200 to 300 Red Top posts—and align them perfectly. They reduce a week's fencing job to a single day. Eliminate the back breaking post hole digging and make fence building and repair a one man odd-time job.

And Red Tops last long in the fence line—have more strength than you will probably ever need—are made of the same tough steel used in railroad rails and are properly designed to hold the fence in steady security year in and year out.

Come in and let us show you on an actual post the exclusive features that make Red Top the best steel post your money can buy—the reinforcing rib running the full length of the post for extra strength—the accurately placed, prominent studs that prevent the fence from being rooted up or ridden down—the easy driving triangular anchor plate which furnishes a firm underground foundation for the post and the rust resisting aluminum metallic finish which is baked on for permanence.

The Red Top is your assurance of extra value—it identifies a post good enough to guarantee.

Prominent studs provide a proper seat for the wire. The Red Top fastener holds wire to the post with a vise-like grip.

Easy driving triangular anchor plate assures secure underground anchorage—added strength at point of greatest strain.

Wind is a Close Second to Fire

In destuction and damage to property, high winds are almost as culpable as fire. A wind need not be of tornado force to do serious damage; nor is wind damage a hazard peculiar to any section of the country. Exceedingly high and dangerous wind movements have occurred in almost every section of the country and history will undoubtedly repeat itself. Windstorm Insurance is very moderate in cost.

The Price of Service

The modern funeral director has responded to the present-day demand for better service by assuming many new duties and responsibilities. He lifts many burdens from the shoulders of the bereaved family.

To do this requires thorough technical training, up-to-date equipment and the same ability and integrity that is expected of other professional and business. And it is unfair to compare the cost of such service with prices which obtained in the old days when the undertaker furnished nothing but the casket.

Whether the cost of this service is included in the price of the casket or quoted as a separate service charge, it represents genuine value in keeping with modern ideals and standards of living.

THE SEX QUESTION IN THE CENSUS

In 1920 there were 104 men to every 100 women in the United States. Whether this ratio has risen or fallen will be one of the most important facts to be determined by the 1930 census, according to Dr. Joseph A. Hill, Acting Director of the Census, who has pointed out that the relative number of males to females is one of the most fundamental factor to be considered in any analysis of society.

The sex question has always had an important place among the list of questions asked by the enumerators at each decennial census of the U. S., Dr. Hill said. Even in the first very simple census taken in 1790, when only four questions were on the census schedule, one of them concerned the sex of the white persons enumerated. The sex of Negroes was not considered important enough to be recorded until the census of 1840, when members of the colored race were registered according to sex the first time by the Census Bureau.

As far back as the records go, there have always been more males than females in the United States. In 1790, the sex ratio for the white population was 103.8 to 100. The early frontier days of our history called for men more strongly than for women.

The continued excess of rules in the United States is accounted for mainly by immigration, since males immigrate in larger numbers than females. This explains the fact that the excess of males reached its maximum in 1910, at the end of a decade of the heaviest immigration this country had ever known. The sex ratio then went to 106 to 100. In 1920 it had dropped to 104 to 100, due largely to the restricted immigration of American men who remained in Flanders Fields.

In the European countries from which our immigrants came here is, as one would expect, a deficiency of males. The present deficiency in European countries, however, is not solely the result of emigration. It reflects also the depletion of males through the World War, in which eight million or more soldiers were killed or fatally wounded. As a consequence the number of males per 100 females fell off from 93.7 to 91.2 in England, from 97.4 to 91.0 in Germany, and from 96.6 to 90.6 in France.

Within the United States the sex ratio shows a wide range of variation in different sections and localities. It is high on the Pacific Coast, where there are, or were in 1920, 114 males to 100 females. In New England, on the other hand, there is a slight deficiency of males—98.5 males to 100 females. The variations are doubtless largely accounted for by the migration of people from one part of the country to another. In the westward migration that has long been going on within the United States, as well as in the immigration from Europe, there is a majority of males.

The state having the largest excess of males in 1920 was Nevada, 148 males to 100 females, Wyoming ranking next with a ratio of 131 to 100.

There is a wide range of variation also in the sex ratio for different cities. Taking the cities that had a population of over 100,000 in 1920, the excess of males was greatest in Akron, Ohio, 140 males to 100 females; while the most marked deficiency of males was in Washington, D. C., where there were only 87 males to 100 of the opposite sex. The proportion of males in the population of any community is affected in some degree by the nature of the principal industries. It is noteworthy that in Detroit the number of males per 100 females increased from 107 in 1910 to 119 in 1920. There no doubt reflects the increasing employment of men in the manufacture of automobiles.

It is of interest to inquire what the ratio of males to females is or would be if not affected by immigration. It is a statistically established fact that the number of male births is slightly greater than the number of female. But for some reason, which biologists apparently have not yet fathomed, the female infant is more tenacious of life than her baby brother, who consequently does not maintain the numerical superiority which he had at the outset. By the time the rising generation reaches maturity the two sexes are very nearly equal in numbers.

The information obtained thru the census as to the number of males and females in the population is indispensable in the calculation of life tables, in the determination of morality rates, and in studying the incidence of disease. It is knowledge that is needed in business, in legislation, and in other connection.

It speaks well for a nation which has a large patriotic and loyal citizenry, that vice and cheap politicians find it necessary to buy their way into government and political control—about as humiliating as hiring pallbearers and quite as significant.

Lesson for April 13

THE CHILD AND THE KINGDOM

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 18:1-14; 19: 13-15.

GOLDEN TEXT—Suffer little children, and forbid them not to come unto Me: for of such is the kingdom of heaven.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus, the Children's Friend.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus the Friend of Girls and Boys.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Growing in the Kingdom.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Sin of Neglecting and Misguiding Children.

I. The Greatest in the Kingdom of Heaven (vv. 1-4).

1. The disciples' question (v. 1).

The prominence given to Peter in connection with the announcement of Christ's purpose to build the church and the payment of tribute with the money in the fish's mouth, provoked jealousy on the part of the other disciples. The transfiguration scene revealed the divine person and the program of His kingdom. Seeing that the kingdom was to come to realization despite the tragedy of the cross, disciples wished to know their place of rank in the kingdom.

2. Jesus' answer (vv. 2-4).

He taught them by placing a little child in their midst.

(1) Condition of entrance into the kingdom (v. 3). The great question was as to whether they were really in the kingdom. Their behavior revealed the fact that they needed conversion. Before they could even see, much less enter into, the kingdom, they must be born from above (John 3:3, 5). (2) Whosoever possesses childlike humility is the greatest (v. 4). The child is dependent, lowly and modest. Those who have been born again, or converted, have these characteristics.

II. The Lord's Identification With His Believing Ones (vv. 5-9).

1. Receiving the believer in Christ's name is receiving Christ (v. 5).

Through faith in Christ we become God's children and so completely is our life interwoven with His that He regards treatment of us as treatment of Himself.

2. The peril of causing a believer to stumble (vv. 6-9).

To cause to stumble means to give occasion for a moral fall. The particular reference was to the carnality and selfishness which were expressing themselves in their contention for preeminence. Their behavior was not only an injury, but a stumbling block to others. Everything causing one to stumble, though it be as vital as hands and feet, should be removed.

III. Believers Are Specially Cared for by the Heavenly Father (vv. 10-14).

1. They are under angelic guardianship (v. 10).

So precious is the believer in God's sight that angelic messengers are provided (Heb. 1:10). These angelic messengers have access to the very throne of God, even beholding His face. So high is the honor bestowed upon believers that the highest angels are sent to guard them.

2. The Son came especially to save such from their lost condition (vv. 11-14).

The Heavenly Father does not will that any one of these should perish. They are objects of the Father's seeking love. The salvation of the humble believer has been secured by the incarnation and the sacrifice of the Good Shepherd.

IV. Jesus Receiving Little Children (Matt. 19:13-15).

We should carefully note the setting of this text. Jesus had been speaking of the sanctity of marriage, which is the bulwark of the home. Into the sacred enclosure of the home comes childhood to complete and ennoble it.

1. Children brought to Jesus (v. 13).

Doubtless they were brought by their parents. Many parents today who are careless as to themselves, desire to bring their children into touch with Jesus Christ.

2. Rebuked by the disciples (v. 13).

They regarded children as too insignificant to engage the Lord's attention. Christ places high value upon children.

3. The disciples rebuked by Christ (v. 14).

These words uttered by the Lord have placed a peculiar dignity upon the child. It is Christlike to care for children and no service in the world pays such large dividends.

4. Christ laid His hands upon the children (v. 15).

The MUTINY OF THE ALBATROSS

BY WYNDHAM MARTYN

COPYRIGHT IN THE U.S. W.N.U. SERVICE

THE STORY

Floyd Unwin and Howard Bettington take dinner with an old college chum, Alfred Gibbons, financial magnate. Unwin produces a written pledge taken by the three at college to help each other in adversity, explaining that he needs financial assistance to educate his son Bob and daughter Mary. Gibbons scoffs at the "legality" of the pledge, but agrees to make a place for the daughter in his organization. Mary Unwin is stenographer to a wealthy debauchee, Elgar Radway. Calling at Gibbons' office, as arranged, Mary is asked to betray her employer's secrets and refuses. Radway plans an ocean voyage to recover from the effects of dissipation. Mary is to go as secretary, her brother to accompany her.

"Prove it," he commanded. "Draw something."

Bettington hesitated for a moment. He was not a man who went the better for being driven. But it occurred to him that here was a solitary who was mentally unbalanced. He sketched in a few skillful strokes a portrait of the man standing there, his gun balanced in the crook of his arm.

Jonathan Gibbs looked at it in silence.

"It is good," he said deliberately. "Whatever else you may be you are a draftsman."

"Why should I be anything than I pretend?"

"You've never seen me before?" Gibbs demanded.

"Never," Bettington said a little irritably, "and I shall pass a contented existence if I never see you again. What sort of a Maine fisherman are you to behave like this?"

Gibbs put down his gun and assumed a more friendly air.

"I've been threatened," he said rather vaguely. "I've made enemies hereabout. I have to be careful. I was startled."

"You certainly startled me," said the other. "I hoped to be able to pass the night here and dry my clothes."

"You surely can," said Jonathan Gibbs. "I'll boil the water and make you some coffee. I guess you're hungry."

It was after the meal that Bettington asked him, "Why should anyone threaten you here?"

"Jealousy," said Gibbs, after a pause. "I'm not a state of Maine man and I don't mix with anyone around. They don't understand that."

Plainly the man had something to conceal. After all, Bettington told himself, it was none of his business. He had often met queer, ingrown characters. He could not go out into the black night, now made doubly impassable by the deluge of rain. Gibbs made up the fire by packing a huge armful of wood into it.

Bettington was awakened by the aroma of coffee. Gibbs was holding Bettington's shoes up.

"Dried stiff as boards," he announced. "They'll need to be greased before you can get into 'em, and your pants are torn pretty bad. I'll lend you an outfit, and you can get what you want down to Blackport. The sea's calm now and you can row across the bay in half an hour."

The summer sun had tanned Bettington to a rich brown. In his sea-boots—the only ones Gibbs had to lend—his faded blue sweater and khaki shirt, he looked the sort of fishing type he had often painted.

At the dock he took a ten-foot rowboat and set out to the village. He had gone, perhaps, half the distance, when a fast motor boat overhauled him, slackened speed as it passed and then swung round and waited in the path he was taking.

There were two men in it. One was a vastly broad-chested man with a trim sweater and white canvas trousers. He had the look of a yacht sailor. The other, who was steering the boat, had no physical peculiarities other than that general air of following the sea.

"We've had an accident," said the broad-chested man and pointed to something at the bottom of the launch.

Bettington clung to the side of the drifting motor boat and stood up. There, on the bottom of the other craft, was a man lying immobile. And as the artist stooped over him, the recumbent sailor gave a tremendous half-arm jab which caught Bettington on the point of the jaw. The other two grabbed him as his head fell forward and hauled him on board where, unconscious, he took the place of his assailant, who rose grinning.

The broad-chested man, who was called Sam, clapped him on the back in approval.

"Dandy," he cried. "And that rock prevents anyone seeing us from the village." Sam bent over the unconscious form and neatly trussed it up with rope. "The Boss will be tickled to death over this. Stove in that rowboat, one of you."

A man with a boat hook smashed in some bottom boards and Jonathan Gibbs' dinghy slowly filled with water. Then the launch put out of the bay, past the buoys, and headed north for Bar Harbor.

Bettington had recovered from the knock-out within five minutes. He could see from the brightly polished brasswork and mahogany that he was in a yacht's launch. He knew that the hum of the motor would make any call for help useless. He had been neatly knocked out and was now to be expeditiously shanghaied. It was incredible. Then the real meaning of the thing flashed on him. He was mistaken for Jonathan Gibbs. He was rowing Gibbs' boat and wearing Gibbs' clothes. With a two days' growth of beard and a face burned with the sun, he might easily pass for the fisherman.

"This is all a mistake," he said, addressing himself to Sam. "You think I'm Jonathan Gibbs."

"I know d—d well you're not," said Sam, without animus.

The thing was inexplicable. They knew him for himself, and knowing it, they were carrying him off, bound with ropes, to the open sea.

There was seemingly no sort of personal grudge in this high-handed matter. The three men were carrying out orders.

"Listen, bo'" said Sam, "we've got orders not to say a thing to you till the Boss sees you. It won't do you no good asking why we did it, or who we are. We had to get you alive and unharmed and we did the best we knew how."

It was dark when the lights of Bar Harbor came in sight. Bettington was carried up the gangway, across a deck and then placed in a small cabin lighted with a single porthole.

Sam untied the knots and watched the victim stretch his stiff and cramped limbs.

"Just a word of warning," Sam remarked. "You can't get out of that porthole and you can't get out of this cabin. If you did, it wouldn't help you. If you're wise you'll wait till the Boss sends for you."

Sam turned the keys in the door and left him prisoner. As he examined his dungeon he heard the throbbing of machinery. From the porthole he could see the boat was moving. He pulled off the heavy sea boots of Jonathan Gibbs and flung himself on the berth. In many adventures Bettington had learned that fretting and fuming were handicaps that men in danger should not take upon themselves.

Presently he fell asleep and was awakened by Sam.

"You ain't worrying," said Sam, grinning. "They tell me you always had your nerve with you. You won't be able to see the Boss tonight. He's hitting the pipe and it's as much as a man's life is worth to go in now. I haven't no authority to let you out till he gives the word, so I'll bring you a bite to eat here."

Sam waddled out. Bettington was still puzzled by his apparent friendliness. As a physical specimen of humanity Sam did not awaken confidence. On his broad, flat face were written lust and brute courage. He would be a bad man to cross. But why should he regard Howard Bettington, painter of seascapes and man of integrity, with such an air of comradeship?

"Where are we bound for?" he asked of Sam, when a tray of food was brought in.

"Noo York," said Sam.

"Can't I go on deck?" Bettington asked. "I can't escape."

Sam shook his head.

"Not till the Boss gives the word."

"Who is the Boss? The captain?"

"The captain?" There was scorn in Sam's tone. "Him! H—l, no."

"You mean the owner?"

Sam's scorn of the owner was just as emphatic.

"He may think he's the boss and Capt'n Hallett may think he is, but they don't know—yet." Sam rose to go. "Just one bit of advice, bo, don't make a noise. If you do you'll go to Noo York gagged."

* * * * * * *

Bettington had not been gone on his errand to Blackport a half hour, when Jonathan Gibbs in his motor dory went out to his lobster pots. He was returning when he saw a smaller boat, its gunwales awash, almost across his bow. He knew it instantly for his own. Investigation showed that some of the planking had been stoved in. He supposed that one of the needle rocks must have done it. He blamed himself for allowing the stranger to cross the bay. Almost certain death would await any man dressed as Bettington had been, in such currents as these.

Gibbs went to his shack with an uneasy mind. The whole episode spelled publicity to him, but he cheered himself with the hope that his guest might have been rescued. In that case he would soon be back at the shack.

But by midnight Bettington did not return and Gibbs went carefully through the things which were in the torn coat. There was a gold watch with the initials H. B. on it. A wallet contained almost four hundred dollars. There were no letters. But there was a reference on a memorandum of repairs to the skylight of a studio at a given address and a receipt for the rental of it to the end of the current year. And there was a bunch of keys.

For almost an hour Gibbs sat motionless. Then he rose to his feet, put a kettle on the oil stove and presently shaved himself carefully and trimmed his hair. He rubbed the grease which Bettington had applied to his shoes so carefully into the leather, that it became at length flexible and he was able to put them on. Hasty repairs to the torn trousers and coat enabled him to wear them. With an iron which had been little used of late, he pressed them into something of their former shape.

Dawn was breaking when Jonathan Gibbs, now a new man, bade farewell to the shack he had inhabited for six years. None saw him as he made his way inland to Westfield. A sleepy ticket agent gave him a ticket to Portland and forgot the occurrence instantly.

In Portland he spent only a few hours. New York received him with a thousand others at the Grand Central and he walked eight blocks down to a brown stone house opposite an armory. Bettington's name was on a plate over a letter box. A key on the bunch fitted it and he drew out some mail and walked, having met not a soul, to the top of the house. Then, after a moment's pause, he opened the studio door and found himself in a haven so secure that he could hardly believe it had been attained so easily. His eyes brightened when he saw that the former occupant had cans of milk, soup and fish in abundance. There were at least two pounds of tea. Further search revealed sugar and coffee. He could live for a week on what he found and never venture outside the door. During the day he must be careful not to be seen. But at night New York was his own. Those who had known the dour, suspicious, fisherman would not have recognized in the alert housebreaker the same man.

Jonathan Gibbs was gone, dead and buried. And this, too, in a sense he did not know. Other fishermen had found his waterlogged rowboat. And when he was not seen in his familiar haunts and had not called at the village store to exchange his eggs for groceries, a search was made. His home was found unoccupied, his chickens famished. Plainly, Jonathan Gibbs had been drowned and his body swirled out to sea in the undertow.

At first the New York Gibbs ventured out only at night within a short radius of his sanctuary. There had been no mail. There had been no prying janitor. He had almost four hundred dollars and almost four months' rent paid. He felt assured that Bettington was dead.

It was on the third evening of his occupancy that this calm and pleasurable optimism was swept away. He had gone to the subway entrance to buy an evening paper. As he stood on the steps before the front door feeling for his latchkey, he was conscious that a policeman across the street by the armory was looking at him. Although it was dark he felt stricken with the certainty that the officer looked at him alone.

From the front windows of his unlighted rooms he had an unobstructed view. The officer was now speaking to a smaller man, who seemed to be pointing directly at the windows through which Jonathan Gibbs gazed. The coincidence was food for somber thought. As though concerting some plot aimed at Gibbs, the two slowly crossed the street. Then his bell rang three times. Gibbs opened the door to the landing silently and listened. He heard the front door open and steps advance along the flagged passage. Then he heard the footsteps begin the ascent.

Softly he locked the door and stood a few feet back from it. To the knock he returned no answer. He looked about him wildly. "Trapped!" he groaned. "After all these years to be caught!"

Fear roused him from inaction. Before long they would burst in the door. The fire escape at the rear was his sole hope. It was pitch dark, but he dared risk no light or make the descent slowly. He had gone but half a flight when he trod upon a flower pot placed there in violation of all the city's fire ordinances. He clutched about him wildly and found only a piece of rotting rope. For a moment it promised to stay his fall; then he felt the old strands giving.

The paved yard to which he crashed was fifty feet below. They had not been wrong in Blackport who assumed that the man they called Jonathan Gibbs was dead.

CHAPTER IV

An Amazing Adventure

During the long hours Bettington spent a prisoner, he thought over, and rejected as impractical, several schemes for escape. When all was said and done, escape from his cabin to the larger prison of the ship at sea offered little betterment of his condition. He pondered over Sam's command that he should be quiet. This presupposed that there was some person, or group of persons, unaware of his detention. But whether a declaration of his presence would bring liberty was another matter.

The hours passed slowly. It was dusk when they dropped anchor at the foot of East Twenty-fourth street.

When Sam came in with his evening meal there was a safety razor outfit on the tray.

"Got to spruce up," said Sam. "Owner's coming aboard tomorrow morning. The boss says for you to look like ready money."

Bettington looked at Sam and wondered what made him so serene and happy. It was a face on which had been graven the marks of violent emotions. He was no more than five feet eight inches in height, but his chest was fully forty-five inches in girth. A life of ease had turned some of his once steel muscles to fat, but he was still enormously strong. A flat and bulbous nose, driven into his face by some tremendous impact, conspired to make him repulsive. Essentially he was of the sea. There was the sailor's roll in his walk. A dangerous man in a physical combat, Bettington decided. Intellectually he was below the normal. He was cleanly shaved and the shirt he wore was new.

"Wondering what I'm all dolled up for?" he demanded. "I'll tell you. We're going to have skirts aboard this trip. Metzger told me. There's a lady's maid, a secretary and the owner's wife. Metzger's seen her pictures in the paper. He's crazy over her."

"Who's Metzger?"

"The chief engineer. Lucky for him he don't like 'em as young as I do. Me," said Sam airily, rolling his red eyes, "I'm all for the chickens. This secretary is some skirt from what I hear."

Bettington was incensed at the bestial glee of the recumbent man.

"Do you suppose," he said, looking at Sam with a disfavor that could be felt even by the sailor, "that any lady, secretary to the owner of this boat, would have anything to do with you? How will you have the chance to speak to the owner's guests? Don't be foolish, Sam."

Sam looked at him a long time in silence.

"I can see what you're driving at," said the sailor. "You want to find out what sort of a trip this is going to be. Well, you don't get nothin' out of me." He laughed long and loud at what seemed to him his masterly discovery of the other's motives. Then he described his way of life and love. There was something nauseating in it. And there was something frightening, too. How did Sam, who berthed and messed with the crew, come to imagine, without good grounds, that he would have the opportunity to come intimately into contact with the owner's guests?

There was another disquieting thought. Suppose that he was kept a prisoner here until the boat put out to sea again and so forced to be a party to indescribable scenes! Escape was impossible. It was a steel-built boat; the porthole was a small one and his only weapon a safety razor blade.

He was thinking bitterly at noon on Monday, when, from his porthole, he saw a launch approaching the ship. He recognized it as the one which had taken him from Blackport to Bar Harbor. Beside the crew there were two men and two women. He had no time to take in their features because he was amazed to see that one of the men was none other than Tubby Unwin. The launch had passed his field of vision before he could recover from his surprise. With the aid of the mirror that Sam had brought with the shaving outfit Bettington could see that the launch was brought alongside. And from it, Unwin and the three strangers climbed aboard.

In vain Bettington shouted and kicked at the door. Steam was up, and the various noises and activities on deck made his outcry inaudible. Looking through his mirror he saw, presently, that Unwin descended the steps into the boat. Apparently he was not going. He was waving to some one on deck.

Unwin even threw kisses at the unknown. It seemed to Bettington that Unwin must hear his shouts before he drew away from the vessel. The launch was only a few yards distant at one time, before she put about and made for the shore. On the landing stage of the yacht club Unwin stood still waving. And so he stood until the ocean-going steam houseboat had turned her bow to the south.

Unwin went back to his wife very happy.

"It will be wonderful for both of them," he said. "Mr. Radway was very pleasant, for a man in his position to one in mine. But she is a rarer and finer type. I am sure she is unhappy. She seemed to cling to our Mary. Bob doesn't know yet how he will like the men. He has to eat and sleep with them. He has the impression that his presence is resented, but, of course, that's all nonsense."

But Bob made no mistake in estimating the warmth of his reception. The forecastle resented him. "He's a spy," said Hammer.

"He's the girl's brother," volunteered a man from the engine room. "I heard Metzger tell Leary so."

"My gal's brother, is he?" Sam commented. "If she's nice to me, I'll be good to him." He beckoned Bob to him. Bob, anxious to do his best and make a good impression, came running up.

"Boy," said Sam, "what's your sister's name?"

Bob looked into Sam's eyes and his tongue withheld the answer that had been ready. Dimly he understood that the lecherous look and the question itself from such a source was an insult. He would show this broad, beamy, impudent sailor where he stood.

"My sister's name is Miss Unwin."

Hammer tittered; he hated women and dimly foresaw in Sam's weakness some future trouble. But he did not titter when Sam slowly turned his head and looked at him. None better than Hammer knew for what reasons Sam never went ashore when he could avoid it.

It was this creeping fear on the evil face of Hammer that warned the boy; and he saw that none of the other men dared take his part. Bob saw that Sam's face became empurpled. He was in the grip of fear. He realized that never, until now, had he known the sensation of physical terror.

"I'll talk to you later, 'Mr. Unwin,'" Sam mocked. "Me and you'll have a little conversation off Cape May, where the big light is."

Plants That Emit Gas Not at All Uncommon

When one speaks of a "gas plant" one naturally thinks of coal ovens and gas meters. Nature, however, provides a real gas plant, specimens of which are to be found blooming in London's Kew gardens. It is otherwise known as the Dictamnies or "Burning Bush." When a lighted match is applied to a shoot of it there comes a brilliant scarlet flame. Like a flash of lightning it travels up the length of the flowering shoot, without injuring it. The best time to make the experiment is when the flowers are fading. The inflammableness of the plant is due to this: that on its stalks are minute reddish-brown glands, and these secrete an etheric oil. The glands develop fully soon after the blossom begins to fade, but they shrivel up when the fruit begins to form. Luminous plants not unlike this have been a source of strange legends in India and Afghanistan. There is a mountain called Sufed Koli in Afghanistan on which the natives believe that gold and silver exist. In springtime the slopes are covered with bushes which at night, from a distance, seem to be on fire, yet when you are close to them there is no sign of flame.

Wide-Awake Lawyer

Court was jammed as usual.

One portly man fell victim to after-luncheon drowsiness. Disregarding the court, he slumbered on.

The case of a negro charged with petty theft was called. The assistant district attorney almost finished with the first witness when the defendant, his face a perfect picture of something wrong, leaned over and asked the deputy sheriff:

"Mistuh sheriff, wud y'all min' wakin' up dat man—he's mah lawyer." The case was dismissed.

Interesting Church

The Worsted church at Canterbury, New Hampshire, was completed in 1839 by the Free Will Baptists and Congregationalists. It suffered much financial distress and Mrs. Sarah Elizabeth (Harper) Monmouth, undertook to raise funds for the benefit of the church. She acted as associate pastor and officiated for nearly eight years. She personally made the worsted decorations which consist principally of religious mottoes. There was an extraordinarily large number of such decorations completed in 1878, when Mrs. Monmouth ceased her labors. An interesting fact is that Mrs. Monmouth suffered severe financial reverses and published and sold a booklet for 25 cents in the town, entitled "Living on Half a Dime a Day," which she claimed was an actual experience of her own.

Ever-Changing Time

Time is a sort of river of passing events, and strong is its current; no sooner is a thing brought to sight than it is swept by and another takes its place, and this, too, will be swept away.—Marcus Aurelius Antoninus (121-180 A. D.), "Meditations."

Mrs. Nelson tells secret of her easy washdays

"I DON'T even scrub—think of that! I don't bother about boiling, either. I just let my wash soak snowy-white in Rinso suds.

"The Rinso way is so easy on clothes. They aren't scrubbed threadbare."

Rinso is economical

This granulated soap is all you need even in hardest water—no bar soaps, chips, powders, softeners. Cup for cup, it gives twice as much suds as puffed-up soaps. Rich, lasting suds.

Make no expense but to do good to others or yourself, waste nothing.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN

There is a terrific waste in resources throughout our land. It is felt in due proportion in St. Joe and Spencerville.

Often times thoughtless ignoring of obligations causes hardships on many worthy business and professions.

In St. Joe and Spencerville, as a step in our progress for betterment, every individual in these communities should take stock with himself. If any outstanding obligations are due pay them and relieve the pressur on your debtor or come forward frankly and have an understanding with the one you owe.

Remember you have had value received, had additional time, more than was originally intended perhaps and someone else is carrying your load.

Every business house, every profession, every individual, in these communities are rightfully anxious to succeed, they are anxious for you to prosper too—or they wouldn't have accomodated you wit the courtesy of credit.

Now it's up to you—don't take advantage of your fellowmen—face your obligations. If you find a just debt due either pay it or go to the one to whom it is due and frankly state your case. You will always find a willingness to assist you and a desire to help.

Benjamin Franklin long years ago grasped the importance of Prompt Payment of Obligations when he said "Remember that time is money."

Benjamin Franklin by his wisdom and industry forged a place in history which cannot be replaced.

Benjamin Franklin thoroughly believed in the idea of Community Cooperation.

CHILD HEALTH CONFERENCE AT SCHOOL HOUSE

A Child Health Conference will be held at the school house on Tuesday, April 22. Parents are invited to bring any infant or child up to seven years of age to this clinic for a health examination. The examining physician is Dr. Teal of the Indiana State Board of Health.

It is especially important that cildren have a complete "check-over" by a doctor before they enter school, and this is a splendid opportunity to check on your child's physical condition.

Only a mentally normal child in good physical and nutritional condition can make the best progress in school work. Often the child is slow because of poor vision or deafness. It is especially urged that every child who will enter school next fall attend the clinic next Tuesday at the school house. The hours are 8:30 to 12 A. M. and 1 to 4 P. M. Mrs. Pluma Hamilton of the Red Cross Nursing Committee is the local chairman.

Arrangements to attend clinic may be made through: Mrs. Lulu Armstrong, Mrs. Stella Maxwell, Mrs. Katie Storer, Mrs. Josephine Kees, Mrs. Harriett Draggoo.

Those who will assist at the clinic Tuesday are: Mrs. Ann Sechler, Mrs. Grace Dilley, Mrs. Gertrude Borthwick, Mrs. Mayola Kinsey.

FIREWORKS DEALERS PLEASE TAKE NOTICE

Alfred Hogston, State Fire Marshal, has issued the following statement in regard to four dangerous explosive fireworks items being sold to dealers in preparation for July Fourth.

"Information has come to this office concerning these four dangerous explosive fireworks items, known as "Radio Salute," "K. O. Flash Salute," "O. K. Flash Salute" and "Victory Flash Salute." These fireworks items are very deceptive, in appearance looking like very small salutes or bombs. However, they are powerful enough to seriously injure or possibly even to kill those near when they are exploded.

"Because of the extreme danger of these salutes this office is making a special rule that none of them be sold, purchased or handled in Indiana. Dealers are warned not to handle them and Prosecuting Attorneys of the State will assist this Department in prosecuting violators. The general public is also notified of the danger attendant on their handling or use."

Mr. and Mrs. Roy Bowser and daughter, Mrs. Velma Mohney and daughter and the Misses Inez Kinsey and Thelma Curie, spent Sunday afternoon in VanWert, O.

TWENTY-ONE CENTS GOES TO DEPARTMENT EXPENSE

Indianapolis, April 16.—When Mr. Indiana Motorist pays out his money for a license to operate his motor vehicle in this state, just a fraction more than twenty-two cents of the total amount he pays goes into the cost of issuance of the license.

Out of a total collection in 1929 by the automobile license department of the secretary of state's office of $6,240,596.46, only $119,704.17 was used for operating expense of the department.

These figures were announced here today by Otto G. Fifield, secretary of state, under whose supervision the motor vehicle laws are administered.

The average collection on each of the 960,405 licenses issued in 1929, Mr. Fifield announced, was $6.4978. The cost per license for postage, envelopes, material and insurance was $.10442, and the operating cost per license for salaries, supplies, forms and postage was $.12466, making a total average cost per license issued of only $.22908.

Total disbursements of the automobile license department in 1929 were $290,496.30, which included $70,503.16 representing returned licenses or rebates. This left a total, after deducting the total operating expense, of $5,950,100.16 which went to the state highway commission for road construction and maintenance.

Mr. Fifield announced that of the 960,405 licenses issued, 4,916 were free licenses for government-owned automobiles, while 146,309 transfers of plates from one car to another by the same owner were recorded.

ABLE TO CHANGE COLOR OF THE LEAVES

Changing the color of the leaves on trees on one's private estate to please milady's fancy, or to match her favorite gowns, may become a fad of the future.

This seemingly fantastic idea is well within the realm of possibility, according to scientists of the Davey Tree Surgery research laboratories. Some day, they say, it may even be possible to have pink leaves on maple trees, yellow leaves on elms, and Alice blue leaves on sedate old oaks.

Already they have changed the color of the leaves on many trees from green to crimson red and violet. This was done during the course of experiments made to find a way to immunize trees against insects and disease by injecting chemicals into the trunks. Some of the chemicals made startling changes in the color of the leaves.

Inasmuch as the research workers were not trying to outdo Mother Nature in providing a color scheme for the great outdoors, they did not proceed farther along this line. But they have persisted in their efforts to control pests by the chemical injection method and hope eventually to succeed. Until such time they say, insect pests will be controlled by the spraying methods perfected in their laboratories and known to be effective.

Editor St. Joe News:

Please find enclosed one year's subscription to The News, and 50 cents for candy for the staff. It comes to us weekly and tells us about our neighbors around St. Joe and community. But the most of our old friends have passed on. My health holds out fairly well, since my visit to Indiana, Ohio and Michigan three years ago and am kept pretty busy attending entertainments, etc.

When I came to Spokane twenty-five years ago, Sedgwick Post G. A. R. had four hundred members, and today there's thirty-eight. There's two Posts here about equally divided and twenty-six comrads passed on last year and our Grand Armys of the Republic will soon be written in the history of the past. Our G. A. R's here in Spokane have ordered a monument for our beloved hero, President Lincoln, costing $25,000 and hope to see it completed in a few months.

Respectfully,
Wm. H. Hannen,
Commander of Sedgwick Post No. 8—Dept. of Washington and Alaska, G. A. R.

SNYDER ENTERS PLEA OF "NOT GUILTY"

Albert B. Snyder, of Indianapolis, by his attorneys, H. W. Mountz of Garrett and Paul Dunten of Lagrange, waived arraignment in the DeKalb circuit court Monday to an indictment for bribery and entered a plea of not guilty.

Snyder was a salesman for the North State Publishing Company of Hammond, Ind., and in an indictment returned by the grand jury of the DeKalb circuit court three weeks ago he is charged with paying Nicholas Funk of Wilmington township, a county commissioner, $100 in connection with a contract for printing. Soon after his indictment, Snyder appeared and furnished bond for his release pending arraignment. The bond, signed by his attorney, is still in effect.

No date for trial was set, but it is probable that the case will be disposed of next week.

AUTOMOBILE DEPARTMENT OF SEC. OF STATE

Indianapolis, April 8.—Prosperity in Indiana is no idle dream, judging from automobile license figures revealed today by Otto G. Fifield, Secretary of State.

These figures show a total of $6,240,596.40 was paid to the state of Indiana during the fiscal year ending Sept. 30, 1929.

The same figures show that during the year 1929 the people of Indiana purchased 125,000 new automobiles.

An idea of the immense amount of work thrown onto the state government because of the advent of motor transportation is gained with knowledge of the fact that the automobile license department of the state has issued thus far in 1930 a total of 619,924 motor vehicle licenses. The state of Indiana must keep a check on each of these vehicles, keping a record on file of each license issued and maintaining a force of men and women not only to keep these files, but an additional force of men to see that laws regulating motor vehicle traffic are obeyed by the public.

A recent tabulation by officials of the automobile license department shows there are 524,535 passenger automobile licenses in Indiana. In addition licenses have been issued for 82,341 trucks, 989 motorcycles, 838 buses, 211 tractors, 4,622 trailers and 2,087 dealer licenses. Insurance of free licenses, for government-owned automobiles, numbered 3,865, while 35,858 chauffeurs' licenses were issued.

A study of the increase in receipts of the license department year by year since enactment of the license law in 1913 reveals a picture of the growth of Indiana. In the fiscal year of 1914, the first year the license law was in effect, receipts of the license department were $432,301.57. Compare this figure with the receipts of $6,240,596.40 in the fiscal year of 1929, and an idea of the growth of Indiana, both in population and wealth may be gained.

Fees paid by the automobile owners of Indiana not only pay for the administration of the license law and other automobile regulatory statutes, but also contributed to the upkeep and construction of highways for the use of the motoring public. Of the total sum paid during the past fiscal year in license fees, $5,950,100.16 was turned over to the state highway commission for the construction and maintenance of state highways.

Increase in the number of motor vehicles in use in Indiana has necessitated the employment of a small town in the Secretary of State's department. Not only is a large force required in the central office of the Statehouse, but branch offices are maintained by the Secretary of State for the issuance of licenses throughout the state. Branch offices afford convenience for the automobile owner out side Indianapolis to obtain his license plates with a minimum of delay and trouble. At present there are 120 branch offices maintained without additional cost to the taxpayer.

It is a far cry from the little aluminum disc provided by the Secretary of State in 1914, under the original license law, to the present intricate process of licensing more than 600,000 motor vehicles. The first license "plate" was an aluminum disc two inches in diameter, fastened to the instrument or dash board of the vehicle. The number shown on the disc was painted either on the body or fenders of the machine.

Figures on file in Secretary Fifield's office show that during the year of 1914, the first year 66,410 vehicles including trucks were registered, also exclusive of 10,403 motorcycles that were licensed. Only 511 applied for dealer's licenses in that year, compared to the more than 2,500 dealers today.

LEG AMPUTATED AT HOME FRIDAY

Saxe Hadsell submitted to the amputation of his leg last Friday at his home east of town, as the only means of saving his life, after severa years of suffering.

He was taken serious about ten days ago, gangreen having set in, and little hopes of his recovery was held by the family. Since last Friday he has felt better, and should there be no complications set in, it is believed he will recover.

The children were called home.

CHICKEN SUPPER

at Mt. Pleasant Church, Friday evening, April 18, from 5 to 8 P. M. Menu: Shredded chicken and biscuit, mashed potatoes, baked beans, pickled and deviled eggs, bread, butter, jelly, cake, fruit salad, pickles and coffee, 35 cents; children under 12 years, 20 cents.

One nice thing about a radio is that no one ever comes on the line and says, "Guess who this is."

Lesson for April 20

JESUS TEACHING FORGIVENESS

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 18:15-35, or Easter Lesson, John 20:1-16.

GOLDEN TEXT—Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Teaching Forgiveness.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Teaching Forgiveness.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Why Practice Forgiveness?

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—What Is True Forgiveness?

This lesson touches a most vital subject for our everyday lives. We are always surrounded by wicked men. Ill treatment we shall most surely receive, for all who will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution (II Tim. 3:12).

In this lesson we have divine instructions as to our behavior in case of such ill treatment.

I. How to Gain an Erring Brother (vv. 15-20).

A sinning brother is lost. To bring him to a knowledge of his sin and restore him to fellowship in the church is to gain him. One soul is of greater value than the whole world. The method to be used is:

1. Personal (v. 15).

Go alone and tell him his fault. Personal effort is most vital in winning an erring brother. It is usually an effective method.

2. The help of a comrade (v. 16). "Take with thee one or two more." The presence of one or two comrades helps in making known his fault.

3. Tell it to the church (v. 17).

Sometimes the church can accomplish that which the individual and the comrades fail to do.

4. The binding authority of the church's decision (vv. 18-20).

When the church follows the instruction of the Lord, gathers in the name of Jesus Christ, and is actuated by the Holy Spirit, its decisions are final.

II. Peter's Question (v. 21).

This question was probably occasioned by the ill treatment which Peter was then experiencing at the hands of his fellow disciples. Christ's confession of Peter brought him into the limelight. The question of the disciples, "Who is greatest in the kingdom?" shows that there was some jealousy of Peter among the disciples. This envy and jealousy was known to Peter. His patience being thus tested, he came to Jesus with a question regarding forgiveness. From the Lord's teaching as to the efforts to bring about reconciliation in case of offenses between brother and brother, he knew that the spirit of forgiveness would be required. Peter, disposed to be gracious, inquired, "till seven times?" showing his readiness to forgive his brother not three times, but twice three times, and a little over.

III. Jesus's Answer (v. 22).

This answer was an astonishing revelation to Peter. Jesus said, not until seven times, but until seventy times seven, showing that willingness to forgive should be practically limitless.

IV. The Two Creditors (vv. 23-35).

These two creditors illustrate Christ's principle of forgiveness.

1. The gracious creditor (vv. 23-27).

The king in this parable represents God. The servant who is greatly in debt represents the sinner, any sinner, every sinner—you and me. We were hopelessly in debt to God. Ten thousand talents are equal to some twelve millions of dollars. To meet this obligation would be an utter impossibility. This man's plea for time, promising to pay all, resembles man's vain imagining that he can pay his debt to God, that by his future good works he can atone for past sins.

2. The cruel creditor (vv. 28-35).

The man who was forgiven so much found a man who owed him a small sum—perhaps seventeen dollars. He shut his ears to this man's entreaty to have patience with him, flew at his throat, and cruelly put him into jail. The great mercy shown the one whose debt had been forgiven did not touch his heart, so he refused to be merciful. Being set free from so great a debt as our sins against God, we should not take up some slight consideration against our brothers, but should make God's act of unlimited forgiveness toward us a standard of unlimited forgiveness toward others.

(1) We, every one, continue to need every day the forgiveness of God. When we pray, "Forgive us our debt as we forgive our debtors," let us be sure that we have put away all thought of sin held against others. No mercy will be shown to those who have not shown mercy.

The SANDMAN STORY

ABOUT THE BIRDS

"SHALL we join the others?" asked Mr. Yellow-Headed Blackbird, of his mate.

"Oh, yes, that would be so nice," his mate answered cheerily.

"There is such a good crowd near yonder prairie," Mr. Yellow-Headed Blackbird continued. "And I know where there is a good marshy pond, too."

"Oh, you are very wonderful," said Mrs. Yellow-Headed Blackbird.

"What do you say to these plans, birdlings?" asked Mr. Yellow-Headed Blackbird of the four bird youngsters.

"There'd be lots more playmates

"We Are a Sociable Crowd," Said Mrs. Blackbird.

then, oh, chack, chack, chack," the birdlings answered.

"Ah, they take after us," said Mr. Yellow-Headed Blackbird.

The four birdlings had been gray eggs some time before; gray eggs speckled with tan. They had been in a nest of rushes which was safely held by strong rushes up above the pond. The nest had been warm and deep and comfortable.

So the Yellow-Headed Blackbird family went to join other yellow-headed blackbird families. There had been some others where they had lived, and these all went along, too.

A good many of them went and joined a huge, huge colony.

"Ah," said Mr. Yellow-Headed-Blackbird, when they arrived at their new home, "we should have come here earlier in the season. It's delightful here.

"So many nice families, too."

All the others greeted Mr. Yellow-Headed Blackbird and Mrs. Yellow-Headed Blackbird, and the children were greeted, too.

Mr. Yellow-Headed Blackbird looked very handsome with his yellow cap and bright yellow waistcoat and beautiful black suit with white touches to the wings.

Mrs. Yellow-Headed Blackbird wore a brownish suit, and her yellow hat and front feathers were not so bright as Mr. Yellow-Headed Blackbird's were. Her hat, too, was trimmed with brown.

It was unusual for these birds to have joined the others when they did, for usually all the birds are together during the time that they are all setting up nest keeping and attending to the young.

But this family, with a few others, joined the great colony later than they should have done in order to keep up the Yellow-Headed Blackbirds' ways.

"There is no mistake about it, we do love company," said Mr. Yellow-Headed Blackbird, as he began chattering to the old and new friends.

"We are a sociable crowd," said Mrs. Yellow-Headed Blackbird. "There is no mistake about that."

"What fun it will be with so many of us," the birdlings said.

They were quite grown-up by now. At least they considered they were, and it was not far from the truth, although their mother and father thought they were still young children.

All of the Yellow-Headed Blackbirds chattered and then they gave a concert that evening in honor of the new arrivals.

Had the new arrivals been other than Yellow-Headed Blackbirds, they would not have thought it an honor, for the Yellow-Headed Blackbirds make a very queer noise when they sing.

It sounds more like a squeaking chorus than a singing concert.

They give different sorts of squeaks and feel quite satisfied with themselves and with each other.

At least they do not object to the squeaking sounds, for they gather together in huge crowds, and where you find one you're sure of finding many.

They move about in a most curious way when they make these squeaking sounds, as though it was quite painful, but they keep on doing it, so it cannot be so very painful.

Surely, they can't think it so beautiful that at all costs it must be done.

"It's fine that we came," said Mr. Yellow-Headed Blackbird.

"Fine," said Mrs. Yellow-Headed Blackbird.

"Fine," said the four children.

And all their new friends and neighbors squeaked:

"Fine, fine, fine."

For Meditation

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

FRAUD

IN THE annual report for 1929 of the state bureau of securities of New York the statement is made that twenty different kinds of financial fraud were perpetrated last year. Most of these frauds dealt with very large sums of money and affected a large number of persons. In spite of the gullibility of the people who became victims of these swindlers, a fairly large percentage doubtless were hoodwinked into shady speculation in order to cash in on substantial profits. The sad part of it was that the innocent had to suffer with the guilty.

L. A. Barrett.

That 20 forms of fraudulent financial transactions, each different from the other, could be carried out in this day when so many protective measures are engaged in detecting such schemes, is in itself a cause for grave concern. We naturally ask the question, why is such a condition possible?

In the first place no sane person, however daring in the pursuit of crime he may be, is going to commit a fraud without first studying a way of escape. That is, he must be convinced that there is a chance of considerable proportion that he can get away with his scheme. If this condition exists he is willing to take that chance, otherwise not. Here we find one answer to the question—Why 20 kinds of financial fraud in 1929? Is the law strict enough in its detection as well as in its punishment of crime? Are there not too many technicalities which permit of loopholes for escape, as well as for lawyers of a certain type to argue in favor of acquital for their clients? Too frequently a man who steals nothing more than a loaf of bread is given the full penalty of the law, while the man who steals from a bank, through which act many persons are made to suffer, receives a recommendation for mercy from a convicting jury.

Another answer to the question is that our legal machinery operates too slowly. Within nine weeks from the time the Hatry swindle in London, Mr. Hatry and all his associates were in prison serving 14-year-sentences. Punishment for crime in England is speedy. No technical delays are permitted. The criminal is guilty until proven innocent. England might teach us a lesson in how to reduce the number of financial swindlers.

Home Ownership Makes for Superior Citizenship

The lure to own a home is as inherent in the mind of the average man and woman as the desire to live.

All down through the ages man has sought to create for himself and his family a place of protection against the elements and danger—with the result that the idea of home has become so indelibly fixed in the mind of the average individual it becomes a matter of pride to own a home.

It is this ever-mounting pride of home that has resulted in the great changes that take place in our larger American cities. We see neighborhoods once looked upon as beautiful residential centers. The style of the homes was once the latest. But in a few years we see these sections abandoned by the original owners, who have moved to other sections, newer and more modern. The older sections are then filled with a citizenship which has moved from some other sections perhaps less desirable, and so on. The endless desire to own a home which can be looked upon with pride by its owner goes on and on.

Statistics prove home ownership usually leads to more happiness and better citizenship. For it is pointed out that usually when a man owns a home he is pretty dependable and reliable.

Trees Have Large Place in Town's Appearance

Colonel Sherrill is a lover of trees. He believes that a tree-adorned city will make for the health and happiness of its citizens. He is asking council to repose authority in him to have planted and cared for these friends of life, wherever possible, along the city streets. No gift of prevision is essential to the foretelling of what this would mean to the city from the present year through generations to come.

To this latitude some of the noblest and most beautiful trees in the world are indigenous. Those cities far-heralded throughout the world as cities of charm and beauty are municipalities which have resolved tree planting, care, culture and preservation into terms of scientific practicability.

Cincinnati's environs are among the most beautiful in the world, with their prospects of artistic landscapes, their hills and wooded views, the silver gleams of reaching rivers. But arboreal and other natural loveliness need not be restricted to our hills and contiguous urban terrain. Why should a city's streets remain drab, dusty, desolate of fresh harmony of whispering foliage, the grace and symmetry of swaying branches?—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Air-Marking Towns

The problem of getting towns air-marked is quite ponderous and important. It is one that the aeronautics branch of the Department of Commerce has been wrestling with since it undertook the coordination of commercial aviation enterprise. The energy devoted to the solution has been far from wasted. It has resulted in the air-marking of several hundred communities.

Cross-country flying, however, has attained such a volume that it becomes obvious that the problem will not be fully solved until every hamlet, village, town and city points its name skyward. Consequently, reinforcing the efforts of the Commerce department branch, other agencies have thrown their concerted energies into the solution of the problem.

Proper Building Important

The architectural design and structural efficiency of office and factory buildings as well as homes have an important bearing on the health of America, notes the American Architect, commenting editorially on the recent estimate that the nation's annual loss from illness approximates $15,000,000,000.

"There are fewer greater causes of sickness than lack of ventilation, poor lighting, drafts and other such preventable factors," says the magazine, pointing out that false economy on the part of owners who insist on cheap construction often results in loss of workers' time of far greater value than the amount saved by reducing construction expense.

No Need to Fear Upkeep

"Upkeep" is a word often pronounced with the peculiar solemnity that once belonged to "mortgage," implying a mysterious and fearful something. To the imprudent it hangs over the homes like an evil spirit. But the foresighted know the truth. They know that it isn't upkeep that costs, but failure to upkeep.

Good Plan First Need

The secret of the successful house, if there is a secret, is in its plan. First the plan and then a house. If a house is well planned, an impressive exterior in any period or style desired can easily be adapted to it.

What, Careless?

The per capita cost of fires in the United States is at least three times that of any other country. The average annual loss during the last five years has been well over $500,000,000.—Country Home.

Sad and Lonely

Governor Gunderson of South Dakota said in Pierre in an address in praise of marriage:

"Is there anything as sad and lonely as the life of an old maid?

"An old maid was looking over the goldfish in a pet shop. She was about to start an aquarium, you see.

"'These little fellows here, ma'am,' the salesman said, 'are 40 cents apiece. Them big ones are $1.50 up.'

"The old maid bent over and studied the goldfish through her spectacles.

"'Could you tell me,' she said wistfully, 'which size would be the best company for me?'"

FAMILY DOCTOR LEARNED THIS ABOUT CONSTIPATION

Dr. Caldwell loved people. His years of practice convinced him many were ruining their health by careless selection of laxatives. He determined to write a harmless prescription which would get at the cause of constipation, and correct it.

Today, the prescription he wrote in 1885 is the world's most popular laxative! He prescribed a mixture of herbs and other pure ingredients now known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, in thousands of cases where bad breath, coated tongue, gas, headaches, biliousness and lack of appetite or energy showed the bowels of men, women and children were sluggish. It proved successful in even the most obstinate cases; old folks liked it for it never gripes; children liked its pleasant taste. All drugstores today have Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin in bottles.

Veterans on Pension Rolls

On December 31, 1929, there were 472,917 old soldiers on the pension rolls of the bureau of pensions. Of this number 183,310 were Spanish American veterans, 55,716 were Civil war veterans; and the remainder were regular service men, and veterans of the Indian wars.

Happy Woman Tells How She Lost 19 Pounds of Fat in 27 Days

During October a woman in Montana wrote—"My first bottle of Kruschen Salts lasted almost 4 weeks and during that time I lost 19 pounds of fat—Kruschen is all you claim for it—I feel better than I have for years."

Here's the recipe that banishes fat and brings into blossom all the natural attractiveness that every woman possesses.

Every morning take one half teaspoonful of Kruschen Salts in a glass of hot water before breakfast.

Be sure and do this every morning for "it's the little daily dose that takes off the fat."—Don't miss a morning. The Kruschen habit means that every particle of poisonous waste matter and harmful acids and gases are expelled from the system.

At the same time the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels are toned up and the pure, fresh blood containing Nature's six life-giving salts are carried to every organ, gland, nerve and fibre of the body and this is followed by "that Kruschen feeling" of energetic health and activity that is reflected in bright eyes, clear skin, cheerful vivacity and charming figure.

If you want to lose fat with speed get an 85c bottle of Kruschen Salts from any live druggist anywhere in America with the distinct understanding that you must be satisfied with results or money back.

Dear Editor:

I'M GETTING super-calloused to super-salesmanship. Yesterday I stopped at one of these super-filling stations to get the oil changed in my automobile.

A neat lad in a blue kimono greeted me. "Seven quarts? Yes sir. And your name and address, please?"

I explained that I wanted to take the oil with me; not have it sent. Undiscouraged, he replied that they like to have my name so they can write and invite me to call again when in the neighborhood.

All this ritual took some time, and I wondered why they don't take care of today's customers more expeditiously and let tomorrow take care of itself. And who wants letters from a filling station? I get the most interesting mail in the world, and I hate to have it diluted.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

THE POOR MAN'S CORE

IF A child in eating an apple merely girdles it—that is, eats around the apple's "equator" and leaves intact its upper and lower zones, it is a sign that he will never be rich. The common saying is that he leaves a "poor man's core." This very common superstition is probably based upon an instinctive and unconscious psychology. The child does not show that natural acquisitiveness of character which is the foundation of wealth. If he had that quality he would eat the apple to a "clean core," and "the child is father of the man."

But there may be lingering in the superstition, also, a remnant of ancient myth and magic. There is an old custom, still said to be practiced in Bohemia, in which the eating of an apple is connected with future abundance, which custom is based on sympathetic magic—a clear survival from primitive times. The first apple that a young tree bears is given to a woman who has borne a large number of children and she must eat it entirely up. By doing this she communicates by sympathetic magic her own fruitfulness to the tree which will, next year, bear an abundant crop. Should she eat the apple only partially the sympathetic magic would not, naturally, be so powerful and the desired abundance might not ensue. It will be seen that there is here the same idea found in the superstition of the boy and the "poor man's core"—viz.: that a complete consumption of the apple is necessary to insure future abundance.

WHY DO WE CALL IT "BANJO?"

BANJO—how much contumely has been heaped upon your vibrating strings! How you have been maligned, humiliated, laughed at and scorned, while those guilty of such discourtesy were all unknowing of your noble lineage!

Yes, indeed, banjo—noble indeed have been your forbears, however lowly some consider your present estate. Well may you thrum forth triumphantly and proud; for you are come, albeit somewhat altered in form, from Pandoura, the favorite stringed instrument of ancient Greece, and named after the god Pan.

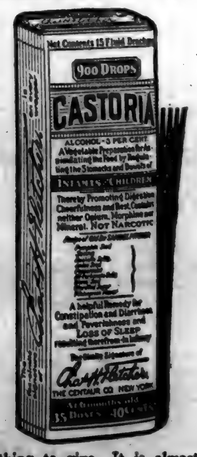
When Babies CRY



Babies will cry, often for no apparent reason. You may not know what's wrong, but you can always give Castoria. This soon has your little one comforted; if not, you should call a doctor. Don't experiment with medicines intended for the stronger systems of adults! Most of those little upsets are soon soothed away by a little of this pleasant-tasting, gentle-acting children's remedy that children like.

It may be the stomach, or may be the little bowels. Or in the case of older children, a sluggish, constipated condition. Castoria is still the thing to give. It is almost certain to clear up any minor ailment, and could by no possibility do the youngest child the slightest harm. So it's the first thing to think of when a child has a coated tongue; won't play, can't sleep, is fretful or out of sorts. Get the genuine; it always has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the package.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

What is more noble than a man who does all for the elevation of his fellowman.

Well, suppose he don't know what he is talking about, he has juts as good a right to be wrong as you have.

A person who persists in throwing boomerangs will soon convince his community who he is aiming at and who he is actually hitting.

And now we are told that we have developed spiritual and mental jazz in our maddened craze for speed and pleasure.

They say that every man has three enemies on earth, the world, the devil, and himself. The thing to do is to get the devil fighting with the world and then he would have a chance of licking himself.

In Indiana's political arena candidates are to be opposed for no personal reasons. All opposition to candidates will be for what the candidate himself stands for and what the people do not stand for.

Here's one: One of our prominent citizens was asked how many opponents a certain candidate had in the coming primary election. He replied in all seriousness, "Well, let's see. Two besides himself."

Three leaps through life: When a man gets married he surrenders his will and swears by the New Testament. After he is married, he makes out his will and testament. When he is dead his heirs bust his will and the New and Old Testament.

There is only one way to convey to the world the fact that you want to amount to something. Assert yourself. Just pound, kick, scratch, push, bleet, run, scramble, sing, argue, preach, teach, screech—any way to make the world look over their spectacles and take notice. And besides, the world packs two cold shoulders around with it most of the time and it might be necessary for you to use the ice pick to get through the ice. It won't do for us to be still and silent in order to make the world extend to us the opportunities that we need to fulfill our destiny nor to attempt to prove our usefulness by imitating or emulating a monument or a tombstone because the dead ones have a monopoly on that branch of advertising.

It is said that angels look down on the earth and see man in his struggles to defeat the enemies of his soul in their vigilant and everlasting opposition and long for a chance to be persecuted and delivered in chains to their death. Like the reader of the bible or of the novel, he longs to be in the book and take part in the tribulations of the hero, soon to be hailed as a victorious conqueror. Martyrs of any kind inspire us to do likewise when we view them in the category of painted characters but wait till we get a toe pinched and we ejaculate. Ain't it awful and our hunger for the reward of martyrdom is satisfied. Where the rub comes the thorns go with the crown.

The national wealth of the United States increased from $186,300,000,000 in 1912, to $320,800,000,000 in 1922 and $360,100,000,000 in 1928, according to figures published by the National Industrial Conference Board. Per capita wealth in 1928 amounted to $3,000 for the country as a whole.

Wind is a Close Second to Fire

In destuction and damage to property, high winds are almost as culpable as fire. A wind need not be of tornado force to do serious damage; nor is wind damage a hazard peculiar to any section of the country. Exceedingly high and dangerous wind movements have occurred in almost every section of the country and history will undoubtedly repeat itself. Windstorm Insurance is very moderate in cost.

Already for this spring season, dealers in building materials of practically all kinds, report more sales for new buildings than last year and repairing jobs are in the lead of last year. This is encouraging and is a sign of prosperity and progress.

A fire at Hicksville last Friday amounting to several thousand dollars, started in trash at rear of the Swisher & Battershell 5 and 10 cent store. The entire stock was damaged with smoke and water, with the exception of the front part of the store.

The Gonsollas gravel loader was installed in the Kees pit Tuesday ready for hauling gravel to the mile of road from Saylor's Corners north to the Newville–Auburn road. The townsip line road from Hadsell's bridge east will be graded soon and graveled to the Baker's Corners.

With one case of spinal meningitis in Garrett, the board of health is cautioning the public against an epidemic. The sick child is Jake Marti, 13, son of Mr. and Mrs. Chris Marti, in the east part of Garrett. The child has been afflicted since April 5 and its condition remains serious.

Morgan county timber lands were being ravaged by forest fire late last week. The tract contained 1200 acres. Little do we realize the extent of the forest fires in the United States. The United States Forester gave out the startling figures by saying that an average of 500 fires per day for every day in the year, is the present record, and the direct cause is attributed to neglect of campers and hunters. Years ago the only real cause of forest fires was lightning.

Originality Marks the Late Type of Jewelry

It is the little things that make such a big difference whereby the smart woman shows her exclusiveness. Originality, says a fashion writer in the Kansas City Star, is synonymous with personality, and every one strives to be different from other people, even in the tiniest detail of the toilette. Mark the woman who went to a smart party recently wearing her pearl necklace attached to the V opening of her gown by a series of invisible clips.

A well-known dowager was seen wearing a handsome diamond necklace attached to the frock at the back of the neck—the frock being cut high at the back—and down the left side of the V opening. The right side of the necklace was left to dangle freely.

A sparkling debutante refused to carry a vanity bag. A floral spray at the waist masked a tiny pocket, every bit large enough for small change and the wisp of silk that serves some women for a handkerchief. Lipstick and powder puff were both hidden away in a large jeweled, hinged shoulder brooch. To match her jeweled wrist watch, this lady wore, on her right wrist, a tiny mirror, surrounded by diamonds.

The clip brooch, launched in Paris only a few short months ago, has become an established fashion. It is seen everywhere that well-dressed women go, and in the smartest jewel shops. It is so definitely a part of Paris fashions that women are beginning to have their watches put on clip brooches, to wear them with certain frocks that will not show off a watch bracelet to advantage.

The clip watch is preferred by many smart Parisiennes. Jewelers say—mainly because it can be worn in a number of ways. Like any clip brooch, it may be fastened to a plait on the shoulder, to the edge of a neckline, or on the collar of a suit. It may be tucked into a belt, to serve as a buckle. Or, following in the wake of its bracelet predecessor, it may be clipped to one's cuff. Some women fasten a watch-clip to the outside of a purse or to the edge of a muff.

These new watch-clips are especially handsome, and include a number of fine stones—diamonds, rubies, emeralds, sapphires and topaz—all carved and arranged to simulate a bouquet of leaves and flowers.

Life of a Sponge

Sponges live their own lives and eat their own food as other animals do. The separate existence of a sponge begins when a tiny particle, after being whirled about for a time by ocean tides and currents, eventually attaches itself to a piece of rock, and from that home it seeks its own livelihood. The food of infant sponges consists of yolk cells, which contain a form of nourishment. Later, as the sponge grows, it requires something more solid, and this is brought in by the currents.

"Great Britain"

Britannia Major, meaning Great Britain, was the name formerly given to the whole island to distinguish it from Britannia Minor, which was the name given to Brittany. James I used the title king of Great Britain, but without the sanction of parliament. It was not officially adopted until after the union of England with Scotland in 1707. After the union with Ireland in 1800 the country became known as the Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

Not for Her!

Small Jeane, who had been used to having her hair cut at home, was taken to the barber shop for the first time. Proudly she was seated in the chair. When the current was turned on so the clippers could be used she became terrified.

"Stop it, stop it!" she sobbed; "I won't have a vacuum sweeper on my head."

Waters From Icefield

The stream which ends in the famous Takakkaw falls in Yoho national park, British Columbia, is fed by the melting waters of the Waputik icefield which lies upon the summit of the Great divide. Flowing down the mountain for over half a mile it reaches the precipice that walls the east side of the Yoho valley. Here it takes a leap of 150 feet over the edge, then, gathering itself together, falls in a glorious curtain 1,000 feet down the face of the cliff, and finally tumbles in a magnificent cascade of 500 feet into Yoho river.

Original Olympic Games

The most famous of the four great national festivals of the Greeks was the Olympic games. They were celebrated in the sanctuary of Zeus at Olympia every four years, but, owing to the fluctuations of the Greek lunar calendar, the time varied from the beginning of August to the middle of September. Olympia was situated in the Pisatis, the southeast district of Elis at the junction of the Cladeus with the Alpheus. It was never a town but only a sanctuary with the buildings connected with the worship and the games.

Perfect Will

The will of Chief Justice White has been considered a perfect example. It contains but 51 words. It reads: "This is my last will. I give, bequeath, and devise to my wife, Leita M. White, in complete and perfect ownership, all my rights and property of every kind and nature, whether real, personal or mixed, wherever situated, appointing her executrix of my estate, without bond and giving her seisin therof." A will should be properly signed and witnessed.

Full-Dress Rehearsal

An old actor-manager died, or at least his relatives thought he had died, and arrangements were made for the funeral.

On the appointed day one of his old colleagues arrived to pay his last respects, but, to his astonishment, the would-be mourner was informed that the "deceased" had come to life after a period of coma.

"Just like Bill," said the visitor, "he was always a terror for rehearsals."

Veils and Just-Right Hat in Winter Fashion

Veils, which we thought had been consigned to the limbo of forgotten styles these many years, are again hovering on the edge of fashion, reports Olga Clark, Paris correspondent of the Household Magazine.

Going up in front and down in back, hats are so severe, she says, they need the half made face veil that has been teasing Paris for some months now, and will be worn more than ever this winter. Push them back well, so that the long back portions will fit close to the neck when you wear them. Otherwise you are sure to look like a fireman. And if you have a long neck, the better these new hats may be worn. They're sculpture hats, and you must get the just-right one for you.

Facts For Farm Folks Written by Agricultural Authorities

PROF. W. B. KRUSEK.

STARTING SPRING PIGS

Do you know that the United States Department of Agriculture says that only 65% of the pigs that are farrowed actually go to the market as finished pork. This means that 35% of them are lost before they reach the market. Chilling of pigs when they are small is undoubtedly the cause of a large percentage of mortality during the first few weeks of a pig's life.

The brood sow seldom shows good judgment during the month of April when we are confronted with a great many April showers. You see many brood sows working out in the cold rain while the pigs stand by with their backs hunched, their hair standing on end and the little fellows trembling with cold. The good feeder should watch these brood sows very carefully during the month of April and see that these pigs are protected from cold.

The good feeder believes in feeding his young stock liberally at the time when they are making their growth. It is a good policy to place a good pig meal in self-feeders before these pigs almost as soon as they are born. In this way they will become gradually accustomed to their ration, they will take a little at a time and it will help promote growth and at the same time supplement the ration of the brood sow.

FORTY-FIVE COUPLES START IN MARATHON DANCE IN FORT WAYNE, INDIANA

A world championship marathon, or endurance dance started April 9th at the new Armory Building, 330 So. Calhoun St., under the auspices of the Indiana National Guard Units of Fort Wayne.

Among the ninety entrants were the following Fort Wayne people: Louis Oliver, Lena Bauer, Ocia Schlichter, Glene Shady, Evelyn Miller, Gene Lamphier, LaFern Deardorf, Virginia Mason, Sela Foerster, Babe Baldwin, Mary Buance, Eleanor Stanford, and Clara Sommers. The rest are from all parts of the United States as far east as Bigstone Gap, Va., and as far west as Los Angeles, California.

The dance is continuous forty-five minutes on the floor, four minutes to go to and from the floor, and eleven minutes rest out of each hour, twenty-four hours each day and from day to day until all the contestants except the one couple have dropped out when the remaining couple will be declared the winner of the one thousand dollar prize. The meals are prepared under the direction of a skilled dietician and served to them while on the floor.

Every contestant had to undergo a physical examination showing their fitness to enter into such a contest and are under the care of a doctor, nurse and trainer every hour of the twenty-four. A special program of vaudeville and stunts is put on each evening and a half hour program is broadcast each evening except Sunday over Station WGL.

A number from this vicinity have attended and report the program clean, entertaining and very enjoyable. Ted Brown, as master of ceremonies is clever, witty and knows his audience.

That Good Ham Sandwich

By I. WRIGHT

(Copyright.)

MERWIN PALMER straightened up from his cramped position over the engine and rubbed his greasy hands down the tan overalls he wore. "I tell you, Dave," he said with a sigh, "I'm going up to that house and ask for a drink of water. I need a little something after three hours of this work."

The man lying in the road under the car snorted: "G'wan, then. We're not going to call a garage man in for this little job if it takes all day."

"No, that's all right with me—but I'm going to have a drink of water. And say—if I saw a ham sandwich right now."

"For a civil engineer with a nice new diploma from college and a pretty fraternity pin that no girl ever yet succeeded in getting away—well, you sound like a hungry tramp." And the man in the road turned over on his side and stretched two fingers up into the motor and said something softly under his breath.

Up at the house on the hill a girl with soft golden hair and violet eyes stood on the porch, watching the progress of the man coming up. "His figure is like Merwin's," she whispered to herself. "But Merwin—" she sighed a little and sat down at the white kitchen table, which was spread with two large loaves of bread, butter, mustard and pretty pink ham.

"May—may I have a drink of water?" asked Merwin Palmer a moment later.

The girl with the violet eyes did not look up from her bread cutting. "The pump is there and the dipper is hanging in the apple tree directly above. Help yourself." Her voice was cordial.

As soon as he had turned to go to the pump she looked after him. Afraid of tramps, she was somehow fascinated by his figure. His shoulders drooped as he pumped, and he looked very tired. When he called out "Thanks" she was again looking at her bread.

If he stared at her queerly she did not know it, for she was not even glancing his way.

"Maybe tramps are a lazy lot and don't deserve anything," she said half aloud, "but I'll bet a sandwich would taste good to him. Say!" she called out. She did not know how to address him, and "say" seemed to be adequate.

He turned.

"Would you—care for a ham sandwich?"

He hurried toward her.

For a moment she was startled. She had heard dreadful tales of tramps knocking girls senseless and going through the house to take everything of value. She almost regretted her impulse.

"I don't know that you're hungry," she said timidly.

"Why," he said cordially in a booming voice, "I'd commit murder right now for a ham sandwich. I was just telling my pal down the road that a ham sandwich—"

She paled: he had a pal down the road—she did not dare look at him.

"May I help myself?" he asked as she made no effort to hand him the plate.

She nodded; her throat felt dry and hot and she wished that some of the family were home. "You—you might take one along to your—pal—" she said in a very little voice.

"Fine—" he said, eating the sandwich with a great relish. "Although a fellow who swears as he does doesn't deserve anything as good as—" he said and then stopped short.

Her face flamed; why had she called him back when he was on his way out of the yard! She dared not look at him. Panic overwhelmed her.

"Aren't you Faith Darrow?" he asked.

She looked at him now in surprise: "Yes."

"I'm—"

"You're never Merwin Palmer?"

He nodded placidly. "I'm glad you remembered. I thought you didn't and—"

She laughed nervously: "Well, why—why didn't you say so at the start? I thought—you—thought you were a tramp."

He stared at his tan overalls. "The car broke down and Dave and I thought we'd fix it ourselves."

There was a strained silence as each followed thoughts concerning an evening where there was dancing, a balcony, certain words—and then the interruption of a crowd of dancers.

"Y'know—" it was Merwin Palmer who broke the silence. "Y'know, I always had a notion, Faith, that my fraternity pin would look better on you than on anyone else in the world; suppose we—" he was holding out the pin which had never before been out of his hands.

A snort made them turn around. "So this is what you call getting a 'drink of water' while I lie under that car and sweat?" It was Dave.

"Here's a sandwich and there's the dipper far down the yard there by the pump. G'wan and get a drink," urged Merwin Palmer, with more cordiality than he had ever before shown. "G'wan, we're busy here."

Insect-Catching Plants

All plants have interesting characteristics, but few are so endlessly mysterious and fascinating as are the insect-catching and insect-devouring plants, of which Florida has an especially large number, comprising species of butterworts, sundews, pitcher plants, and bladderworts. No less than five species of pitcher plants grow in Florida, says Nature Magazine, and the large flowers are so remarkable in form that a writer in 1672 aptly called them "fantastical flowers." Yet the hollow, trumpet-shaped leaves, dotted and veined with white and red and purple, are even more fantastic than the flowers, and most fantastic of all are the means by which these handsome leaves lure and capture and devour their living prey.

Emblems of Easter

Greet Sun on Easter Day on Mt. Rubidoux

California has the most unique religious event in the world, the annual Easter pilgrimage up Mount Rubidoux, Riverside.

Pilgrims and pilgrimages have been many from the time of Chaucer down, and year after year the great pilgrim centers have steadily drawn the massed crowds. The office of pilgrims may be found in the old service books. There was an appropriate costume, the cockle hat and staff of an invariable shape, and the scrip hung about the neck. The sign of the Canterbury pilgrimage was a bell; the pilgrim to the Holy land wore a cross formed of strips of colored cloth, and one who returned from a long pilgrimage might be as thickly decorated as a modern soldier, with palms and medals and clasps.

But these pilgrimages were made by people of one creed; the Rubidoux Easter service knows no limitations; it is for people of all creeds, and it is for people of no creed. It is universal.

At first thought, it seems un-American. It is difficult to realize that the modern world of motors and airplanes, speed mad, will pause for simple, unaffected worship with nothing of the spectacular to attract, and ascend a mountain top at daybreak for simple devotion. But, that people are devout, that they long for simplicity in devotion, is proved by the fact that last year, at a conservative estimate, 3,500 people ascended the mountain.

The Road to Rubidoux.

Rubidoux is finely situated for such an event. One wonders if Jacob Riis, when, with a handful of people, he inaugurated this service, saw the vast possibilities of its future. The mountain rises abruptly from the level plain, and is just outside of Riverside. A splendid road, a marvel of engineering, leads to the summit, the ascent and descent being over adjoining shoulders of the mountain for greater safety. The grade is easy, the curves smooth. Near the top, on a mesa, is a parkway, where machines are left at one side, to be cared for until they are required for the descent. It is a wonderful sight to see that long unbroken chain of automobiles ascending and descending, and the vast throng of people massing on the mountain top. Meanwhile, over the rugged mountain side, along the trails, threading hidden paths, clambering everywhere and walking along the smooth roadside, throng the people on foot.

In Long Procession.

Long before daybreak, while it is yet dark, and Rubidoux is only a deeper shadow on the horizon, one hears the hurrying footsteps on the street and, later, the sound of wheels, then you become one with the long procession. Above you the lights climb, twinkling again, and one looks down, as each curve is rounded, on an interminable climbing row of lights below winding about the rugged bulk, until, at length, the mountain seems sentient, not rock and stone, but thrilling with life. Except for the soft grinding of the wheels, it is silent, for footfalls make no sound. Except for the radiance of the moon, or the momentary flare of a headlight, it is all soft darkness. The light begins to shimmer into a gray translucence, and colors show here and there, a floating veil, a sweater, and, as we pass, brilliant masses of wild flowers show clear yellow, blue or pink among the great gray bowlders. Then we dismount and wait.

There is a moment's pause. On one hand San Antonio lifts his majestic, white-crowned head above the clinging mists; on the other, faint green and saffron pink herald the dawn. Then, as if for a signal, the golden rim of the rising sun comes up above the eastern slope, color grows and flickers, streaming zenithward, and, as if in response, a cornet sounds clear and strong above the throng, "Jerusalem, Jerusalem, Lift Up Your Voice and Sing." Following comes a dear, familiar hymn, the hymn that everybody can sing, and that everybody does sing. Oh, that great volume of song rising from the mountain top! How it thrills the soul. How it catches away the breath for a moment to listen to that "great voice of a great multitude."

No Set Form of Service.

The service is impressive in its simplicity. There are no forms; there is no litany. The Lord's prayer, Scripture reading, responsive, well-known hymns, and always the reading of Dr. Henry Van Dyke's poem, "God on the Open Air." An anthem has been written by Carrie Jacobs Bond for use at the service; it is entitled "Behold the Easter Dawn." Miss Marcella Craft sang the solo parts in this and in two other songs last year. The number of singers was greatly augmented. Mr. Carl Bronson, one of Los Angeles' noted choir leaders, was there with his choir of over 100 voices, and this group of singers was supplemented by members of all the Riverside choirs and music clubs, which made the singing the great feature. They led and directed the singing of this vast outdoor audience.

The annual Easter sunrise service on the top of Rubidoux mountain is unique. It is a service belonging to southern California, yet, already, world wide in note. Begun by a few, it belongs to the people now and will persist by its own inner life.

Bohemian Easter Custom

A curious old custom, that of "Easter riding," prevails in various parts of Bohemia. On each Easter day the riders assemble dressed in black and carrying crosses, flags and other emblems. They proceed from Schonwald on a three hours' ride to Kulm, where they attend services. The priest, after a sermon, wherein he refers to the horse as a symbol of power, bestows the benediction on the animals and their riders. The riders then visit the neighboring castles, where they receive hospitality, subsequently making their way homeward, escorted by a band and a large crowd.—Grit.

THE STORY

Floyd Unwin and Howard Bettington take dinner with an old college chum, Alfred Gibbons, financial magnate. Unwin produces a written pledge taken by the three at college to help each other in adversity, explaining that he needs financial assistance to educate his son Bob and daughter Mary. Gibbons scoffs at the "legality" of the pledge, but agrees to make a place for the daughter in his organization. Mary Unwin is stenographer to a wealthy debauchee, Elgar Radway. Calling at Gibbons' office, as arranged, Mary is asked to betray her employer's secrets and refuses. Radway plans an ocean voyage to recover from the effects of dissipation. Mary is to go as secretary, her brother to accompany her. Bettington, painting on the Maine coast, is kidnaped, and taken aboard a vessel. His clothes are found by Gibbs, a fugitive from justice.

CHAPTER IV—Continued

Bob sauntered off feeling that he had come face to face with men more evil than he had ever known before. On the deck above his sister was; he had been told he must not venture there. Above that deck was the wireless house, in which he was deeply interested. He had seen a cheery young man in uniform, who had been pointed out as the wireless operator. But between the two was a great gulf fixed. "Sparks" was an officer. Perhaps Bob had entered upon his new task with too great an enthusiasm. He found himself called upon to do certain greasy and oily offices usually performed by engine room help. Metzger, the chief engineer, swore at him viciously when he began to ask questions about the engines. On the whole, he found himself, for the first time in his life, distinctly unpopular.

* * * * * * * *

Barnegat Light was in sight when Sam, at midnight, came into Bettington's cabin.

"The Boss says you can see him now," he growled.

Bettington followed him along a dim passage to the extreme stern of the vessel. Here he unlocked a door leading to a companion way which brought him to a quarter deck at the after part of the yacht. There were two big wicker chairs and a table. Sam motioned him to sit down. Then he knocked at a stateroom door and was bidden to enter.

"You're to go in," Sam said a few moments later. "I'll wait here."

It was not surprising that a certain emotion of excitement and, perhaps, apprehension seized upon the painter as he moved toward the door. What manner of ruffian was he to confront? And what was it that he had been predestined for? A man who could hold a turbulent and ferocious brute like Sam in thrall, would probably be one of greater power and violence than he.

Never, Bettington confessed, as he entered the stateroom, had his prejudgments been more at fault. This was no towering bully, no disciple of the strong-arm school of underworld aristocracy who looked at him. Apparently the man was of the same social class as himself.

The Boss was a little, slender man, delicate of feature and limb. His face had that ivory pallor one associates with extreme old age. And yet, he did not seem to be an old man. He was smiling as Bettington entered; he smiled while he talked.

"I am afraid," said the Boss, after waving his guest to a seat, "that you have not enjoyed your voyage."

"I have not," Bettington returned. "I may tell you at once, that I resent the whole occurrence. It has been one outrage added to another. That they had their origin in a mistake I know very well, but the effect is just the same and I demand to be put ashore at once."

"We are provisioned for a year," said the Boss calmly, "and most likely shall not touch any port for one month."

"I shall," snapped the painter.

"I think not," the other corrected gently. "I expected you to make these protests. Sam has told me of your attitude and I admire it. The wise man differs from a fool in knowing just when to try to make terms. We are here to talk business."

"Look here," Bettington began, "I explained to your first murderer out there, that there had been some mistake of identities. My name is Bettington; I am a painter of seascapes and my studio is on East Thirty-fourth street."

The Boss took from a small table a New York paper. "Did you have a pleasant funeral?" he asked suavely. He passed the paper over the table and pointed out an obituary notice tucked away in an obscure spot. "Read it," the Boss commanded.

The paragraph was headed:

"Well-Known Marine Painter Killed. "Falls From Fire Escape in Dark."

Bettington read an amazing description of his death, burial and life's work. The chief witness at the inquest was Floyd Unwin. Unwin had been amazed to see his friend, whom he thought to be out of town, and climbed to his studio to call upon him. The rooms were seemingly in darkness and none answered the knock. In the morning the janitor had discovered the mutilated body in the yard. Floyd Unwin and he had identified it.

"It was a clever idea, said the Boss, "but I, too, read the papers. In the idiom of poker, I have called your bluff. In almost every case I have had to do that to get my crew. Take Sam, for example. Sam, under another name, was doing rather well bootlegging across the Canadian line. In Rangely he was on the way to become respected. It was necessary to remind him that he had broken from Dannemora. I was compelled to build up his real past. I hold it over him." The Boss waved his delicate hand airily. "It is a truism that knowledge is power. I have just told you by what method I have the whip-hand of what you call my 'first murderer.'"

"But why put me in possession of it?" Bettington demanded. "That strikes me as a very unwise step."

"Because, my dear Andrew Orme, I have just as strong a hold over you."

Bettington made a gesture of despair. The Boss had not the look of a crazed man; but this sort of talk pointed to an egocentricity not far from megalomania. He had the delusion of power.

"Andrew Orme," said Bettington. "Who is he?"

"I'll tell you." The Boss passed a box of cigars to the other. "Andrew Orme did very well at Yale. He was on his way to become a great surgeon. Then he found within himself the curse of gaming. He needed money. He found he possessed the dangerous gift of copying signatures. So he forged. And when he was discovered he killed the man who threatened to give him up to justice. He had committed his murder in San Francisco and was sent to San Quentin as a life prisoner. He escaped and was absolutely lost from view. That was almost ten years ago. I found him by accident. I was automobiling in New England and needed water for a boiling motor. I went to a fisherman's shack. There I found one Jonathan Gibbs, disguised with a beard and clad in the rough garb of a fisherman. Much the same picturesque costume as you wear now. I did not tell him that I knew him. At that time I had no possible use for him. It was not until three years later that I made use of my knowledge."

One thing was cleared up, at all events. Bettington had been shanghaied because he was thought to be the fisherman whose clothes he wore. He saw now how strangely fortune had deserted him. Out here at sea, he could not prove himself to be the man he was. And the mysterious death of a man like enough to himself to be identified by Unwin all added to the difficulty of setting himself straight.

He remembered how Gibbs had feared he had entered his rude shack for some inimical purpose. And Sam had let fall that Gibbs had been shadowed. And Bettington recalled that Gibbs had been much more fearful in manner than any honest fisherman had the need to be. Undoubtedly Gibbs was Andrew Orme, surgeon and forger. . . . And Howard Bettington was dead and buried. The anxiety that his face betrayed, led the Boss to think he had come to a saner way of thinking.

"I am offering you a far better way of living than ever you had in Maine. When we are through with this trip you will have money—plenty of it—and can spend it, and your life, in some southern port."

"And if I don't accept?"

The smile of the other man grew irritating.

"None knows of your being aboard but my men. There are only three of the men who are not for me: Hallett, the captain, his nephew who is the wireless operator, and a lad named Unwin. They can be eliminated . . . . so can you."

Unwin. So that was why he had seen his old friend come aboard. It was his mechanically-minded son who was among those of the crew presently to be eliminated. A mood of unusual caution took hold of Bettington. As skillfully as possible he must learn what was required of him and to what perils those on the ship were to be put.

"But if you eliminated me," he said easily, "you would put yourself to some inconvenience. You've put my cards on the table without any aid of mine. What about your own cards?"

"The sensible man," said the Boss, "is the adaptable one. I am glad you are seeing the wisdom of readjustment. Here are my cards, Andrew Orme. This boat was chartered, through my advice, by Elgar Radway, the multi-millionaire. He is aboard now with his wife, a noted beauty, and a girl secretary. This boy Unwin, of whom I spoke, is the secretary's brother."

Bettington hoped the other did not see the slight start he gave when he realized that Mary Unwin was here. He remembered now that she was Radway's private stenographer. He thought of Sam, of Metzger and those other ill-omened men who would be likely to make up such a crew as this. Something of the horror he could not conceal betrayed itself.

"Do not be alarmed," said the Boss; "this is an expedition planned only for the possession of money. The women will be safe as long as I rule; be sure of that."

"What is the scheme? Blackmail?"

"Something simpler and cleaner. Radway has come aboard, as he himself almost believes, to rest. He has arduous tasks before him. I know—and he realizes it now—that he has come aboard to fill himself with the rich food and alcohol his physicians have forbidden him for a year.

"Every year, I find, he has spent a month in this manner. At the end of these trips he goes back to his office and works like ten men. But this year he has had hardening arteries and planned to be temperate. That was why he brought his wife and the girl. . . . That was why he sent me this telegram." The Boss shewed Bettington the wire Mary Unwin had sent to "Clements," Bar Harbor. "He honestly intended to stay sober or moderately so."

"And won't he?"

"At dinner tonight he was offensively drunk. I heard his wife whisper, 'After what you promised me, Elgar.'"

"Then you are a guest here?" It explained the luxurious stateroom in which the Boss sat.

"I am not," said the Boss. "I occupy an anomalous position; in a sense a derogatory one. It so suits me, for our purposes, to play the part of the steward."

Bettington wondered why he felt a disinclination to ask this man who and what he was. He realized that he was in the presence of one from whom emanations of evil and unusual

"I'll Tell You." The Boss Passed a Box of Cigars to the Other.

powers were given out. He was annoyed to admit it. With Sam or the rest of the crew it was different. They feared that the knowledge might bring them, if they forced him through disobedience to use it, to death or imprisonment. But no man had such a hold over Howard Bettington. And yet he experienced uneasiness in the presence of this small, eternally smiling man whose neck he could wring with his powerful grasp as easily as one might choke the life out of a fowl.

"What part am I to play?" Bettington asked. For a time, at any rate, he must seem to fall in with the other's plans.

"It may be very little," the Boss said. "This is how the matter stands. Radway can afford to be away from his office for a month. He has so arranged things that he is safeguarded for that time. But to stay away longer would ruin him. Another financier, Gibbons, is a dangerous antagonist. When the time comes, Radway will be offered the choice of ruin or a ransom of one million dollars. He will bluster, threaten and fight. In the end he will do as I have arranged."

"But the captain and the others?"

"Will be eliminated. I have taken every precaution. I shall seize the ship and dictate terms."

Bettington thought a moment.

"That's all very well," he cried, "but you can't carry off into captivity an international figure like Radway. Why, man, they'll send gunboats out and every ship we pass will be looking for us. There's no disguising a craft like this."

"There will be no alarm. Letters will be prepared written in Radway's hand, explaining that his health is benefiting slowly and that he will remain away for a few weeks longer. Mrs. Radway will write to her father, the senator, and the girl secretary will send postals to her parents. . . . They will disarm all suspicion."

"How?" Bettington demanded bluntly. "You'll threaten them with violence unless they write? The women won't do it, nor Radway either!"

"Nevertheless they will be written. For what purpose do you suppose Andrew Orme, master forger, was dragged from Blackport, Maine?"

The Boss took some papers from a drawer. These he passed to Bettington.

"Here are letters written by Mrs. Radway and her husband. Study them closely. You are to berth in the next stateroom."

He led Bettington into an adjoining cabin. From it another room was seen.

"That," said the Boss, "is the doctor's office." He pointed to a parchment on which the name John Waite was inscribed. Bettington saw that Waite had taken his degree of doctor of medicine in the University of Pennsylvania fifteen years before.

"You will be known henceforth as Doctor Waite," said the Boss. "You will probably have very little to do, but it was fortunate that Radway required a physician. Otherwise you would have had to become a member of my crew. The real Doctor Waite, over whom I have some slight hold, lent me this and some implements of the trade, drugs and the rest of it. You will probably have to prescribe some sedatives for Radway."

Bettington knew nothing of medicine; he quailed at the idea of having to look after a really sick person.

"Your position as an officer will give you entry to the main saloon," the Boss went on. "You will be able to gain the confidence of the women and report to me what happens. In the role I have assumed I hear much, but not enough."

Bettington was glad to know that he would be in a position to watch over Unwin's girl. It is true she would not yet know his name. He supposed, until he had decided what best to do in the face of dangers, he had better keep up the masquerade.

The Boss took his acquiescence as a matter of course. It was not conceivable to that arrogant spirit that there should be insubordination.

"You will understand," he said, "that as a ship's doctor you will have little in common with the ship's steward. Of me you know nothing, except that I serve Elgar Radway."

"But I should like to know more," said Bettington. "To the best of my knowledge I have never seen you before. How is it you know me? They call you the 'Boss.' What does Radway call you?"

"I am William Clements to him," said the other. "I am William Clements to you. There is a stone over what the world thinks is my body, in a prison graveyard. I have expiated in the world's eyes all my faults." He leaned forward and his thin hands clenched again. "And yet, Andrew Orme, I shall make such a name for myself, that it will eclipse what the world knew of me ere it thought I died."

"Mad," thought Bettington. "Crazed with the delusion of power." Aloud he remarked: "I see you don't wish to tell me anything. Very well; I am not curious."

"You will find Hallett, the captain, a disagreeable and suspicious man. He resents my presence. Remember, that you came aboard just before we sailed. He will be annoyed that you did not report to him. In your stateroom you will find all the clothes you need. If you take my advice you will turn in now."

The advice was in the nature of a command; but as it suited his own convenience to get rid of Gibbs' clothes he bowed to it.

Bettington was glad to be in his new quarters. He could not sleep for a long time. By what blundering ways he was to save Unwin's children from harm he did not know. There must be, at least, a dozen men aboard, all under the domination of the Boss. The ship could no doubt be worked easily enough with Hallett, his nephew and Bob Unwin out of the way. Assuredly his defiance of the Boss would aid none of them. There was a helplessness about the situation comparable with nothing on land.

CHAPTER V

A Millionaire's Holiday

Bettington was awakened in the morning by a small boy who was the bearer of coffee and rolls. He announced that breakfast would be served in the main saloon within the hour.

"This is all I need," said Bettington. "What's your name?"

"They call me 'Slivers,'" said the boy, "but my real name is Augustus."

When he had dressed and shaved Bettington experienced the satisfaction of a fastidious man in finding himself once more in clean apparel.

On the quarter deck he found the Boss, who smiled the even, ungraduated smile of the night before. Today he was in a neat blue and gold uniform.

"I had better introduce you," he said, "to Hallett and then to the rest. It is most important that the women trust you. Hallett has already infected them with some distrust of me."

He led the way to the upper deck, which was also the boat deck and that on which the wireless room was. Hallett was a square built man and a capable sailor. He was embittered at having no higher command than this pleasure craft when his former companions were masters of ocean-going liners. He was perpetually in a state of annoyance at the curious position occupied by Clements the steward. Actually Radway, on whose favor he was dependent, had decided in several instances that Clements must be obeyed. It was bitter to a man who had decided ideas on the importance of his office.

"Well?" he snapped, turning to the steward. "What is it?"

"This is Doctor Waite, Captain," he answered.

Hallett from the beginning set himself to be hostile.

"When did you come aboard?"

Bettington said what he had been told. Hallett spoke bitterly about shipboard etiquette and modern ways. Then he turned abruptly away as his nephew came up. This was a pleasant-faced man of three-and-twenty, who obviously shared his uncle's opinion of Clements. The boy seemed excited and worried.

"What do you think of the skipper?" Clements asked.

"A hard man to handle," Bettington returned, "as all obstinate men are."

"He's of no importance," Clements said idly. "Did you notice how 'Sparks' seemed to be upset? Something has happened to his wireless. He finds he can't adjust it and has to call in the electrician, who is one of my men, to help him. I shall let it work for a few days."

Again that calm assumption of absolute power from the little, slender man in his absurd livery.

"When I decide that no messages may be sent or received, Graumann will get busy. Look, that's Radway."

Radway had come on deck to walk himself into a condition which would permit him to enjoy an unnecessary luncheon.

"Cocktails," he commanded, as he caught sight of Clements. He stopped short when he saw the stranger. "Who's this?"

"Doctor Waite," Clements answered. "You wired me to ship a physician aboard."

"I remember now," Radway answered. "Why haven't I seen you before this?"

His manner was abrupt and hard. He looked doubtfully at this tall, self-possessed man who returned his glare tranquilly.

"The doctor doesn't like to confess to being a bit seasick," Clements answered readily.

"Then a cocktail will do him good," Radway decided. "Bring four. You know my kind; just a dash of absinthe in them."

When Clements had gone—and there seemed something strangely out of place in sending such a man on such an errand—Radway turned to Bettington.

"I eat too much and I drink too much and my arteries are made up of calcium, they tell me. Like the rest of them, you will preach temperance. You are not here for that. You are here to patch me up if the need occurs."

"Patching won't help you much," Bettington remarked.

"If you're not up to the job, I'll tell Clements to ship some one who is."

Abruptly Radway turned on his heel. He did not in the least mind if he had left his physician angry. The anger of fools—and a poor man was a fool, in his opinion—had no weight. The sea air was beginning to make him hungry. This would mean a rich luncheon served as that artist, the fat chef, alone knew how. A feeling of well-being pervaded him at the sight of the cocktails. He told Clements to pass one to the doctor.

"We can't wait for the ladies," said Radway, and threw his drink down with a single movement. "I wish I could sip like you," he said to Bettington. "When I want a thing I want all of it, instantly. As the ladies don't seem to be coming up, why let their cocktails go to waste?"

Truth or Heroics About Story of Joan of Arc?

Although investigators have fairly well proven that Joan of Arc was never burned at the stake, but was told to take off her male attire, go home and never fight again, there are many people who want the world to stick to her story because it is heroic and inspirational, declares the Woman's Home Companion. The magazine adds, editorially, that it is far better to accept the findings of thorough research.

According to the article, investigators found records of Joan's visit to Metz in 1436, five years after her death was believed to have taken place, and subsequent papers recording her marriage and a costly gift to her by the city of Orleans in memory of the good she had done during the siege of the city. This was eight years after Joan's ashes were supposed to have been scattered in the Seine.

"For our part," concludes the article, "we prefer to know the truth even when it hurts. In the long run, there is nothing so inspiring as true knowledge."

Facts About Sponges

Sponges are very irregular in form, symmetrical ones being rare, and their color is as variable as their shape. Deep-sea sponges, like other animals that live in the dark, are generally light in color; but those that live in shallow water are very bright, and the color assumed by the sponge is generally for purposes of defense, or to frighten away other animals. Sponges are very abundant in the Australian seas; especially is this the case with the horny or highest form of sponges.

Get in First and Last Word

The female of the species actually gets in the first and the last word. According to the magazine Good Health girls learn to talk six weeks sooner than boys, while recent studies in Illinois show that women live longer than men. Of the 46 centenarians who died there last year, 36 were women. Above 80 the female deaths were more numerous than the male, below 80 less numerous, showing that more women pass eighty than men.

Tin Cans Salvaged

Salvaging millions of tin cans around Western mining camps has been found a profitable business. The process recovers both the tin and the steel, an average of three tons of tin being recovered weekly and molded into ingots to be used for making new cans.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

The KITCHEN CABINET

(©, 1926, Western Newspaper Union.)

"Anyone who can assemble, prepare and cook an appetizing, wholesome meal should feel that it is an achievement. A well balanced meal takes information, knowledge, training and application."

DINNER DISHES

These recipes have been gathered from various sources; some will like to try them as they are not common:

Salmon With Sauce Piquant.—Take three-quarter inch slices of salmon, place in a saucepan with hot fish broth, adding a touch of fruit juice or vinegar. Simmer fifteen minutes. Remove from the broth, wipe dry, place on a hot platter and serve with the sauce prepared as follows: Melt a quantity of butter, flavor to taste with tarragon vinegar, pepper, mustard, fennel and any spices liked. Stir over the heat until cooked, move to the back of the range and add the yolk of an egg to thicken. Serve at once.

Fillets of Mutton.—Lay small fillets of mutton in melted butter seasoned with chervil and salt. Leave for an hour or more and just before serving time grill them, basting with melted butter. Serve with a little lemon juice and fried potatoes.

Bisque of Herbs.—Chop together a handful of lettuce, sorrel, spinach, a small onion, a little celery and chervil and cook with two tablespoonfuls of butter until soft, stirring constantly. Add three tablespoonfuls of flour with four cupfuls of cauliflower water; add a beaten egg and serve with croutons.

Fresh Perch.—Prepare six fresh perch and marinate them in two tablespoonfuls of olive oil, a sprig of parsley, a little pepper and salt, allspice, bayleaf and other spices. Keep the fish in the marinade for an hour. Remove, roll in crumbs which have been seasoned with spices and cook until a golden brown. Serve with a butter sauce.

Stuffed Egg Plant.—Cut egg plant into halves lengthwise, remove the inside and make of this a stuffing by chopping fine and adding chopped parsley and onions. Stuff the egg plant with the mixture and place in a casserole with plenty of melted butter. Simmer over a slow fire until all is well cooked. Cover the top with bread crumbs, add a little melted butter and keep hot until served.

Panama Salad.—Place a slice of pineapple on a bed of lettuce. Lay sections of orange on pineapple slice to form a cone. Garnish with a cherry cut into points. Add a bit of green pepper for cherry stems or chop it and sprinkle over the orange.

MEAT AND FISH SANDWICH

The first ancestor of the sandwich family was a meat sandwich. They are substantial things, often meant to take the place of a full meal or the main part of a meal.

The meat sandwich is often a dainty affair, but its meant to satisfy hearty appetites and is filling and practical. Ham as the meat for sandwich filling would no doubt receive the most votes, so we'll serve a few as follows:

Ham Sandwich.—Mix one cupful of chopped ham, one sweet red pepper chopped, one tablespoonful of olive oil and one-half teaspoonful of made mustard. Spread on buttered bread.

Tastes differ as to the amount of fat used—many prefer to remove the fat. The ham when used in slices should not be too thin; spread with salad dressing and thin slices of sour pickle, or lettuce may be used between the bread. Also some prefer the pickles served separately.

Ham With Chowchow Sandwich.—Mince sufficient boiled ham to make a solid cupful and enough chowchow and mustard pickle to make one-fourth of a cupful. Mix enough of the liquid mustard from the bottle to soften to the spreading consistency. Use on buttered rye or whole wheat bread.

Ham Sandwich Delicate.—Lay thin slices of cold boiled ham on buttered bread and sprinkle with powdered sugar and ground cloves. This has a flavor like the edge of baked ham.

Ham and Egg Sandwich.—Chop equal parts of boiled ham, hard cooked eggs and cucumber pickle, mix with salad dressing and add salt. Spread on buttered slices of any kind of bread.

Ham and Currant Sandwich.—Mince very fine enough cold boiled ham to make a cupful. Mix with it one-half cupful of currant jelly and a saltspoonful of paprika. Work to a paste, adding a tablespoonful of chopped capers and spread on thin strips of whole wheat bread.

Ham Loaf for Sandwiches.—Take two cupfuls of cooked ham, one-half cupful of bread crumbs, one small onion chopped, two canned pimentos, a tablespoonful of chopped green pepper and one-half cupful of tomato soup. Add enough water to moisten. Bake in a loaf. Slice when cold and use as filling with lettuce.

Alice in the Subway

By JANE OSBORN

(Copyright.)

HE WAS the kind of man who seemed to be holding a perpetual competition for the "prettiest girl" or "the most beautiful girl." In this competition he was sole judge and the contestants were girls he chanced to meet or to see anywhere. It seemed to be a game that interested him immensely and that made even a ride in a crowded subway car something of an adventure.

Thus he was engaged one afternoon when the offices of the business section had just poured forth their girls on their way homeward. This time the laurels were awarded without delay. The girl who stood opposite him in the vestibule of the subway car was so fresh of face, so gracefully proportioned, so brown of eye and golden of hair that she won with flying colors. In fact, she was perhaps the prettiest girl he—

Then the surprising thing happened. The pretty girl quietly stepped over to him.

"You're John Laurence, aren't you?" she said.

It was surprising because he wasn't John Laurence.

"You bet I am, John Laurence's my name all right."

"You don't remember me?" she asked, with disappointment.

"I remember your face—couldn't forget that," he assured. "But the name has slipped me."

"Alice," she reminded. "I used to sit in front of you in school. You used to walk home after school, too, and carry my books."

"So I did, so I did. You look just the same. Let's see, how many years ago was that?"

"Ten, wasn't it?" she figured. "We were fifteen then and we're twenty-five now."

Enormous satisfaction swept over the man. He was thirty-two.

"I guess I look a whole lot older than you," he flushed.

"Well, maybe, but then I suppose you have worked pretty hard. I heard you had graduated from Harvard and had gone in business," she said.

"And I'd really like to see you again and talk over school days." She put her hand out. "Come and see me some time. I live exactly where I did ten years ago. I am getting out here tonight to see a friend."

And there the man stood glued to the side of the car. When he came to his senses and tried to follow, the subway door promptly slammed in his face.

Jim Kelly took time the next day to drop in at the Harvard club in town and find from there something of one John Laurence. He found that he operated a factory, some sixty miles out of the city. The next day was Saturday and Jim took a two o'clock train.

He found John Laurence, and was not flattered at having to consider himself his double. To be sure they were of the same build and coloring. Their features were similar, though John Laurence looked his junior by ten years.

"I've come on a rather curious errand," he began in a grandiose manner. "You see, I happened to meet a little girl—a chance meeting, but we got rather well acquainted. She gave me her address written on a card and somehow I lost it. Now I didn't want to disappoint her. Being a man of resources I tried to work on what clews I had. She spoke of having gone to school with a John Laurence—said that she thought we might be cousins because of some slight family resemblance.

"So I happened to be out here today and thought I'd drop around and get you to give me her address. I can't remember her last name, but her first name is Alice. She said she lived exactly where she did when she knew you. She said she hadn't thought of you once for ten years until something in my face reminded her distinctly of you."

Something in the last remark brought the color rising to John Laurence's face.

"I thought you'd give me the address. I have other ways of getting it, but—"

"You'll have to use your other sources, then," said John Laurence. "And I wish you good afternoon."

Jim Kelly did not feel entirely thwarted by this rebuff, and two weeks later when he chanced to see the charming Alice in the subway one evening he felt that the had been peculiarly blessed.

"This time I'm going to get your address, little lady," he said.

Then he noticed the circle of diamonds on her left hand. Perhaps she had drawn her glove off on purpose.

"Does that ring mean anything?" asked Jim awkwardly.

"It has the most wonderful meaning in the world. You know the time I saw you first I thought you were John Laurence, and I guess I didn't give you a chance to say you weren't. A few days later the real John Laurence came to see me. He was a very good friend of mine and now, now we're engaged. Don't you think that was a wonderful coincidence?"

"Oh, I don't see anything very remarkable about that," said Jim Kelly. The subway train had stopped and he suddenly decided it was time for him to get off. "Who'd have thought," he said to himself with a smile, "that old Jim Kelly would play cupid in spite of himself!"

CHINA IN STATE OF MAKE-BELIEVE

C. P. O. Box No. 1234,
Sanghai China,
Jan. 30, 1930.

Dear Editor:

Here comes a letter from this land of "make-believe." This is Chinese New Year, but the government would make believe it is abolished and forbids its celebration. But it IS Chinese New Year. Fire crackers boom as of old. People in their best "go-to-meet-in's" greet their friends with "Kong-hsi fah-dzai" — "Congratulations and abounding wealth."

Stores are closed. Nanking's order is ignored. You can't change 1000-year old customs of 450 million people in a night. But this is not the only make-believe. Nanking makes believe China is unified. It "ain't." China is split into smithereens. Chang Fa-kwei in Kwangsi is fighting Nanking. Yen Hsi-san has Shansi and Chihli and rules well. Chang Hsueh-liang lords it over Manchuria. Tang Seng-chi keeps a hornet's nest buzzing in Honan. Vong Yoh-dziang sways Shensi. Szechuen goes its own way, and other rebels keep the Capitol on "pins and needles." Yet Nanking has repeatedly reported each of these discordant ones overcome or won over. But it is only make-believe to hood-wink the world.

Chiang Kai-shek is the "conqueror of the North and the Unifier of China." But what he seems to have done was done mostly with Russian brains and capital until he took Nanking. After that the rest was won by squeezing money from people in the rear of the "fighting lines" and buying enemy commanders in front. There was hardly one worth-the-name battle fought. It was mostly victory by purchase and buying of victory takes the gloss off the glory.

If Nanking had the money now she could purchase all her present enemies. But what's the use? Soon there would be swarms of other enemies. It's profitable to be an enemy of Nanking! China had to humble herself before Russia for Russian officers could not be bought. But in China the "itching palm" is conspicuous. Remember this and you can understand much about the wars in this "squeezer-greaser" land.

China is getting worse and worse. Property-rights are gone. Life is unsafe. Business is paralyzed. Freedom of the press and speech has vanished. Loyalty and obedience are not. Liberty is dead. Bandits abound. But Nanking makes-believe all is "as fine as pie" and issues pious reports. Among officials there are doubtless sincere ones who would put things right but the make-believes predominate and block every move for good. But don't judge harshly. Most officials are sons of the laboring class and of the newly-rich. They are young and inexperienced. They pay great attention to trivial things and neglect great things. If in our Washington it's said, "He that is without GIN among you let him first cast a stone," can we condemn heathen China? We hope that some day China striplings will tire of "playing house" and will get down to horse sense.

But I'm getting away from the New Year. Gambling is everywhere. Superstition is rife. Money is wasted that might relieve famine suffering. Every temple is crowded with people offering incense, candles, paper-money and prayers to all the gods. They pray most for wealth. That prayer is not make-believe. They want wealth, and they worship the god-of-wealth with all their hearts. Every home as one made of wood, mud, or of paper but he is "Dzai-zen" all the same. When business gets poor in China they say the god-of-wealth as gone to America. The paper Dzai-zen is interesting. The god's throne is a big ingot of gold set with jewels. Mountains of gold are at the god's left and Silver Hill is at his right. In front of him is a great bowl of jewels. On Silver Hill is the money tree a shake of which will shower you untold wealth. Over Dzai-zen's head is "Foh"—blessedness. All around are his servants ready to carry wealth to those whom the god favors. This god is very amendable to flattery and he who flatters best gets most. But he too is make-believe.

May the true God-of-wealth prosper you and friends in all good.

Yours longingly for sincere and prosperous China,

(Rev.) H. G. C. Hallock.

DEKALB MAKES GOOD AUTO SHOWING

There were 4,418 automobile licenses issued in DeKalb county between January 1 and March 1, 1930.

Otto G. Fifield, Secretary of State, has made a comparative showing of licenses issued this year with that of former years, and the showing is most gratifying. There were an increased number of licenses issued during the months of January and February, indicating rather a healthy and prosperous condition throughout the country. Since March 1st a large number of licenses have been issued on new cars and DeKalb county makes a very favorable showing with other counties in the state.

It is amazing to know of the large number of new cars that are being sold. It is not so strange when it is known that there were about 35,000 cars junked in Indiana last year and about 5,000 taken out of the state and junked during the same time. Mr. Fifield says that with the increased building of good roads and continued prosperity, a million automobile licenses will be issued annually in Indiana within a few years.

ABOUT THE CHICKS

IT HAD been several weeks that Mother Hen had been waiting patiently for the little chicks to hatch. It had seemed a long wait, but Mother Hen was patient. At last they began to come forth.

Their little heads came first and they broke away from their shells.

Some might have thought they did it very quickly, but Mother Hen thought they were a trifle slow. She was so eager to see her darlings.

In no time at all they were able to run about and play and follow their dear, devoted Mother Hen about the barnyard.

They were so soft with their downy yellow feathers and their little bodies were so cunning and their little voices so sweet.

Mother Hen Had Every Reason to Be Proud.

There were twelve little chicks in all, twelve darling little babies, and Mother Hen was very proud, as well she might have been.

She had every reason to be proud.

How the little chicks did look to her for help and protection though they were learning to help themselves, too.

But Mother hen was the one who cared for them.

She scratched the earth for seeds, she looked for little goodies for her darling wee yellow chicks.

"Peep, peep, peep," said the first little yellow chick, "Mother Hen is looking after me."

"Peep, peep, peep," said the second little yellow chick, "Mother Hen is looking after me."

"Peep, peep, peep," said the third little yellow chick, "Mother Hen is looking after me."

"Peep, peep, peep," said the fourth little yellow chick, "Mother Hen is looking after me."

"Peep, peep, peep," said the fifth little yellow chick, "Mother Hen is looking after me."

"Peep, peep, peep," said the sixth little yellow chick, "Mother Hen is looking after me."

"Peep, peep, peep," said the seventh little yellow chick, "Mother Hen is looking after me."

"Peep, peep, peep," said the eighth little yellow chick, "Mother Hen is looking after me."

Peep, peep, peep," said the ninth little yellow chick, "Mother Hen is looking after me."

"Peep, peep, peep," said the tenth little yellow chick, "Mother Hen is looking after me."

"Peep, peep, peep," said the eleventh little yellow chick, "Mother Hen is looking after me."

"Peep, peep, peep," said the Twelfth little yellow chick, "Mother Hen is looking after me."

"Cluck, cluck," said Mother Hen. "I'm looking after all of you, my little dears. Don't run away from me. Stay near mother's wings. Don't be careless.

"Be careful not to get out in the road. You're all very young yet."

"Isn't the barnyard fun, peep, peep," said the first little chick.

"Oh, the world is very bright," said the second little yellow chick, with his head on one side in such a way as to make him look like a very wise little chick. "Peep, peep, it is."

"I was delighted when I saw the sunshine," said the third little yellow chick. "Peep, peep."

"Peep, peep, I was so pleased when I burst my shell," said the fourth little yellow chick.

"Peep, peep, I thought the ground would be fun to run over," said the fifth little yellow chick.

"Peep, peep, I was pleased at the looks of everything," said the sixth little yellow chick.

"Peep, peep, so was I," said the seventh little yellow chick.

"Peep, peep, the same here," said the eighth little yellow chick.

"Peep, peep, I was too," said the ninth little yellow chick.

"Peep, peep, I just wanted to be out right away," said the tenth little yellow chick.

"Peep, peep, so did I," said the eleventh little yellow chick.

"Peep, peep, and I did too, even if there was a bit of shell sticking to my back for quite a little while afterwards," said the twelfth little yellow chick.

And Mother Hen chuckled and said: "How happy my little chicks are!"

NOAH GERIG, EXPERT FARMER IS DEAD

Noah Gerig, a large landowner, expert on grain raising and the holder of more than five hundred ribbons, besides gold, silver and bronze medals for grains exhibited at county and state fairs, died Thursday afternoon at 1:05 o'clock at his home just south of Maurer's Church, west of Spencerville.

Mr. Gerig died as the result of a cicoma cancer under the left ear in the glands of his neck. He had been bedfast since January 5th. Mr. Gerig was fifty-six years of age.

The deceased was one of the most widely known farmers in Jackson township. His fine farm was visited by hundreds of people each year who were interested in learning from Mr. Gerig his method of grain growing, especially corn.

Mr. Gerig was born in Allen county but moved to DeKalb county about thirty years ago.

He is survived by his widow, in a serious condition with anaemia, and six children, Forest Gerig, of Auburn, Joseph Gerig, of near Huntertown, Mrs. W. E. Hartung, of Huntertown, Mrs. Fred Kruse and Vergil and Leona at home.

There also survive two brothers Eli Gerig, of Fort Wayne and D. M. Gerig, of Wauseon, Ohio, and seven grandchildren.

The funeral services were held Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock from Hopewell Church, Rev. Williams, of Anderson, officiating and burial was made in Woodlawn Cemetery, Auburn.

YOUNG BANDITS ARE SOON CAPTURED

Three young bandits, who held up Russell Smith, attendant at the Standard Oil station at Main and Twelfth streets in Auburn Sunday night at the point of revolvers and who were captured an hour later at Bryan, Ohio, were arraigned in the DeKalb circuit court Monday and each was given a sentence of 10 days. They were taken to the reformatory Tuesday.

The bandits gave their names as Henry Vrierlynck, 22, Louis Vrierlynck, 20, brothers, and August Beruyneel, 25. The home of the two brothers is at Mishawaka and they are single. Beruyneel is married and lived with a wife at Elkhart. The brothers are Belgians, while Beruyneel claims to be American born.

Driving a Hupmobile sedan, the three men drove into the filling station with the youngest of the trio at the steering wheel. Henry Vrierlynck and Beruyneel left the car and ordered gasoline and oil. After Smith had filled their order he was approached by the two men, who threatened him with guns while they ordered him to give them all the money in his possession. He complied. Then they forced him to unlock the safe and give them the contents. The total amount of the loot was $119.53.

The men shoved Smith into the toilet room and the car sped away. Smith at once spread the alarm and within a few minutes Sheriff John C. Armstrong, Chief of Police Charles Davis and other officers were on the trail. While Smith was filling the gasoline tank he had taken a mental note of the last three numbers of the license plate of the car.

The sheriff had notified the officers in all the towns in this section and the sheriff at Bryan, with a deputy, drove west of Bryan, headed his car eastward and watched passing cars. The car carrying the bandits soon made its appearance, being driven at high speed. The Ohio sheriff gave chase. When the outlaws discovered they were being pursued they threw out their guns and the money changer they had taken from Smith. The sheriff's car ran ahead of the bandits and forced them to stop. The sheriff met with no resistance, but the bandits claimed they were not the guilty men.

The Ohio sheriff telephoned to Auburn and Sheriff Armstrong and Chief Davis went to Bryan at once. Two of the guns and the money changer were found along the highway. The stolen money was found in the bandits' car. Most of it was in the door pockets of the car, but some was scattered on the floor and the seats. The amount recovered was $99, the remainder having apparently been lost or thrown away. The bandits finally confessed and returned to Auburn without extradition papers. The third revolver was found beside the highway Monday morning.

All three pleaded guilty Monday morning when arraigned before Judge Endicott in the circuit court. They said they had been running liquor. They said they left Mishawake Saturday night and intended going to Detroit after liquor, but they had no money. Beruyneel said they were desperate and he suggested "pulling a job" to get some money. They drove around Auburn to see which gasoline station to rob. They finally decided upon the Standard Oil station. Beruyneel claims to be a butcher by trade and his companions are shoemakers.

NEW MACHINERY BEING INSTALLED

The Nathan Grain Co., in order to be able to again meet the demands of their customers in feeds, is installing a 50-horse power Hammermill Feed Grinder within the next few days.

A matter of every day service is one of the demands of the farmer trade in the feed grinding industry. Mr. Nathan is at all times ready to invest, in order that his lumber, coal and grain departments are able to meet the reasonable demands of this community, and he is to be commended upon the community spirit displayed at all times.

The trial of Albert Snyder, charged with bribery, has been set for Tuesday, May 13. Snyder entered a plea of not guilty, recently.

Mrs. Alice Gee has been on the sick list but is now able to be up a part of the time. With the daughter sick, Foster had to come home and take care of his family.

The eighty-first birthday of Mrs. Martha Miser, of Waterloo, was celebrated last Thursday with a birthday dinner, and all her children and families were home for the occasion.

OBITUARY

Martha Rosetta Sechler, youngest child of Levi and Mary Barbara Kistler Sechler, was born September 17, 1862. She was united in marriage to Byron E. Widney January 27, 1883. To this union was born one daughter, Mrs. Edith Cole.

When but a child she received catechetical training in the German Reform Lutheran Church and became a member of that church.

When, in 1885 the Methodist Protestant Church was organized in St. Joe, she with her husband joined that church. She remained a consistant and faithful member until her death, April 15, 1930, her age being 67 years, 6 months and 28 days.

She took part in the activities of the church as long as her health permitted, teaching a class in the Sabbath School, singing in the choir and taking an active part in the Missionary and Aid Societies of the church.

In keeping up the church activities she never forgot the needs of the home, a place ever open to those to whom she could give aid, parental care and affection, as can be attested to by the boys who bear her body today.

She leaves to mourn their loss a husband and daughter, one sister, Susan Sechler, one brother, Henry Sechler of Butler, Indiana. The father and mother and nine brothers and sisters having preceded her in death.

The funeral services were conducted from the M. P. Church on Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock, with her pastor, Rev. B. W. Mayfield, officiating, assisted by Rev. G. D. Stoll, pastor of the Lutheran Church. Interment was made in Riverside Cemetery. E. R. Kinsey, funeral director.

The Price of Service

The modern funeral director has responded to the present-day demand for better service by assuming many new duties and responsibilities. He lifts many burdens from the shoulders of the bereaved family.

To do this requires thorough technical training, up-to-date equipment and the same ability and integrity that is expected of other professional and business. And it is unfair to compare the cost of such service with prices which obtained in the old days when the undertaker furnished nothing but the casket.

Whether the cost of this service is included in the price of the casket or quoted as a separate service charge, it represents genuine value in keeping with modern ideals and standards of living.

Bizarre Domes and Pinnacles of St. Basil's Cathedral Tower, Above the Red Square, Moscow.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

RED SQUARE, Moscow, is the very heart and symbol of Russia today.

Lenin's temporary wooden mausoleum, a squat cube on the north side of the square, dwarfed by the towering wall behind, is a world shrine of Communism. Sentries stand guard and a double line of visitors waits to enter for a glimpse of the leader whose teachings still live. His body lies under glass. The dozen domes in spirals, facets and diamonds of yellow, blue, and green, shaped like inverted turnips, of St. Basil's cathedral, glisten in the sun.

Legend says that after Ivan IV, better known as the Terrible, started this barbaric gem, he had the Italian architect blinded so that it never could be duplicated. However, the first architects were Russian, though they did not survive the necessary 125 years to see the completion of their dream. The cathedral in which Napoleon stabled his horses is now a museum, and anybody, for ten cents, can lose himself in its eleven dark, little chapels and maze of narrow, winding tunnels.

Through the centuries those bulbous, gaudy domes have looked down on the Red square, watching Russian history, just as they still rise serene as the square echoes to the tramp of Red army and Soviet workers and the blare of electric amplifiers as party orators hold forth on the platform of Lenin's tomb.

From the stone rostrum in front of the cathedral the ukases of the czars were read. Before its doors Peter the Great executed several hundred of the Streltsi, the old Muscovite militia. Here czars were proclaimed and pretenders were killed. Across that square each proud emperor led the patriarch of the church on a donkey into the Kremlin, through the Spasskiya (Redeemer) gate, which no man entered from 1647 to 1917 without baring his head.

Now Soviet Headquarters.

When the Ts. I. K., the "parliamentary committee" of Soviet Russia, holds its annual meetings, the various types that make up its membership meet inside the Kremlin in the Great palace. Most of the members cross Red square and enter Nikolskiya gate, taking the shortest path to the meeting place.

Two narrow sidewalks separate inside the Nikolskiya gate. One goes straight ahead along a low terrace outside the arsenal, on which are piled in pyramids the 875 cannons, French, Austrian, Prussian, Italian, captured when Napoleon wrote his epilogue in Moscow, in 1812. The other branches off the left, on the opposite side of an open court, past the big white building, once the Palace of Justice and now the headquarters of the Ts. I. K., the seat of government.

It is a long walk, leading past ancient churches and palaces. The stacks of old muzzle-loading French cannon extend for a block, and then come the barracks, with a fringe of cannon of the museum vintage.

Historic Bell.

Where the sidewalk skirts a corner of the old palace and comes out above the high wall overlooking the river, stands the great Czar bell. Why it happens to be put there, hiding behind the corner, history does not explain. It has been there for 90 years, and probably will remain for several more. Czarina Ann had it cast in 1735, and 101 years passed before it got out of the foundry which burned around it.

A 200-ton bell, 60 feet in circumference, and 20 feet high, is not to be handled lightly. It has been raised on a stone foundation as high as a man's shoulders, and the broken-out chunk sits on the ground in front as if waiting for somebody to lift it back into place.

The plain white sandstone front of the Great palace is chipped and stained. Soldiers off duty, some with their wives or sweethearts and children, loaf along the sidewalk on top of the wall or sit on the window sills of the palace.

Two at the door ask each person who steps up to show a ticket, passing him with the familiar Paxhalusta (please), a polite way of saying "Go ahead" in Russian.

Inside, the narrow entrance is finished in coffee-colored marble, and is neither as large nor as impressive as many hotels or railroad stations in the United States. When the delegates are meeting, a wooden stall covered with red bunting is on one side. From it supplies are distributed to each member, several volumes of bulky reports, a lead pencil, and pad of paper, not as generous as the "boodle bags" of American legislatures, which in years gone by, contained everything from a hairbrush and fountain pen to an annual railroad pass.

Royal Pathway.

The main stairway which guests of royalty once eagerly mounted is narrow as palace steps go and has the same plain marble balustrade. It is covered with a red carpet, probably the one which the last Nicholas trod.

At the top a narrow passageway on the right goes nowhere, and a broader one on the left leads into the former throne room, where the sessions are held. On the wall of the narrow passageway hangs Yvon's immense oil painting of the Battle of Kulikovo between the Russians and Tatars.

Imposing Chamber.

To the right of the small reception room is the lofty St. George room, largest in the palace, 200 by 70 feet and 60 feet high, a vast room without a column to break its expanse of white marble. A regiment could stand in that room and airplanes fly overhead.

When the Ts. I. K. meets, St. George room is the stenographers' workroom. Half of it fenced off, with the Russian for "No Admittance" on the gate. Down one side are long wooden tables on sawhorse legs, where bobbed-haired secretaries write and smoke. On the other side are separate tables for members' conferences. Smaller tables are in the window seats in the open half of the hall. Those wearied with the session can loaf, smoke, drink tea, or play chess.

Down a few steps from this room toward the old wing of the palace is the St. Vladimir room and the Red staircase, the latter once used only by royalties.

St. Andrew's hall, a long, narrow, vaulted, overdecorated room, 160 by 70 feet and 60 feet high, is the legislative seat of the Soviet government. Once it was the throne room, where the czars of all the Russias, after Peter the Great moved the capital to St. Petersburg, came for their second coronation, carrying out the tradition that a Muscovite ruler must be crowned in Moscow. In those days a throne stood in the farther end of the hall.

For the first few sessions of the Ts. I. K., a curtain was dropped in front of the throne. Later special furniture in dark, stained wood was installed and a solid partition was erected to the lofty ceiling in front of the throne. In its center, the Soviet seal of sickle and hammer in red and gold face the members.

Various Types of Russians.

Where once stood princes and ambassadors the many types of Russians now sit. There are peasants and workmen in belted smocks, others in white collars, high boots, and low shoes; conventional-appearing professional men; Mohammedans wearing black astrakhan fezzes; Mongols in flowing coats and fur caps with plush crowns; Caucasians with little embroidered skull caps; women, bareheaded, and with kerchiefs tightly wrapped around their heads.

Lesson for April 27

GIVING UP ALL FOR THE KINGDOM

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 19:16-30.

GOLDEN TEXT—Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Giving Jesus First Place.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Giving Jesus First Place.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How Shall We Use Our Money?

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Stewardship of Possessions.

The lesson title is likely to be misunderstood and the teaching misapplied. Christ did not directly, nor by implication teach that eternal life could be obtained by parting with possessions.

I. A Certain Young Man (v. 16).

For a full view of the characteristics of this man, see Mark 10:17-30 and Luke 18:18-30.

1. His virtues.

(1) Courageous (Mark 10:7). He was of high standing—a rich young ruler (Luke 18:18, 23). To come to Jesus at this time might mean ostracism, but with manly courage he came. (2) Earnest (Mark 10:17). He knelt before Jesus, thus showing earnestness and sincerity. (3) High aspirations (v. 16). He wanted eternal life. Though taken up with the things of his present life, he felt the need of preparing for a life beyond. (4) Pious and moral (v. 20). From his youth he had conformed to God's moral law. (5) He believed that Christ could inform him of the "good thing" to be done to inherit eternal life.

2. His errors.

(1) About Christ (v. 16). He esteemed Jesus to be good, but did not apprehend Him as God; otherwise he would have known Him not merely as one who did good, but as one who is essentially good; that is, God. (2) Concerning himself. He thought he was good and that he could do something good. (3) Concerning eternal life. He thought that it could be obtained by good works. He did not know that the only way to gain eternal life was to receive it as a gift from God (Rom. 6:23).

II. The Lord's Dealing With Him (vv. 17-22).

Jesus skillfully led the young man to see his errors.

1. His question—"Why callest thou me good?" (v. 17).

Before giving him a chance to answer He declared that only God was good, as if to say, "I am good, and therefore God." He was God manifest in the flesh, and repudiated the thought of being known merely as a good man.

2. Jesus' answer to the young man's question (vv. 17-20).

"If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments." Christ met him here on his own ground, namely, that of the law. He took the young man's level that the young man's real worth might be revealed (Rom. 3:19, 20).

3. Christ's command (vv. 21, 22).

Replying to Christ's citation of the commandments of the law, the young man asserted that he had kept them from his youth. Yet in his inner conscience he knew that there was something lacking. When he had to make the supreme decision between Jesus and his possessions, he chose wealth.

III. The Relationship of the Rich to the Kingdom (vv. 23-26).

This teaching concerning the peril of riches was most timely. Covetousness was fast taking hold of the people.

1. It is difficult for the rich to enter into the kingdom (vv. 23, 24). This difficulty lies not in the possession of riches, for a man may possess great riches and be an heir of the kingdom. Money in itself is essentially good. It will help the poor and help bring the gospel to the lost. The difficulty lies in trusting in riches.

2. Entrance into the kingdom, though difficult, is possible (vv. 25, 26).

(1) It is possible for the grace of God to sanctify riches, to open a man's eyes that he may see his downward course and repent, to change a man from self-seeking to self-sacrificing.

IV. Rewards for Following Christ (vv. 27-30).

Those who turn their backs upon their kindred and possessions for the sake of Christ shall receive an hundredfold in this life, and eternal life in the world to come.

Obedience

Obedience is the secret. Not slavish obedience, but sympathetic, loving eager obedience. "His delight is in the law of the Lord." May the law of holiness be to me welcome as the light, sweet as the flowers, more to be desired than much fine gold.—W. L. Watkinson.

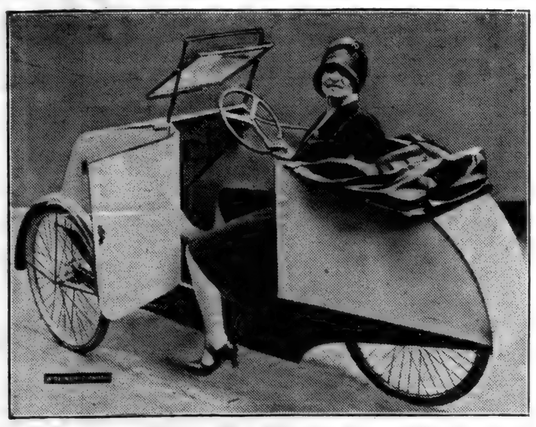
In Company With Jesus

Get into sympathy with Jesus. Seek His presence, seek His help. And walking through the world in His company, you will be as balm in the bleakest weather, a benediction in the wildest scene.—James Hamilton.

The Duty of Friendship

The only duty of friendship is that we and our friends should live at our highest and best when together. Having achieved that, we have fulfilled the law.—Randolph Bourne.

MIDGET OF ROAD IS MADE COLLAPSIBLE



A woman rider starting out in a portable collapsible cycle car with a three-speed gear and a front brake, a recent innovation in London, the popularity of which is increased by the fact that it is taxless.

LOUIS MEYER TO HAVE SWIFT CAR

Machine Will Have Rear-Wheel Drive and Be Driven by Spur Gear.

There has been a good deal of gossip concerning the car Louis Meyer will drive in the 1930 Indianapolis 500-mile race, but the actual facts were not disclosed until a few days ago when Alden Sampson, head of the Sampson-Meyer-Brett racing combination came into Indianapolis to arrange for quarters where the car will be built.

The car will be named the Sampson Special. Its 16-cylinder motor will be made up of two banks of eight cylinders. The car, a rear-wheel drive, will be driven by a spur gear off the rear end of a separate crankshaft for each of the banks. The cylinders will be of 2 5/16 bore by 3-inch stroke and the motor will have displacement of 201 cubic inches.

Conforms to Specifications.

Otherwise the car will conform to all the specifications of the Indianapolis Motor Speedway corporation for the 1930 race, which will start this year at 10 o'clock a. m. on May 30, as usual.

"The three of us worked for weeks on the design and the motor blocks have already been made and machine work on them is about finished," Sampson said. "Riley Brett is coming on from the coast and from then on we will go at top speed to finish the car."

Asked who would be the riding mechanic with Meyer, Sampson said he did not know. There will be a thousand requests pour into the workshop without doubt, but Sampson intimated that he considered the mechanic's seat highly important and that he might ride with Louis in the first race for two-man cars since 1922 on the greatest automobile race course in the world.

Sampson is the most picturesque figure in racing in America. He was an automobile dealer in Ohio two years ago when he met Louis Meyer. They both were men of few words, of about the same height and general build. Louis was a mechanic for Frank Elliott. Two weeks before the 1928 race Louis wired his friend in Ohio that he had a good buy in a race car if Alden had the money. Alden had it and came to Indianapolis, where the car was bought. So well did Louis justify the investment that he won first place that year. The same year Sampson bought a car from the Frank Lockhart estate and Meyer drove it into second place in the 1929 race.

Work of Trio Divided.

The work of this winning trio is well divided. Sampson watches the money end. Louis Meyer does the driving, and does it so well that he won the A. A. A. driving championship in 1928 and 1929; Brett who has worked on more winners than any other racing car specialist, has the responsibility of seeing that the car is always in tip-top shape mechanically. This rare combination has made a trio to conjure with where seconds mean thousands of dollars.

The public will be much interested to see how the 16-cylinder car—the first one of its kind for track in America—will perform. With its background it can almost be written for a place well up at the finish.

Exhaust Clears Fog in Front of an Automobile

Hot air sprayed out in front of an automobile by an attachment on the exhaust of the car has been found effective in clearing away London's time-honored fog, the American Automobile association reports.

The rising current of heated air created by the device, a recent invention, literally lifts the fog about ten feet in front of the front wheels and does it quickly enough to permit a forward speed of about fifteen miles an hour in the densest fog.

The fog lifter can be attached to any car's exhaust and is much simpler than the average windshield wiper. It has been tried out in London and is being adopted by motorists there.

Effective Motor Cut-Out Is Easily Constructed

An easily built and effective motor cut-out can be constructed from an old tin can and a few discarded parts, as shown in Fig. 3. Remove the exhaust pipe and cut a large hole in it. Cut holes in the ends of the tin can so that it will slip over the pipe. Fit one bolt as a stop and another for the spring that pulls the can back over the hole when the valve stem on the end of the cord is allowed to slide into the hole in the dash. The hole in the exhaust pipe can be cut most easily by sawing a V-shaped notch in the pipe with a hack saw. Notch area should equal pipe cross section.—Popular Science Magazine.

Watch Motor Car Brakes During Severe Weather

Most any brake adjustment will work reasonably well in warm dry weather, when roads are dry and everything works freely; but much greater care must be exercised in winter, when roads are slippery and brake bands and joints are covered with mud and ice. Have the brakes looked after frequently to be sure that they take hold evenly and the movable joints should be frequently oiled with thin penetrating oil and if possible covered to prevent mud and ice from freezing on them and locking them.

In driving, one should use the brakes very cautiously, as a sudden application of the brakes is almost sure to cause a skid, and even a slow pressure may produce the same results if the brakes are badly off in adjustment.

AUTOMOBILE HINTS

If the car has a backing light, reverse never should be used as a brake when the car is left parked. It drains the battery.

• • •

Another part the motorist must remember not to tighten too much is the water pump shaft-packing gland. The shaft must run free.

• • •

"The shoe manufacturers say we do not walk enough." This is important, we think. Whereabouts downtown do the shoe manufacturers park their cars?

• • •

Beginners are apt to overchoke the engine when starting. It is often unnecessary to use the choke at all, especially in warm weather or shortly after you have been running the car.

• • •

Motorists long have been warned not to touch the head of the speedometer and not even to let the average mechanic work on it. Speedometers are delicate instruments, like fine watches.

The SANDMAN STORY

ABOUT WISE POLLY

"WELL," said Polly, the parrot, "this is the greatest fun in the world."

"What are you talking about?" asked Larry, the monkey.

"Yes, tell us," said Jimmie, the monkey.

"I'm talking about you and all of your friends," said Polly. "You see, I lived in a private house before I came to the zoo. Before that I lived in a bird shop, and before that I can't remember.

"Maybe I came from where my grandparents came, but I'm sure I don't know. I never took much stock in family history. But at any rate the bird shop was my first home, my second was the home where a mother and daddy and some children lived, and my third home is here in the zoo.

"That May Be So, but You're All So Amusing," Said Polly.

"This, as I said before, is the greatest fun in the world."

"Pray tell me why you think so," said Larry, as he swung by his tail and went back again on his bar so he could look at Polly in the next cage.

"Ah, because monkeys are so funny," said Polly. "One moment they're gay, the next sad, and the next sleepy, and the next hungry."

"Well, well, well," chuckled Jimmie. "I don't see that that makes us any different from most creatures.

"People, and when I say people, I mean grownups and children, are gay, or sad, or sleepy, or hungry, or some of those things one time or another.

"That may be so," said Polly, "but you're all so amusing. One never knows what you are going to do next."

"Neither do you know what people are going to do next," said Larry.

"Why don't you say they are funny?"

"Maybe they are," said Polly, "but they don't hang by their tails and squeal and make faces in the way you do, and I am having the greatest fun because I'm trying to copy you.

"Yes, that is why I'm having the greatest fun. I have grown tired of copying people who say 'Good morning, Polly,' and 'Polly want a cracker.'

"Now I have a whole monkey house to copy and how glad I am the keeper has me for a pet and puts me in the monkey house where he is in charge.

"I'm having the time of my parrot life."

Just then a whistle was heard. A long, funny sort of whistle.

The children who were visiting the monkey house looked this way and that, and the keeper laughed to see them. Oh, how the keeper laughed.

A big policeman had come into the monkey house and had said "hello" to the keeper, but the children had not thought there was anything funny in that.

"Still knows you, eh?" the keeper said to the policeman. "The children don't know what to make of it."

"Yes, Jimmie is very loyal and devoted."

Still the children had not been able to understand the whistling, and the keeper turned to the children and said:

"Did you see the policeman?"

"We did," the children answered.

"And just before he whistled we heard another whistle."

"That was Jimmie, the monkey," said the keeper. "When the policeman came into this house he gave a long whistle.

"But you heard the monkey's whistle even before you heard the policeman give his, for Jimmie heard the policeman's step as he came in the door, and he recognized his step and whistled first.

"That policeman has been on his vacation lately, but Jimmie knew his step, even though he hadn't heard it in over two weeks.

"You see, Jimmie never forgets his friends."

And now the children watched the policeman as he talked to Jimmie, and the keeper talked to Larry, who was his special pet, and the parrot watched and said to herself:

"This is a most friendly and intelligent place.

"I'll certainly be more of a parrot for knowing such clever creatures.

"One can't help but pick up a little intelligence when one has intelligence all around one.

"Why, I'm ashamed I ever said anything so silly as 'Polly wants a cracker,' though I suppose it suits some parrots."

Dear Editor:

THIS air mail gives a new opportunity to the office statistician. You know the kind. They can tell you what time train No. 8 gets to Bloomington, what time the air mail reaches Louisville, and when is the last minute to get a letter started for Chicago.

We need this sort of help because most of us are in the dark as to where air mail routes go and where they don't. A friend spent a quarter to send me a letter by air mail, and it came on the train after all. Oh well, the government needs the cash.

If the post office really wants to help the airplanes, they might have made those air stamps smaller. You get a lot of paper for your nickel.—Fred Barton.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

THE LIGHTS BURN BLUE

"THE lights burn blue—It is now dead midnight," says King Richard, starting awake from his dream peopled with the ghosts of his murdered dead. This superstition of the last Plantagenet with regard to the connection between a blue-burning flame and the presence of inimical spirits is a very old and universal one which has not yet entirely vanished from our modern folk-lore. There are many people still who, when the lights burn blue, fancy that it is an indication that "spirits are about."

On the New England coast when a fire burns with a blue flame they say that a storm is coming. It is an omen of evil—the powers of the prince of the air are abroad! In the South when the fire burns blue the colored folks and some of the white ones, too, say that it is a sign that "the devil wants to speak to you," and handfuls of salt are thrown on the fire to keep him away. The ancient Greeks, when their funeral pyres burned blue, used to throw oil upon them to induce a clearer flame. Sir Thomas Browne (1646) says "That candles and lights burn blue and dim at the apparition of spirits may be true if the ambient air is filled with a sulphurous spirits, as happens often in the mines."

This blue-light superstition is clearly a survival of sun-worship. The flame represented the sun and like the sun should burn with a clear light. When it doesn't something is wrong. The perfect sympathy between the sun-god and his earthly symbol, fire, created by man in his honor to induce his beneficient protection, is destroyed. Evil spirits intervene between the god and his votaries.

Famous University

Washington and Lee university was given this time in 1871. The school was established as Augusta academy in 1749 and chartered in 1782. George Washington rendered financial assistance and the name was changed in 1798 to Washington academy. In 1813 the name was changed to Washington college. Gen. Robert E. Lee was made president in 1865, and after his death the name became Washington and Lee university.

Betty Compson

Charming Betty Compson, the popular screen star, was born in Beaver, Utah. Her early experience was in two-reel comedies which was followed by her first big success in drama with "The Miracle Man." With the coming of Vitaphone Miss Compson was given prominent parts and has already appeared in a number of popular productions.

For Meditation

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

WILLIAM HOWARD TAFT

IT IS no small honor for a statesman to be intensely admired, and at the same time, deeply loved. This singular honor belongs to William Howard Taft. The love which both America and Europe had for him was a whole-hearted response to his own love for humanity. Lincoln said: "God must have loved the common people because he made so many of them."

L. A. Barrett.

Something like this spirit—a broad and genuine love for the common people—was one of the reasons why America loved its honored statesman.

Mr. Taft's interpretation of life's values was so full and comprehensive that he was able to radiate a very real spirit of optimism. In the discussion of grave political problems his good cheer dispelled the gloom of many a serious debate, and his power to penetrate through a problem and see it from an all-round point of view, gave him a commanding place in the world of leadership. He was able to see the humorous as well as the serious side of an issue. No man since Lincoln commanded this power more than did Mr. Taft. His hearty laugh will never be forgotten by any person who ever heard it. It is not surprising that he radiated good cheer even in his sickroom, and that he died with a smile upon his face.

The greatest honor which came to Mr. Taft was the Presidency. In this capacity he served from 1909 to 1913, having been elected by a majority of 159 votes in the electorial college. The second highest honor was his appointment as Chief Justice of the Supreme court. Twice he had declined the appointment as associate justice, which offer came to him through President Roosevelt; but when, later in life, the appointment came as chief justice, he accepted it with all his heart and strength.

Mr. Taft was the only man who ever held both of the highest offices within the gift of the American government—that of President and chief justice.

When William the Silent, prince of Orange, died, it was said that little children cried in the streets. This was doubtless true of one of America's greatest statesmen—William Howard Taft.

Team Work Needed

Love will never "make the world go round," as the old song says, without liberal doses of common sense, and your matrimonial ship will go on the rocks unless common sense sits at the steering wheel. The "star dust" days of courtship, and early days after the marriage cannot last.—Milan Standard.

Doctor's PRESCRIPTION when system is sluggish; costs nothing to try

When your bowels need help, the mildest thing that will do the work is always the sensible choice. Take a laxative that a family doctor has used for all sorts of cases of constipation. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is so pleasant to the taste, so gentle in its action, it is given children of tender age and yet it is just as thorough and effective as stronger preparations. Pure senna, and harmless laxative herbs; ingredients that soon start a gentle muscular action. Avoid a coated tongue, bad breath, bilious headaches, etc. Every drug store has Dr. Caldwell's famous prescription in big bottles. Or just write Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, Monticello, Ill., for a free trial bottle.

Jim's Thoughts Traveled Beyond the Honeymoon

Governor Young was commenting on the California marriage law which compels ardent couples to stop, look and think before they take the final step.

"It is a good law," he said, "and although it was primarily aimed at the so-called 'gin marriage' it has a far wider scope that that. In these days of high cost of living, too many young people are of the Jim Harris type.

"Jim, you know, was very anxious to marry Claudia. Claudia was willing and her parents were not averse to the match.

"'As a wedding present,' Claudia confided to Jim, 'Dad is going to pay all the expenses of our honeymoon trip.'

"'That's fine,' said Jim and then added anxiously, 'but what are we going to do after that?'"—Los Angeles Times.

Hawaiian Forests

Hawaii is blessed with a considerable quantity of forest land, yet with the exception of one type of wood, koa or Hawaiian mahogany, the forest lands are of little value. The total acreage of woodlands is estimated at 1,000,000 acres, but it is largely in tropical forests with much mesquite. Ohia lehuan, another type of tree, has considerable value as a protection for watersheds.—Washington Star.

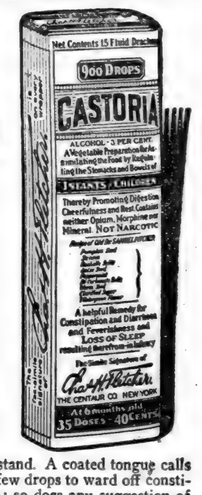
Cole's Carbolisalve Quickly Relieves and heals burning, itching and torturing skin diseases. It instantly stops the pain of burns. Heals without scars. 30c and 60c. Ask your druggist, or send 30c to The J. W. Cole Co., Rockford, Ill., for a package.—Advertisement.

Rare Bird

"He's a peculiar chap. Has a conscience that's always hitting on all six."

"Yes, he never thinks the umbrella loaned him is a straight-out gift."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Restless Children



Children will fret, often for no apparent reason. But there's always one sure way to comfort a restless, fretful child. Castoria! Harmless as the recipe on the wrapper; mild and bland as it tastes. But its gentle action soothes a youngster more surely than some powerful medicine that is meant for the stronger systems of adults.

That's the beauty of this special children's remedy! It may be given the tiniest infant—as often as there is any need. In cases of colic, diarrhea, or similar disturbance, it is invaluable. But it has everyday uses all mothers should understand. A coated tongue calls for a few drops to ward off constipation; so does any suggestion of bad breath. Whenever children don't eat well, don't rest well, or have any little upset—this pure vegetable preparation is usually all that's needed to set everything to rights. Genuine Castoria has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper. Doctors prescribe it.

His Number

"He is one of those newrich, isn't he?"

"Yes, he'd still think of sausages instead of golf if he heard links mentioned."

Labor a Necessity

Work is the secret of true happiness. "Take away the occupation of all men," says John Burroughs, "and half the world will commit suicide within a year."—Grit.

Says Men Want Pals, Not Patients!

SHE was engaged! She was the happiest girl in the world. A round of teas and parties, a whirl of pleasure, and she began to wonder what was the matter. Too tired to go out—and he—was he becoming tired of her?

It was at this point that Miss Margaret Belden of Los Angeles woke up to the fact that something had to be done about it. "Men want pals, not patients" she writes. "I went right to my doctor. Do you know what he said? Rest—and Nujol!

"With a prayer in my heart and Nujol in my medicine cabinet I began to fight back to being the healthy, robust, happy girl I had been before. Two months passed. No more tears—no more worrying, no more bad dreams. Today I beat him on the tennis court, and although he can out-swim me, I make him work doing it. It's good to be happy. It's good to be free, physically, and be able to share, any time, in sports or dancing or anything else with the one you love!"

Here's another one who has learned that the simplest and surest way to be well and full of good spirits is to clear the bodily poisons out of your system regularly. Not with powerful drugs, but normally, naturally, easily. Doctors and nurses recommend such a natural treatment as Nujol, because this crystal-clear liquid isn't a medicine at all! It cannot harm even a little baby! It contains absolutely no drugs. It is simply internal lubrication that your body needs like any other machine.

Good looks and good spirits—do they spell popularity? You know they do! Get a bottle of Nujol tonight in any drug store. Sold in sealed packages only—trademarked "Nujol." Insist on Nujol by name. It costs but a few cents—and it will make you feel like a million dollars.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

We are now busy paving the way for the paved road.

The base ball diamond has received a manicuring. It won't be long now.

No Brethren, there is no such thing as hard times. Automobiles are still being sold.

When people call you a Li-lac they don't mean that what you say smells like and makes you look like a flower.

All these small towns are the places where the physical culturists got their inspiration to develope their art.

Nut Salad: If you want to sleep well and enjoy a good somber rest tonight, lie down on a platform scales and cover yourself up with a perfectly good bicycle.

Great Americans have said that spirituality is the only thing that will save democracy for the world. We wonder if that will do the same thing to save the church for the world.

'Taint fair to make a candidate go through a primary and an election to get one office. It's like making a man bear two crosses to get one crown or go through two hells to get to one heaven.

Instructions to voters: The fellow that acts "tickled to death" after the primary is the fellow that has been nominated. After election its the fellow that's been elected. The rest of the inhabitants will act perfectly natural.

The over discussion of religion might be considered an unbalanced ration for the average reading mind of today. But let us mention one of life's criterions that lead to the solution of a question that concerns the co called christian, and the one big doubt that arises in his mind daily. The question is: Have I a right to still lay claim to the title of christian and do I still possess what I profess. There is one working hpyothesis that always can be relied on to bring the honest inquirer to his solution. Has he great opposition in life? Has he enemies that ridicule his position in life? If he has, he is well on his way.

A few days ago Chicago newspapers gave an account of a supposed love feast between the rival crime factions of that city to affect a coalition of all vice interests to combat the organized efforts of the citizens and city government of Chicago to rid the place of bad element. Now we read the headlines of the newspapers and see where 3 gangsters are killed by another gangster. That's one way of getting rid of that element alright but false social standards are making them faster than they are killed. If this kind of business gets to be on a large scale it won't be so pleasant around Chicago. "It's just too killing how they act in Chicago.

A Suggestion for Science

The scientific announcement of the Davey Tree Surgery Research laboratories concerning the possibilities of changing the color of the leaves of trees and the immunity from bugs and worms by chemical treatment, has revealed to the thinking world the possibilities of carrying similar treatment over into the animal kingdom.

The treatment of all animals for medical and decorative reasons would be highly beneficial to both man and animals if such were possible.

For instance: By chemical treatment we might be able to grow feathers on a horse, hair on a fish, scales on a ground hog, wool on a hog, fuzz on a snake and put a school girl complexion on a crocodile. Or by chemical infusion we might cause the hens to lay colored Easter eggs or the cow to give whipped cream in various colors and flavors or malted milk, etc.

In the mental and medical sciences, men might be treated for social, spiritual and political ailments. We might improve society and control elections by giving the voter a shot in the arm of DRY serum, the lazy housewife a couple spoonsful of ambition oil, the old grouch a couple squirts of laughing juice or good will power.

Preachers could take spiritual and conversational and convertional tonic that would weed out the jazz from the minds of his congregation and create a state of financial liberality in the community.

Now in the decorative sense, chemicals might be used to change people's foliage as in the trees. The skin might be made to have the lily white or the sun russet tan complexion, blonds or brunettes could be made over night, eyebrows could be of the gunmetal hue while the toe nails could be lavender in shade. Stockings would be unnecessary, a change in color would change the garment, etc. In fact, there would be "A rainbow 'round your shoulders" and everywhere you looked.

The Marathoners

People who are interested in the enigmatic and fantastic traits of human nature, find in the marathon dance a good specimen for their study and amusement. People who do not take the time to think out the probable reasons why people are willing to undergo the rigors and privations of this race of physical endurance, no doubt find it hard to determine why human beings will subject themselves to sleepless hours, swollen legs and loss of weight and years of their lives to win a marathon dancing contest.

When the scream of the siren awakens the contestants from their eleven minute rest once every hour, a group of moon-eyed men and women can be seen dragging themselves out of their rest rooms for forty-five minutes more dance and shuffle. Some seem to stand the strain well, while others saunter around as in a coma, trying to sleep on the walk.

Spectators are moved with sympathy for the weak, while others see in the exhibition a display of nothing but a free will offering on their part there being nothing of a compulsory nature in their indulgence. The wiser thinkers say that if these marathoners were made to perform this task by some manufacturer or person employing labor, every dancer on the floor would sue their employer for overtime labor and for the swollen legs and eyes and the country would read in every paper and magazine about the cruelties of organized capitol against the laboring boy and girl.

The why of the marathon dance is no different from all other whys explaining the reason for people subjecting themselves to torture for notoriety's sake. Fads, styles and stunts for the praise of the world and the lack of employment for the present might be the principal reasons for the participation in such an empty cause. But we reflect that "the love of money is the root of all evil" and the love of getting before the people by any old way can explain in some degree the malady.

No doubt that at some time, early biologists witnessed some of humanity's eccentricities similar to the marathon, that caused them to put man in the animal kingdom.

DRY POLL 50-50

While the Literary Digest is conducting a nation wide poll on the wet and dry issue, the New York Herald-Tribune has completed a similar poll among 500 newspapers in 48 states. Of the 500 newspapers receiving ballots, 110 returned marked ballots showing that 55 papers were in favor of enforcement and 55 for repeal. Whatever will be the results of the poll of the citizenry of the country is yet to be determined, but, if the journalistic element of the land can be relied on to furnish a stimulus in reading the pulse of the land, it will no doubt be evenly close. This even vote indicates that there are a large number of newspapers in the land that do not forget who manufactured this world and the duty its inhabitants owe to the creator thereof. The press of the country is reasonably sound.

In making this poll it was found that the wet element was located in large cities of more than 100,000 population while the dry papers were found to be in smaller cities, while seven were found in large cities of the above wet classes. In any event the final disposition of the wet and dry issue will necessarily have to be left to the states. No change or amendment can be made except as the states see fit.

Ohio State Prison Burns

At about six o'clock Monday evening a fire broke out in the Ohio State Prison at Columbus, Ohio, causing one of the worst prison fires in the history of the country. The fire is supposed to be of incendiary origin, set by convicts in order to make a jail delivery of all prisoners in case enough confusion would be made to make escape possible. This fire is one of a series of prison disturbances that have been occurring in the different prisons over the country in attempt to escape and register their contempt for the treatment received in the prisons.

At the time of going to press there were 319 known dead with many not expected to recover.

Prisoners say the fire was caused by short circuit in defective wiring. Convicts tell of inferno of hell in the cells where they were locked many of which were not liberated because of the quick spread of the flames and the intense heat. Shrieks and cries were heard and then all was silent as the men in the cells were suffocated or roasted into unconsciousness. Criminal incarceration in the United States is becoming one of the acute problems in which governmental authorities have to deal. The prison riots and the fires indicate that there is still some measures to be used necessary to a just and safe method of handling and meting out justice to the criminal element of the country.

Sad But True

"Some one suggests that the only way to drive is with the idea constantly in mind that the other fellow may be an idiot," says the Los Angeles Times.

This is sad but true. Recklessness seems to be part of the motoring code with millions of American drivers. And the inevitable result is that, every year, 25 or 30 thousand persons are killed and hundreds of thousands injured in preventable automobile accidents.

The tragic part of it is that the enormous annual waste of life and property is almost entirely unnecessary. The unpreventable accident is rare as the dodo bird. Someone is incompetent or reckless in the case of practically every collision, great or small, between motor cars.

The blame may be laid in two places. First is the apparent indifference of many motorists to the fundamentals of safety. Second is the lack of strict licensing laws in most states to keep the incompetent and reckless off the road, and an accompanying lack of enforcement of modernized, commonsense traffic codes.

New Profession for Women

The old adage, "It's a man's world," is fast becoming obsolete even in Turkey where feminine rights, as such, have only recently begun to receive attention. There are few fields that seem less fitted for women, even in the western world, than that of taxi-driver yet in Constantinople a young convent-bred girl recently proclaimed her emancipation by taking a chauffeur's test and embarking on a career of taxi-driving. Mouamer Hanoum was just eighteen years of age when she startled Constantinople by announcing her intention of taking a chauffeur's course. She subsequently passed the severe physical examination and, in a business-like manner asserted that she was prepared to enter the driver's tests. She displayed such unusual skill at the wheel that she completed her course in record time and captured highest honors.

The Bible and Its Sale

It is rather surprising to learn that the sale of bibles in the United States and in the world still leads all other books in sales and number of volumes. The bible has been known to be the most undisturbed book in America, judging from the dust that surrounds its captivity. In these days of doubt and uncertainty when jazz seems to be more thought of than philosophy and pleasure more vital than religion, we find people becoming more interested in the destiny of the soul and the value of religious influence in this life. Men of yesterday shied at church attendance because of the Pharisaism of the church, but today we find the individual looking over and around these imaginary obstructions and are reading for themselves out of the original authority for the rules of life. In the year 1929 the number of bibles and testaments sold in the world were 36,500,000 copies and in the United States, 14,000,000 copies. In the same year there were 10,187 new issues of religious books printed which have a new color to this age of seemingly agnosticism and Russian anti-religious-ism that is trying to sweep the earth.

Behind these figures can be seen a deep seriousness, made manifest by a reality of the human need and appetite of the average person. Every man has learned to think for himself and refuses to be led by political and religious tradition having no biblical foundation or religious authority. "Men and women never before gave so much attention to religion as at present," states the Buffalo Courier. "They may turn more than formerly from this or that form of religion, but religion itself engages their thoughts more seriously than ever." It looks like human nature has given up the old alibi as both silly and useless, that other people are responsible for their nonconformity to christianity. When religion is popularized then it will move and the reading ofthe bible seems to have caused the rise in this popularity.

BUTLER WOMAN TAKES HER LIFE

Mrs. Addie Gengnagle, aged 58 years, committed suicide at her home at Butler it is thought some time Friday morning by taking poison.

The discovery was made through a letter which Mrs. Gengnagle wrote to Henry Johnson, of Butler, an undertaker, directing him to take care of her body. The letter was written Tuesday but Mr. Johnson received it Friday morning.

As soon as he received the letter Mr. Johnson went to Mrs. Gengnagle's home where she lived alone and with the town marshal who had been summoned, found the body in bed.

Mrs. Gengnagle evidently took the poison, black leaf nicotine, a poison which diluted is used for spraying shrubbery and bushes, in the kitchen and walked to her bed room.

It is thought that about an ounce of the poison was taken full strength. The bottle was found in the kitchen.

Coroner Clark, of Auburn, pronounced a verdict of suicide from poisoning.

Mrs. Gengnagle will be remembered by St. Joe citizens as Addie Elliot, and having lived here some years ago, with her parents, conducting the hotel in the east part of town.

Wind is a Close Second to Fire

In destuction and damage to property, high winds are almost as culpable as fire. A wind need not be of tornado force to do serious damage; nor is wind damage a hazard peculiar to any section of the country. Exceedingly high and dangerous wind movements have occurred in almost every section of the country and history will undoubtedly repeat itself. Windstorm Insurance is very moderate in cost.

MAKE PORK THE CHEAPEST WAY

(Prof. W. B. Krueck)

Good pastures and good forage crops will help reduce the cost of producing pork. However, a great many hog feeders depend entirely upon the forage crops as a supplement to the corn.

In six year's trials at the Indiana Experiment Station it was demonstrated that it was profitable and desirable to feed a good protein supplement to corn even though hogs were upon good forage. In this particular case good alfalfa pasture was used.

It was found that by adding a good protein supplement to the corn and forage that the rate of gain was increased practically a third of a pound per day. Taking average Spring pigs they were able to place them on the market an average of twenty-two days sooner, which resulted in bringing them $1.17 more per hundredweight of pork, due to the fact that the market drops very rapidly after the middle of September

Furthermore, pork was produced 12c per hundredweight cheaper when the supplement was used than when none was supplied.

Summarizing their results, they obtained $1.129 more per hundred weight of pork or $2.90 more on 225 pound hog as a result of using a supplement upon forage.

It is true, of course, that hogs will not take as much supplement when the forage is provided as when they are fed in dry lots. In the Purdue trials they just consumed about half as much supplement as when dry lot feeding was practiced. Therefore, the wise farmer will see that a good protein supplement is provided for his pigs even though good forage crops are available.

That Good Ham Sandwich

By I. WRIGHT

(Copyright.)

MERWIN PALMER straightened up from his cramped position over the engine and rubbed his greasy hands down the tan overalls he wore. "I tell you, Dave," he said with a sigh, "I'm going up to that house and ask for a drink of water. I need a little something after three hours of this work."

The man lying in the road under the car snorted: "G'wan, then. We're not going to call a garage man in for this little job if it takes all day."

"No, that's all right with me—but I'm going to have a drink of water. And say—if I saw a ham sandwich right now."

"For a civil engineer with a nice new diploma from college and a pretty fraternity pin that no girl ever yet succeeded in getting away—well, you sound like a hungry tramp." And the man in the road turned over on his side and stretched two fingers up into the motor and said something softly under his breath.

Up at the house on the hill a girl with soft golden hair and violet eyes stood on the porch, watching the progress of the man coming up. "His figure is like Merwin's," she whispered to herself. "But Merwin—" she sighed a little and sat down at the white kitchen table, which was spread with two large loaves of bread, butter, mustard and pretty pink ham.

"May—may I have a drink of water?" asked Merwin Palmer a moment later.

The girl with the violet eyes did not look up from her bread cutting. "The pump is there and the dipper is hanging in the apple tree directly above. Help yourself." Her voice was cordial.

As soon as he had turned to go to the pump she looked after him. Afraid of tramps, she was somehow fascinated by his figure. His shoulders drooped as he pumped, and he looked very tired. When he called out "Thanks" she was again looking at her bread.

If he stared at her queerly she did not know it, for she was not even glancing his way.

"Maybe tramps are a lazy lot and don't deserve anything," she said half aloud, "but I'll bet a sandwich would taste good to him. Say!" she called out. She did not know how to address him, and "say" seemed to be adequate.

He turned.

"Would you—care for a ham sandwich?",

He hurried toward her.

For a moment she was startled. She had heard dreadful tales of tramps knocking girls senseless and going through the house to take everything of value. She almost regretted her impulse.

"I don't know that you're hungry," she said timidly.

"Why," he said cordially in a booming voice, "I'd commit murder right now for a ham sandwich. I was just telling my pal down the road that a ham sandwich—"

She paled; he had a pal down the road—she did not dare look at him.

"May I help myself?" he asked as she made no effort to hand him the plate.

She nodded; her throat felt dry and hot and she wished that some of the family were home. "You—you might take one along to your—pal—" she said in a very little voice.

"Fine—" he said, eating the sandwich with a great relish. "Although a fellow who swears as he does doesn't deserve anything as good as—" he said and then stopped short.

Her face flamed; why had she called him back when he was on his way out of the yard! She dared not look at him. Panic overwhelmed her.

"Aren't you Faith Darrow?" he asked.

She looked at him now in surprise: "Yes."

"I'm—"

"You're never Merwin Palmer?"

He nodded placidly. "I'm glad you remembered. I thought you didn't and—"

She laughed nervously: "Well, why—why didn't you say so at the start? I thought—you—thought you were a tramp."

He stared at his tan overalls. "The car broke down and Dave and I thought we'd fix it ourselves."

There was a strained silence as each followed thoughts concerning an evening where there was dancing, a balcony, certain words—and then the interruption of a crowd of dancers.

"Y'know—" it was Merwin Palmer who broke the silence. "Y'know, I always had a notion, Faith, that my fraternity pin would look better on you than on anyone else in the world; suppose we—" he was holding out the pin which had never before been out of his hands.

A snort made them turn around. "So this is what you call getting a 'drink of water' while I lie under that car and sweat?" It was Dave.

"Here's a sandwich and there's the dipper far down the yard there by the pump. G'wan and get a drink," urged Merwin Palmer, with more cordiality than he had ever before shown. "G'wan, we're busy here."

Good Man's Great Fault Not an Uncommon One

"I understand," said the householder of another village to a friend, "that you used to know the parson who is coming to our church?"

"That's right," returned the other.

"Is he a good man?" asked the householder, "What I mean is, has he any faults or anything against him?"

"He's certainly a very good man," said the friend, "and, since you press me, I will tell you that he has one very grave fault."

"What is that?"

"He doesn't know how to sing," came the answer.

"But, my good fellow, that's not a very grave fault."

"Admitted," returned the friend; "but, you see, he sings just the same as if he did know."—London Answers.

One-Man Sawmill

Making it possible for the farmer to operate his own sawmill without employing other help, a one-man sawmill now is available to turn into profit much of the timber that formerly was used for firewood or wasted entirely. The mill is so arranged that all the levers to manipulate it are within easy reach of the operator and, aside from sawing out standard size lumber, will also cut shingles, lath and railroad ties. Stationary or portable mills may be obtained and both are operated by stationary engines, electric motors, water power, or by a belt from a truck. —Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Success Logic

Charles F. Riesner, successful movie director who fought his way from a poor boy's home to a mansion in Beverly Hills by his own efforts, declares that the man who says, "I will do it," owns 51 per cent of the stock in the project he is undertaking. But he cannot stop there and win success. He must organize his work and himself, be prepared to take an occasional loss and only using his voting power to keep himself at the task.—Arkansas Gazette.

The Mutiny of the Albatross

THE STORY

Floyd Unwin and Howard Bettington take dinner with an old college chum, Alfred Gibbons, financial magnate. Unwin produces a written pledge taken by the three at college to help each other in adversity, explaining that he needs financial assistance to educate his son Bob and daughter Mary. Gibbons scoffs at the "legality" of the pledge, but agrees to make a place for the daughter in his organization. Mary Unwin is stenographer to a wealthy debauchee, Edgar Radway. Calling at Gibbons' office, as arranged, Mary is asked to betray her employer's secrets and refuses. Radway plans an ocean voyage to recover from the effects of dissipation. Mary is to go as secretary, her brother to accompany her. Bettington, painting on the Maine coast, is kidnaped, and taken aboard a vessel. His clothes are found by Gibbs, a fugitive from justice, who dons them and goes to Bettington's studio, and there falls to his death. Bettington finds he is aboard Radway's yacht.

In the library, which was also the music room, Mrs. Radway and Mary were sitting.

"Mary," Mrs. Radway said suddenly, "it was very selfish of me to have brought you here."

"You needed me, and I'm glad I came," Mary returned. She had conceived one of those almost extravagant admirations for the beautiful woman. Literally, at the eleventh hour, the maid who was to have come, declined the risk of ocean's wrath and deserted her mistress at the very dock.

The gong sounded which summoned them to luncheon, Radway was genial. He presented a tall and distinguished man to his wife.

"It seems we shipped a doctor aboard. Here he is. Doctor Waite—Mrs. Radway and Miss Unwin."

The intimacy, so enforced and inevitable on a yacht, with which one must come to regard another after a time, presented problems to Mrs. Radway not wholly pleasing. She conceded that this stranger had a face which inspired confidence in her, as much as that of the steward with his perpetual smile created aversion. He had a fine head and keen but kindly eyes. And there was something reassuring in his splendid physical proportions. She thought he looked with especial kindliness at little Mary Unwin. As for Mary, she breathed a sigh of relief. Instinct told her here, at last, was a man on board she could trust. She had not confided in Mrs. Radway her apprehension of most of the men she had seen.

"I hope you will find very little professional work to do," Mrs. Radway said to Betttington.

He was charmed by her low, yet distinct, voice. He had thought Lavery's portrait to be idealized until he met the original of it. He had often, in other years, read of her. It seemed likely, when she was first married, that she would accomplish that almost impossible ambition, a salon. She had birth, money, wit and beauty. And with these advantages she had chosen Radway among the many who put their all at her feet. He looked from her to the financier.

What was it, Bettington asked himself, that had made him, in her eyes, more attractive than any other man. Ambition probably, and the enthusiasm aroused by his big moment at the capital. He wondered how much she had repented of it. There could be no doubt now as to her disillusions. He thought he could discover a trace of sadness in her lovely face; and, like La Gioconda, "her eyelids were a little weary."

Whatever uncomfortable pauses in the conversation there were, due to Radway's incessant grumbling at the food, the motion of the boat and his inability to enjoy flavors that once fascinated him, she filled in without seeming effort. She had, no doubt, become adept at this, Bettington thought.

After lunch Radway went to his big stateroom at the extreme bow of the boat. "Got some work to do," he announced. "It will keep me busy till dinner."

Mrs. Radway knew he was going to sleep. Then he would wake, feeling wretched. He would take a highball, two or three. Then he would dress for dinner and the real man would betray himself. She was not sure whether she was sorry or glad that there was a new element introduced by Doctor Waite. She knew her husband's imperious ways too well to suppose that anything but his own will could moderate his appetites.

She watched him walking up and down the deck with the secretary who had so little to do. A man who would take such a position as this, with its relatively small pay and insecure prospects, must be a failure at his profession. And yet he did not look like a failure.

Mary liked him, and admitted his charm, but to eighteen he was old. The captain's nephew, young Crosby Todd, who had shown her the mysteries of wireless, was more of her age. Bettington saw her eyes brighten as the lad came from the wireless room and crossed the deck, a little diffidently, to her. He smiled at the young man. Bettington liked boys of this clean-cut sort; and he knew that there might come a day, not far off, when the boy would be called upon to prove his mettle. He was a little distressed that the boy showed antagonism and answered his questions as to his work with smileless face. Well, it was perhaps better so. A man was known by his companions and they judged him to be one of Clements' adherents.

He was not sure whether Mrs. Radway, for all her courtesy at luncheon, would expect him to get on the easy terms with her which he had established with Mary. She was, he reflected, one of the great hostesses and society beauties of the day. Perhaps she, too, shared the suspicions already formed of him by the captain. He found himself elated—a new emotion with him—when she beckoned him to take a chair at her side.

"I am glad you are a physician," she began, "one can talk so much more freely to you."

This hardly put him at ease. It was a bad beginning, he felt, this enforced deception, and yet he could not allow her to suppose he was not the ship's properly equipped surgeon.

"It is about my husband," she continued. "He is very ill. He hates ferociously. He thinks it hurts his enemies; sometimes he talks as though he believed in black magic. Of course, it all reacts on him eventually." She watched Mary and young Todd pace up and down the deck. "Probably about five years' difference in their age," she commented. "That's right; it's natural. I hope she'll marry him. He is a good honest boy."

"You know of him?" Bettington asked. He found himself concerned for Mary Unwin's future.

"I have never even spoken to him," she answered, "but one sometimes has the gift of seeing people as they are. You are reliable. There are others here who are not. . . . The man Clements with his eternal smile, which is never accentuated and never diminished. It's the smile of a mask. Who is he?"

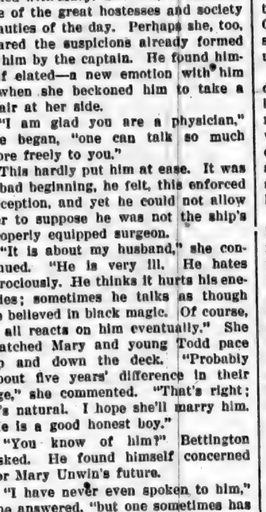
"I saw him for the first time on board," he returned. "Your husband must know."

"He did Elgar a good turn once," she said, "and when he offered this boat, all found except the captain, who is our old skipper, Elgar took it. He said he knew he would have to pay for the help Clements gave."

So that was how it came about. But Radway had not guessed the extent of the pay. Bettington sat talking to Evelyn Radway until she called Mary and said it was time to dress for dinner.

Clements came into Bettington's stateroom. A dinner coat and black trousers, newly pressed, were hung up.

"They always dress for dinner," said the Boss. "You did well this afternoon. I could see she was taken by you. When you meet Metzger tonight,



"Mary," Mrs. Radway Said Suddenly, "It Was Very Selfish of Me to Have Brought You Here."

you will find him already furiously jealous. I will not allow any quarreling on board until the thing is achieved for which I gathered you together."

"You will not allow it?" Bettington repeated slowly. "You may not allow men like Sam and Metzger to do as they please, but I am a free agent, my good man."

Now he would see the smile fade. If the dreaded Boss lived up to his reputation some other expression must replace the grinning mask. Bettington heard a swift intake of breath, but there was no other indication of anger.

"You are a free agent as long as you do what I tell you. Tonight I shall introduce you to the rest. I do not wish the common good to be endangered by any foolish quarreling over women."

The unwisdom of making an enemy of Clements and his gang of crooks made Bettington alter his truculent manner. He had yet to get to the bottom of the plot and gauge the strength of its instigators.

"I'm not anxious to quarrel," he said more pleasantly, "but I'm of just as independent a nature as you yourself. You'll pardon me now, but I have to dress for dinner."

It amused him to think how startled Clements must be behind that smile of his, to listen to a declaration of independence from one over whom he thought he held the threat of life imprisonment. Bettington knew that when the right moment came it would be easy to prove his integrity. Until then, he could play the part assigned to him, with just as good grace as Clements the autocrat could act the steward, assume his livery and wait upon an impatient employer.

Bettington never forgot that first dinner aboard the Albatross. Radway looked straight ahead of him, heeding nothing. It was only when his plate was set before him, filled with the chef's rich delicacies, that he seemed awake. He had been drinking steadily since luncheon and drink made him hungry.

Mary Unwin was disgusted. She had no fear of her employer. She had never liked him; now, for his behavior to Mrs. Radway, she hated him. She was glad when Bettington came in. She smiled at him. It seemed to her that he and young Crosby Todd were the only men aboard whom one could trust. Captain Hallett was gruff and soured. The others watched her with eyes aflame. And she, like the others, turned her head from the ever smiling, suave steward.

There was little conversation at the wretched meal. As Mrs. Radway passed to her stateroom with Mary, leaving her husband still at the table, she turned to Bettington.

"On deck, later, I should like to speak to you."

He bowed in answer. The spoken word would have betrayed his gladness.

He went out on deck to wait, with what patience he could summon, for Mrs. Radway's coming. Mary was looking up at the wireless. The operator was receiving news of the day for his bulletin. Clements had allowed the machine to be repaired.

Bettington was glad to believe that this lad was clean and honest. Tubby Unwin's two defenseless children might, ere long, have need of all that was clean and honest on the Albatross.

He had feared Mrs. Radway would be saddened by the cheerless dinner. He did not want to see her unhappy. Now he was amazed to find her smiling and vivacious.

"Let us walk," she commanded. "Every voyage I take I mean to learn which stars are which and how sailormen can stand by them. What's that bright thing up there?"

"Venus," he said. "She is the evening star this month. Most mariners steer by her too readily."

"And these mariners Clements has gathered together—what do you know of them?"

"Very little," he said, "but I don't like them."

"Directly I came aboard I knew something was wrong here," she said. "A sense of dissonance." She paused a moment. "Even more than that, but impossible to put into words. Perhaps it was a certain sense of dread, a feeling that Clements, in a past incarnation, was the spider who asked the fly to step into his parlor."

"Of course," she said, a moment later, "I care nothing whatever about the stars. To me they are just decorative, lovely lanterns hung in the heavens to make the nights beautiful. . . . Worrying about my husband is driving me to the deepest misery. I used to be so proud of him. Perhaps I lacked the healthy instinct which girls ought to have for companionship with boys of their own age. I rather despised young men. Their ambitions seemed so small, so contemptible beside those of the men I saw in Washington . . . and of course, Elgar was notoriously handsome then. You see, I took charge of my father's household when my mother died. I was only seventeen. Think what that meant to an ambition-crazed girl. For me, America held only one city, and that was Washington, where the embassies and legations were."

Then came several turns of the deck and no further confidences.

"I very seldom talk of those days," she said later. "I try to think of them; but here, with nothing to do but watch Elgar, and know that this is the end, I am full of my troubles."

"What do you mean by the end?" he asked. The implication that Radway's death might be what she meant, disturbed him. No matter how concerned he might be for the welfare of the two women, he was breaking the law by pretending to be a qualified physician. And to have to attend a dying man and see others hang on his verdicts and take comfort from his blundering inadequate service was a chilling prospect.

"He is slipping," she said, "slipping mentally. It is the fate of these strong men who derive no strength but from themselves. He thinks a month's rest will put him in shape for the battle. You have seen his methods of training. He has burnt himself out."

"By battle, you mean his fight with Gibbons?"

"Elgar underrates Mr. Gibbons, whom I know slightly. He has not Elgar's supreme ability, but he can descend to meannesses which my husband never used. After all, Elgar has had his great moments." She sighed. "There was a time when even so keen a judge of events as my father thought he would win the Presidential nomination. It was just after the panic of 1907 when his name led all the rest. . . . I should have been mistress of the White House before I was twenty. Naturally, I was dazzled."

He knew she was living over again those days when it seemed the world had placed its all at her feet.

"We were talking of Mr. Gibbons, weren't we?" There was more of reserve in her voice now. It was as though she realized she had, under the strain of the last few hours, disclosed too much of herself. "He has hated Elgar for years. About a year ago a group of men who had suffered from Elgar's activities, promised to join Mr. Gibbons if he could prove himself capable of giving battle and gaining victory. The test was to be the Memphis and Toledo road. Mr. Gibbons by enormous bribes succeeded when no other means could have been victorious. In itself, the loss was nothing. The road had never paid. But it showed these men that Elgar could be beaten. They are vultures turned into eagles and they will pull him down. It is very pitiful. He doesn't know it. He can see only victory. He has always been victorious before."

"I see." There was a pause. "I hope you know that if I can do anything, little or big, to help you, you have only to ask me."

She looked at him curiously. It was as though this scrutiny were to determine his status once and for all. He was unaccountably nervous.

"Yes," she said, at last, "I see that you are a man to trust." She held out her hand. "Good-night."

As she entered her room she saw Clements coming from her husband's stateroom further forward. He had a tray, on which were some glasses and an emptied decanter. It occurred to her to wonder whether this small, silent man were not plying his employer with drink for some purpose of his own. In her own room she wondered why it was that she had been led to make these unusual confidences to a stranger, when for years she had withheld them from her intimates.

She looked up with a smile as Mary, after a timid knock, entered.

"Why, little pale Mary has a color tonight," she said. "Is it the wireless?"

"It was simply fascinating," Mary declared quickly. "I have been learning so much up there. Mr. Todd is interested in my brother. Captain Hal-

"Yes," She Said at Last. "I See That You Are a Man to Trust."

lett says he's a member of the crew and not allowed on the upper deck at all. Couldn't some exception be made?"

"I will speak to the captain about it." She hesitated a moment. "I'm not sure it would be wise to speak to Mr. Radway about it. You see, dear, you rather forced your brother on him. I quite understand why you did, but he may keep him there, because he doesn't."

* * * * * * * *

When, at midnight, word was brought him that the Boss desired to see him, Bettington was still on deck. He was in a mood of elation that was unusual. He was conscious that the chance meeting with Evelyn Radway had brought new forces into his life, taken away the old ambitions and given him new and better ones and finally wrought a change in him which would be permanent. He was freed from all nervousness now. When he looked into her eyes on the morrow it would be with the certain knowledge that he loved her.

As he followed the messenger to Clement's big stateroom he knew that on this interview might hinge the safety of the two women and, perhaps, his own life. It was quite possible that already by some trick of speech, some failure to catch an allusion, some newly discovered physical characteristic, he might have convinced Clements that his first excuses were genuine. Even now he might be going to a tribunal which had already condemned him and was prepared to carry out a sentence. Alone, he would have no chance against them. Man for man, he feared none of them.

In a well-padded leather chair sat the Boss, looking fragile, remote and eternally smiling. Bettington took a chair, which gave him a full view of the others. There were three of them. Sam was the only one he had met before.

Metzger, the chief engineer, was a swarthy man of middle stature, whose age was not more than thirty-five. There were many knife wounds on his face. He had bold, dark eyes, and for all his disfigurements was handsome in an insolent fashion. This was the Metzger who had already declared himself enamored of Mrs. Radway.

The third man was Leary, the first officer, whose stateroom he had occupied. Leary was a broken-down bully of the higher seas, a relic of the day when the buckaroo mate beat his way through opposition and commended himself to the baser type of shipowner. A tallish man, stoop-shouldered and heavyset, with only one eye. He was a good seaman, as even Hallett had to admit.

The Boss bowed pleasantly to the newcomer. "Now," he said, when Bettington had lighted a cigar, "let me introduce you. No doubt you will be curious to know who and what these gentlemen are, that they have commended themselves to me." The Boss turned in his swivel chair and looked them over. "Sam, you already know. He is the type of murderer one hires at so much an hour. I cannot recommend him for any subtle work."

Sam moved uneasily. He was of that simple type, never wholly at ease unless in a conversation sprinkled with obscenities. Both Bettington's manner of speech and that of the Boss alarmed him. So had dignitaries of the law been used to address him.

Nature Gave Great Auk No Method of Defense

The Great Auk or gare-fowl was the only bird in the northern hemisphere that could not fly. In general appearance it resembled the penguin. It was about as large as a goose, was black on its head and back and white beneath. Its legs were very far back so it stood almost upright, having, on land, the appearance of sitting on its tail. It ranged from the Bay of Biscay to Greenland and was found in greatest numbers on certain rocky islands near Iceland and Newfoundland. It was quite helpless against enemies on land and was killed largely for the sake of its feathers. The last known example was killed in 1844. Its eggs are highly valued by collectors, sometimes bringing as high as $1,500. There are only about seventy examples known. The great auk was the biggest of a large family in the species, comprising guillemots or murres and puffins. They breed in vast mixed communities on cliff ledges from Greenland, Iceland and Spitzbergen to the St. Lawrence, Maine and northwestern Europe. They lay a large blotched egg pointed at one end so it tends to roll in a circle, thus not falling from the ledge.

Olympic Games Flag

The flag used for the Olympic games has an arrangement of five circles on a white or neutral background. The three upper circles, blue, black and red, do not touch, but they are joined by the two lower circles of yellow and green, which in turn do not touch each other. The blue circle represents Europe; the black, Africa; the red, America; the yellow, Asia, and the green, Australasia.

That's Something

Little Mary was sent to a strange school, so was somewhat bewildered and inattentive. Her first test came suddenly and by surprise. Little Mary's grade was just one below passing. She came home and told about it, explaining that only four in the class had passed.

"But," said her father, "why were you not one of the four who passed?"

Little Mary was distressed for a moment, then said triumphantly:

"But, Daddy, I was the best failure."

Ancient Maritime Custom

The old custom of carrying a cat aboard ship was the result of an ancient law of Henry II of England, which read that if only one beast came ashore alive from a wreck any salvage there might be could be claimed by the owners.

Alice in the Subway

By JANE OSBORN

(Copyright.)

HE WAS the kind of man who seemed to be holding a perpetual competition for the "prettiest girl" or "the most beautiful girl." In this competition he was sole judge and the contestants were girls he chanced to meet or to see anywhere. It seemed to be a game that interested him immensely and that made even a ride in a crowded subway car something of an adventure.

Thus he was engaged one afternoon when the offices of the business section had just poured forth their girls on their way homeward. This time the laurels were awarded without delay. The girl who stood opposite him in the vestibule of the subway car was so fresh of face, so gracefully proportioned, so brown of eye and golden of hair that she won with flying colors. In fact, she was perhaps the prettiest girl he—

Then the surprising thing happened. The pretty girl quietly stepped over to him.

"You're John Laurence, aren't you?" she said.

It was surprising because he wasn't John Laurence.

"You bet I am, John Laurence's my name all right."

"You don't remember me?" she asked, with disappointment.

"I remember your face—couldn't forget that," he assured. "But the name has slipped me."

"Alice," she reminded. "I used to sit in front of you in school. You used to walk home after school, too, and carry my books."

"So I did, so I did. You look just the same. Let's see, how many years ago was that?"

"Ten, wasn't it?" she figured. "We were fifteen then and we're twenty-five now."

Enormous satisfaction swept over the man. He was thirty-two.

"I guess I look a whole lot older than you," he flushed.

"Well, maybe, but then I suppose you have worked pretty hard. I heard you had graduated from Harvard and had gone in business," she said.

"And I'd really like to see you again and talk over school days." She put her hand out. "Come and see me some time. I live exactly where I did ten years ago. I am getting out here tonight to see a friend."

And there the man stood glued to the side of the car. When he came to his senses and tried to follow, the subway door promptly slammed in his face.

Jim Kelly took time the next day to drop in at the Harvard club in town and find from there something of one John Laurence. He found that he operated a factory, some sixty miles out of the city. The next day was Saturday and Jim took a two o'clock train.

He found John Laurence, and was not flattered at having to consider himself his double. To be sure they were of the same build and coloring. Their features were similar, though John Laurence looked his junior by ten years.

"I've come on a rather curious errand," he began in a grandiose manner. "You see, I happened to meet a little girl—a chance meeting, but we got rather well acquainted. She gave me her address written on a card and somehow I lost it. Now I didn't want to disappoint her. Being a man of resources I tried to work on what clews I had. She spoke of having gone to school with a John Laurence—said that she thought we might be cousins because of some slight family resemblance.

"So I happened to be out here today and thought I'd drop around and get you to give me her address. I can't remember her last name, but her first name is Alice. She said she lived exactly where she did when she knew you. She said she hadn't thought of you once for ten years until something in my face reminded her distinctly of you."

Something in the last remark brought the color rising to John Laurence's face.

"I thought you'd give me the address. I have other ways of getting it, but—"

"You'll have to use your other sources, then," said John Laurence. "And I wish you good afternoon."

Jim Kelly did not feel entirely thwarted by this rebuff, and two weeks later when he chanced to see the charming Alice in the subway one evening he felt that the had been peculiarly blessed.

"This time I'm going to get your address, little lady," he said.

Then he noticed the circle of diamonds on her left hand. Perhaps she had drawn her glove off on purpose.

"Does that ring mean anything?" asked Jim awkwardly.

"It has the most wonderful meaning in the world. You know the time I saw you first I thought you were John Laurence, and I guess I didn't give you a chance to say you weren't. A few days later the real John Laurence came to see me. He was a very good friend of mine and now, now we're engaged. Don't you think that was a wonderful coincidence?"

"Oh, I don't see anything very remarkable about that," said Jim Kelly. The subway train had stopped and he suddenly decided it was time for him to get off. "Who'd have thought," he said to himself with a smile, "that old Jim Kelly would play cupid in spite of himself!"

ADVANCE RAILROAD WARNING SIGNS

Auto Association Urges Repair, or Replacement and Additions Needed

Indianapolis, Ind. April 19.—"Repair, replacement or addition to the round disk railroad standard advance warning signs as used in Indiana was one of the subjects under discussion in the Director's meeting of the Hoosier State Automobile Association in Indianapolis last Thursday." This announcement was made at the close of the meeting and it was stated further "that if additional legislation is needed same will be sponsored in the coming session of the Legislation to see that highway traffic has as complete protection in the State of Indiana as it is possible to provide trough this type of warning sign."

"It is to be noticed that the various State Highway Comissions working through the United States Department of Roads at Washington, D. C., in conjunction with the transportation lines, have agreed upon the standard type of sign which differs only in a few minor features from the present type that was installed when the law was sponsored by the Motor Clubs and was enacted in 1921.

"These signs are to be seen at the edge of the driving portion of the highways throughout Indiana at some distance back from the railroad crossing and were set in concrete. With but few exceptions those signs are in place today and do not lean, but stand erect. It is urged, however, by the Automobile Association that the disk part of the sign was set a little high to be at all times in easy range of the automobile headlightts, which, of course, is necessary if the signs are to be seen readily by the motorist.

"It is understood that the public service commission has the authority to order maintenance or replacement or addition of these signs, but the Automobile Association officials are of the opinion that there is need of some of these signs to be placed within the corporate limits of sparsely built up sections of some of our cities and towns where as yet the law does not provide.

"The style of signs that is now in use, was made at the Michigan City State Prison."

ISSUES WARNING CONCERNING INVESTING

Otto G. Fifield, Secretary of State, has issued a warning to the women of the State, against making investments in questionable bonds, stocks and other worthless securities.

It has developed that the women of the State are annually swindled out of millions of dollars by making investments in worthless securities owing to their inexperience in business affairs. Swindlers and promotors of fraud concerns are ever watchful of the death records where widows are endowed with large insurance policies or property of value. Well dressed agents approach these women and offer them wonderful opportunity to make investments that will bring them large dividends. Many unsuspecting women are made to believe that by making these investments they are assured of an income that will protect them and their children from want. The investments, in many instances, are of no value and their property is lost.

Last year more than $700,000,000 was lost in the United States by women making investments in worthless bonds and stock. Mr. Fifield warns the women of Indiana never to make an investment of any character, in any bond or stock enterprise without first making an investigation and be sure the agent has authority to sell stocks and bonds in the state of Indiana. Consult your banker, confidential friend, or the Indiana Securities Commission before taking any chances in any of these "get-rich-quick" schemes. When extraordinary large dividends are assured or unusual large incomes offered, look upon them with suspicion.

STORE THE GRAIN ON THE FARM

With the world wheat crop for 1929 smaller than that of the previous year, it is but natural that many should be puzzled over the prevailing prices.

Some marketing specialists, however, feel that these may be explained in part by the fact that stocks in country, terminal and mill elevators are larger now than a year ago, while farm supplies show a corresponding decrease.

If their contention is correct, it would seem to point to the urgent need of providing for more adequate storage facilities on the farm, so that grain may be kept off the market and out of the visible supply until it is required. For as Secretary of Agriculture McLaughlin, of Nebraska says: "When grain is stored on the farm, no one knows when it is going to be marketed." If safely stored, it may be held for one, two or even more years.

On the other hand, he points out, when grain is stored in an elevator "it is notice to the world that it will soon be on the market, for owners are not going to pay storage very long." The farm, he stoutly asserts, is the place to store grain.

The advantages of farm storage were emphasized recently by Chairman Legge of the Federal Farm Board, and the problem is being studied carefully by various experiment stations and state colleges. At the Hays, Kansas experiment station, the storage of combined wheat is being thoroughly tested, and there are indications that with proper ventilation combined grain may be stored on the farm without risk.

Modern machinery is solving the problem of keeping down the cost of producing grain; and storage on the farm, in fire, rodent and weatherproof bins should go a long way toward aiding the solution of the marketing problem.

GRADES 1 AND 2

An Easter exchange of baskets, flowers and bunnies was enjoyed by the children Friday afternoon.

Our civics class had a little town planted in our room.

Each child was a store, fire house, church or building. Plans were made and they named the streets and beautified the town of St. Joe, especially the alleys by removing old tin cans and planting weed patches to flowers.

The Red Cross Nurse, Miss Grabiel examined all our pupils and those receiving notices from nurse should be brought by mother to the Child Clinic Tuesday.

Each month the children have been weighed and measured most all have gained.

Forty-six pupils were "Modern Health Crusaders" and were rewarded by state office, for keeping health rules.

Our visitors this week, Mrs. Ettie Webb, of Auburn; Mrs. Inez Webb, of St. Joe; Mrs. Nugen and Miss Grabiel, Auburn; Mrs. Armstrong, of St. Joe.

Two pupils were neither tardy nor absent this year, Troas Epler and Christina Zonker. Christina gained a certificate last year, too.

Otto G. Fifield, Secretary of State, has made public the report of the first quarter of 1930, the revocations of drivers automobile licenses. During the months of January, February and March 177 licenses were revoked for drunkenness, seven suspended for 30 days. Seven convicted of crime and licenses revoked, two for driving cars after license had been revoked, two non-residents forbidden to drive a car in Indiana and one chauffers license revoked. Mr. Fifield says that the drivers license law is being enforced and is meeting with expectations of the public.

CANNIBALISM IN CHICKS

By Prof. H. D. Munroe)

It is usually found (that cannibalism is rare where small numbers of chicks are brooded together and in brooder houses with the temperature and ventilation conditions satisfactory.

In order to keep chicks from crowding and to give the pullets more room, cockerels should be separated from the pullets as soon as possible. Put them in another pen, force them to broiler size and sell as soon as possible.

Unless chicks are kept busy in one way or another, such vices as tail or toe picking are likely to start. One method of keeping them busy is to supply ample feeding space—enough feed boxes so that all chicks can eat at one time. And then see that there is feed in them at all times.

Chicks should be supplied with plenty of green feed each day until they are let our on range. Probably the most neglected part of chick feeding is the succulent or green feed. Birds raised in confinement sould be given green feed at least twice a day.

When the chicks are confined to the house it is a good plan to darken the house on bright sunny days by covering the windows with dark cloth.

If chicks start to toe picking; first find the cause and correct it. Paint the affected parts with coal tar or a similar material. Picking usually stops when the birds are on range.

WELL STOCKED BASKET MAKES MENDING EASY

Busy homemakers and especially the mothers of small children know a well stocked sewing box is as necessary as a well-stocked pantry. There are always so many little repairs to make, small garments to be run up and last-minute buttons and tapes to sew on, that the right materials must be on hand.

Among the most useful of these are two or three bolts of white and black elastic in the widths that experience shows you need most frequently. The quarter-inch, half-inch and inch widths are probably the most useful for the work box. It is not much of a task to run new elastic in Johnny's sagging romper legs or Mary's bloomers, if you have fresh, new, live elastic at hand to slip in. If one must remember to buy half or three-quarter yards necessary, the garment is apt to be out of service several days. Also you will probably have those aggravating three or four inches left over which you don't know whether to throw away or to keep on the off chance of needing just that length

With a whole bolt to cut from, one uses exactly the amount needed, without a half-inch of wasted elastic. Here are a few of the uses for elastic which are continually coming up in the average household: straps for bedroom slippers, brassieres, bloomers, rompers, boudoir caps, corners on card table covers, ironing board covers, straps for the children's leggings, renewing elastic in shoe pockets, bands for note books and portfolios, and many more will suggest themselves from time to time.

By getting good quality of elastic to start with, and taking no ordinary precaution as not keeping it over or near a radiator or stove, the elastic will remain alive and in good condition indefinitely. In fact, genuine Hickory elastic will keep its stretch and snap for months and months, and always outwears the garment in which it is sewn.

COVERALL APRON SAVES WASHING FOR HOUSEWIFE

There's no excuse for any woman going about her work looking dishevelled and unattractive. House frocks of today, even the least expensive ones, are smartly cut and becomingly trimmed. The boudoir cap, worn while working, has mercifully disappeared. Work aprons of the quickly soiled and easily mussed variety have been displaced by sturdy yet attractive aprons of rubberized gingham which save and protect the dress underneath.

Every housewife needs at least two or three of Hickory coverall aprons. One should be kept for general work about the kitchen—preparing vegetables, baking and cooking. Another should be kept for cleaning days when there is heavy, dirty work to be done and, where there is a baby in the family, a third apron should be kept for wearing when he is bathed, changed or dressed, and should be kept handy in the bathroom or nursery.

And here's a secret—in one household at least, the head of the house insists on having a rubber work apron all of his own! It's a fact! He sometimes offers to help dry the dishes or is pressed into service for opening obdurate jars and whipping the cream. His only objection used to be the possibility of splashing a good business suit, and the apron of his own made for happiness all around. It slips over his head and has no strings for him to fumble with.

In selecting these aprons be sure that they are heavily rubberized and amply cut. A skimpy apron that does not properly cover one up is nothing but an annoyance. They come in all manner of color combinations and attractive, novel patterns, as well as in a variety of styles. All Hickory work aprons, too, are designed to slip on and off in a jiffy. To clean the apron use a dampened cloth and pure soap flakes, and wipe off with a dry cloth.

WELL-FITTED BELT MAKES FOR COMFORT

There is one rather intimate article in a woman's wardrobe in which she should follow no set style or fashion, but use her own judgment and taste entirely, and that is in the matter of selecting a sanitary belt. Every woman should select the style that she finds gives her the most comfort, most freedom of movement. Doctors and nurses alike will tell you it is of great importance that the belt worn at this time should not be binding or restricting in any way. Perfect rest at night as well as comfort during the day depends on this. No one belt will afford this for every woman. Each must select the type suitable for her particular figure.

For this reason there is a Hickory sanitary belt to suit every type, each with its taped-on safety pins which cannot be mislaid. There is the all-elastic belt, the belt with the deep or narrow shield and elastic inserts, and the mesh belt. Then, too, there is the dainty little petite belt, a scant half-inch circlet of silk elastic for the debutante, and which wins favor because it comes in a minute Dresden silk bag all its own, ready to be dropped in the handbag for use in an emergency. This belt should be worn low on the hips and fairly snug. Another pocket model is of inch-wide silk elastic, and comes in a dainty satin envelope case and is especially suitable for traveling. Both these pocket-size belts make thoughtful and appreciated bridge prizes or bon voyage gifts at slight cost.

Select whatever style belt affords the most comfort but own at least two, as daintiness suggests a change during the week's wear, to say nothing of having an extra one on hand for emergency.

WEAR DRESS SHIELDS FOR HEALTH, SAFETY

Personal daintiness is absolutely essential to perfect grooming and social success. The American girl and woman undoubtedly offend less frequently in this respect than do those of any other country, due to our standard of living and general education in matters of personal hygiene. Nevertheless, every woman recognizes that it is only by faithful, unending diligence that she can keep herself the acme of daintiness at all times. Deodorants will help, but these must be used with discretion, as to check perspiration too completely is to imperil the health or at least to increase the flow in another part of the body where it may be just as objectionable and as ruinous to clothing. The safest way is to equip each frock with Hickory dress shields especially suited to its style and occasion. This avoids all possibility of the repulsive under-arm stain, and yet does not interfere with nature's plan for eliminating poisons and waste matter from the system.

Old-time shields were bulky and unattractive in appearance. Today's shields meet the popular demand for beauty as well as for comfort and convenience. There are styles for sports attire, service weights for the larger woman, dainty wisps of silk and fenth erweight rubber for the afternoon frock and almost invisible slips of crescent moons for wearing with evening dresses. And, of course, this being a color age, Hickory shields can be had in a large range of shades as well as of shapes, weights and materials.

A good shield responds to good care from its wearer. Wash your shields frequently in lukewarm water and soap flakes, squeeze out the water—don't wring, and don't put them on a hot radiator nor iron them. Be careful in sewing or pinning them in not to penetrate the thin rubber interlining. A little care will keep your shields always sweet and fresh and lengthen their life, at the same time enabling them to do their work of protecting your clothes from the perils of perspiration.

THE BEST BOOSTER FOR YOUR BUSINESS IN DeKALB COUNTY

ST. JOE NEWS.

NEWS MAKES A GOOD PAPER, SO SEND IT IN TO US.

VOL. XLIV | ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, MAY 1, 1930 | NUMBER 18

Fish and Game Club Information

Fisheries: On April 1st, four crews began the work of exterminating undesirable fish in lakes, with stations at Bass lake, Winona lake, Sylvan lake and Wahob lake, respectively. Weather coditions were unfavorable at most of the stations, but the results more than justified the early start at Sylvan lake, where large catches were made of dogfish, gar and carp.

The Riverside and Tri-Lakes hatcheries have finished the hatch of yellow perch eggs procured partly from our own hatcheries and partly from commercial fishermen in Michigan. These same hatcheries are now running 244 quarts of pike-perch eggs procured in Michigan through the courtesy of commercial fishermen and the Department of Conservation of that state.

Spawning grounds where in fishing is prohibited until July 1, have been staked off in parts of the following lakes: Wawasee, Center, Simonton, Bass, North and South Pine, Stone (Laporte county) Stone (Lagrange county,) Long (Wabash county,) and Bruce.

A record number, 1892 of applications for fish for stocking purposes was received by the Division for the season. The time for filing these applications expired April 1.

The season will close May 1 for the taking of black bass, silver bass, bluegills, yellow perch, pike, pickerel, rock-bass, redeared sunfish, pike-perch and crappie. Observance of this law is urgently requested of the public for the protection of the nesting fishes.

Game Reserve: At the Brown County State Game Reserve, turkeys and pheasants have been laying, and a few eggs already have been set. Planting of evergreen trees in this reserve as well as in the Jasper Pulaski reserve have been completed.

Division Employes: Recent employment of the following in the division has been announced: Game warden service: Herschel Corbin Princeton; W. H. Everson, Richmond; Clarence C. Geyer, South Bend; A. E. Holstine, Evansville; James Marquess, Russellville; Floyd A. McCally, Winamac; Henry W. Moesch, Indianapolis; Harold A. Perley, Angola; Roy Rohrabaugh, Lafayette; Jas. Staton, Washington.

Fisheries service: Lewis Harding, Karl Topp and G. W. Lawrence, on crews removing undesirable fish; Hans C. Hansen and Abb Enyeart, hatcheries.

Game reserve: Hobert Miller.

Warden Service: In the month of March the wardens made 37 arrests, resulting in 31 convictions. Five prosecutions are pending and one was dismissed. Among the arrests were 9 for possession and use of seines, nets or traps, six for hunting waterfowl out of season, and one for dyna miting. The fines and costs amounted to $896.25.

MORTUARY

Saxe P. Hadsell, son of Byron A. Hadsell and Cornelia (Streator) Hadsell, was born in the Coburntown community, DeKalb County, Indiana, December 15, 1876, and he had gone for surgical attention, April 21, 1930, having attained to the age of 53 years, 4 months and 6 days.

October 1, 1902, he was united in marriage to Inez Driver. To this union two children were born, Portia Irene Hough, of Columbus, Ohio, and Paul Leroy Hadsell, of Portland, Indiana, and one grandson, Paul William Hough. These share together the sorrow attendant upon the passing of their father and husband.

The life of the deceased, except a short period of his youth spent with his parents in Angola, was lived in the Coburntown community. He was born one mile west of the Coburn's Corners Church. When 18 months old his parents removed to the farm one mile north of his birthplace, which place the deceased owned and where he resided at the time of his death. However, after his marriage he lived for about eight years on the adjoining farm now owned by Keplar Shull.

The deceased became a member of the Coburn's Corners Church of Christ in 1909, under the ministry of the Rev. J. A. Brown, and has continued in full fellowship with that congregation until his death. He possessed deeply settled religious convictions, and loved to converse on religion and Bible subjects. He greatly deplored human frailties, his own and others, and was often sad that a closer walk with the Redeemer of mankind was not realized.

The deceased followed farming all his ilfe. He was very successful and happy in his vocation until he was overtaken by ill health. For many years his activities have been limited by physical inabilities which could not be overcome, and from which he has suffered more than his friends and neighbors can know. But now he rests, and we pause to say farewell.

Farewell, our father,,
Rest with your friends.
Our world grows small
Shut in with timely ends.

Our suns all set
And all our days are done,
But sunless light and life are yours:
Your day has just begun.

The funeral services were held on last Wednesday afternoon from the Coburn's Corners Church with Rev. J. O. Rose of Angola and Rev. J. N. Schles, officiating. Burial in Alton cemetery

COMPLETING PLANS FOR BIBLE SCHOOL

Perhaps one of the most enjoyable and profitable vacations spent by the children, is that of the Vacation Bible School, which will begin at the school house on Monday morning of next week.

Completion of the details will be made this week, when the officers and teachers will talk the plans over together.

Every parent is asked to support the school, by sending their children and encourage the officers by having regular attendance at each morning session.

The school will be financed by the co-operating churches of the township, paying $1.00 to the school for each pupil registered, that is enrolled in their school. In fact every child is asked to attend whether enrolled in any of the township Sunday Schools or not.

Hollis Dilley will have charge of the transportation and each school will enlist its autos to assist in hauling the children to and from school.

Those who have the registration, will call on the parents by Sunday if enrollment has not already been made.

FORD PUTS "FIRST THINGS FIRST"

In a recent statement made by Harry W. Bennett, of the Ford private police force, it was made very plain just what Henry Ford thinks of the liquor business in relation to industry—especially his industry. Mr. Bennett says, "On orders of the Ford Motor Company" every employee of the company who is found drinking, either in his home or in a Dearborn speakeasy, will be discharged immediately. This order will be carried out in the Ford plant in or near Berlin, Germany, although the order to drink elsewhere besides the Ford plant will meet with no opposition from the company. But in the United States more rigidity will be shown. Carl A. Brooks, Dearborn Police Chief said that if any Ford employees were taken in raids that they would be reported to the company for dismissal.

The recent wet drive of the liquor interests and the report of the Literary Digest poll has made things wet for the instant but when men who know and can remember ancient history can plainly see how disastrous a return to the old days would be. Conditions have changed in the meantime.

No longer can we trust a boozy nation to turn the wheels of industry and transportation without catastrophic results. This attitude of the Ford company looks like an abridgment of the personal liberty or the running of the private affairs of the individual from the surface, but Mr. Ford makes it plain that a person does not necessarily have to work for him if he don't want to and at the same time proclaims his right to hire sober men if he wants to. He figures that there are enough dry men in the country to run his plant and he can get them to work for him and if other industrial plants want to hire the other class of labor that is alright with him. The Ford Motor Company has sought to influence any employee against his own will but simply stipulates its own policy and sticks to it.

The SANDMAN STORY

ABOUT ARCAL SHEEP

THEY had been quiet all day. People had come to watch them and to look at them.

People had made remarks about them, but they had not said a word.

They had made hardly any sounds at all.

They had felt, at times, as though they would like to make faces at some of the people who said rude things, but they didn't.

They just let the people say what they wanted to say and paid little attention to them.

After the people had gone they talked a little of how absurd some of them had been, how they had stared and looked, and how foolish and unattractive some of the people in the world are.

"I Come From India," Said Another Arcal Mountain Sheep.

"I come from Persia, I come from Persia, yes, indeed, I come from Persia," said the Arcal Mountain Sheep, another one of the wild sheep family.

"Well, I come from India, yes indeed I do," said another Arcal Mountain Sheep.

"We both come from different places," said the first Arcal Mountain Sheep, whose name was Ray.

"But we both belong to the same family," said the second Arcal Mountain Sheep, whose name was Bobby.

"Shows how smart we are," said Ray.

"We have different homes throughout the countries," he continued. "Ah, we're fine, smart, Arcal Mountain Sheep, we are."

"We are, we are," agreed Bobby.

"Well, I was going to say," commenced Ray, "that though I come from Persia, from the south of Persia, which is the opposite of the north, I believe, most Arcal Mountain Sheep come from India."

"What is south and what is north?" asked Bobby.

"South is down and north is up," said Ray.

"Like the earth and sky, I suppose," said Bobby.

"Not at all," said Ray.

"When folks talk of the southern or northern part of a country they are not speaking of the sky at all."

"Poor sky," said Bobby. "It's left out of it entirely. But, I suppose it's too big to feel hurt about it."

"It has enough," said Ray.

"It is so high up no one can scold it.

"It can rain or snow or sleet, or the sun may shine, and we can't call up to the sky and say:

"'Please don't do that, up there.'

"The sky couldn't hear us in the first place, and besides people have learned that they mustn't talk to a lofty object like the sky in any too familiar a manner.

"They may say they wish it wouldn't rain or they wish it had turned out to be a fair day, but they don't directly ask anything of the sky."

"That's true, the sky certainly has its own way," agreed Bobby.

"The southern part of a country," said Ray, "is the lower part of the country, south of the upper, or northern part of the country.

"When we say up north we mean up at one end of the land, and when we say down south we mean down toward the other end."

"You'd make a fine school teacher," said Bobby grinning.

"No matter," said Ray, "if I am not a professor, for I know you mean I make a mighty poor one.

"They never have made an Arcal Mountain Sheep a professor that I have ever heard of and I don't suppose they will begin now.

"But, ah, we have something for which to be thankful.

"We have lovely shaggy hair, we are small and dainty, and best of all, we have wonderful circling horns!"

And that was quite true.

For the Arcal Mountain Sheep are famous for their beautiful, big horns.

And they are quite pleased that they have them. Oh, yes, indeed.

They are quite, quite pleased about their horns.

For Meditation

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

HAPPINESS

THE desire for happiness is universal. What is happiness? Frequently the remark is made, "if I only had plenty of money I would be happy." The idea which prompts a statement like this is that money can supply those things which bring happiness. Even if this were true the fact remains that some persons who possess all the money they want are not happy, and a number of people who are poor, so far as this world's goods is concerned, are very happy. We also hear the remark, "if I were famous I would be happy." The biography of many famous people clearly indicates that their fame brought them no happiness. On the contrary their success brought burdens rather than freedom from worry and strain. The attainment of one's cherished ideal is regarded as a guarantee of happiness. The most unhappy persons are often found among the ranks of the incorrigible idealists.

L. A. Barrett.

The strange thing about the search for happiness is that the more we seek to find it the less liable are we to find it. When we seek happiness for its own sake it somehow seems to slip away just at the time we think we have found it. Some one has said that happiness is like a butterfly, which, when pursued is always just beyond your grasp, but which, if you will sit down quietly, may alight upon you. Hawthorne wrote a fine sentence when he said "Happiness in this world, when it comes, comes incidentally. Make it the object of pursuit, and it leads us a wild-goose chase, and it never is attained." In other words happiness must find us. It is not a matter of trying to attain it by our own effort so much as making it possible for it to possess us. Happiness will seek and find us, we do not need to go looking for it.

An analysis of happiness convinces us that it is not a material or even physical possession. It is a spirit, a state of mind, a mental attitude. It is attributable more to the emotions of the heart than to the achievements of the mind or health of the body. It comes to us when we are in tune to receive it. A disposition, acquired by a right attitude toward life, interpreted in terms of unselfishness and service, invites happiness. Happiness is something within us, not outside of us. Happiness finds us when we live for something higher than our own selves.

Community Building

"Safety" Put First in New York Model City

Some day it may occur to the powers that approve subdivision projects to ask the seemingly obvious question: "What has been provided to make for the safety of the people who are to live here?" One suburban development has made safety a prime consideration and as a result it is being featured as a phenomenon. A writer in a current periodical says Radburn, N. J., is without doubt "the safest populated spot in America." Radburn is a suburb of New York city laid out primarily as a residential district.

These are some of the safety features: A series of courts with about 20 houses each grouped about them. Dead-end streets giving the only access for motor cars to the courts. No sidewalks along motor roads, but pedestrians must keep to pathways through the courts or gardens. Only garages and kitchens and service entrances to the houses look toward the motor roads so that only persons wishing to go to automobiles have any reason to enter the vehicle area. Children go to school by the parkway paths without crossing motor highways, subways being provided wherever necessary.

The common sense of such an arrangement is apparent. It provides quiet, seclusion and safety for the home, factors worthy of the greatest consideration.—Kansas City Times.

Maryland Plans Lining Roadsides With Trees

An extensive tree-planting program along the principal highways of the state is planned by the Maryland department of forestry, according to F. W. Besley, chief forester.

A concerted effort is to be made by Mr. Besley and his assistants to obtain greater beauty along the Maryland roads.

Not only will the forestry department furnish and supervise the planting of roadside shade trees, but towns and cities of the state have the privilege of calling on the state forester for improvement in tree planting.

Mr. Besley plans to set out thousands of shade trees along roadsides and in the nurseries. Trees for planting on roadside property are furnished free from the state's nursery at the University of Maryland's college park headquarters.

"The forestry department has undertaken an educational program throughout the state, as the planting of trees along the public highways is now recognized as an improvement second only in importance to the building and maintaining of the highways themselves," Mr. Besley said.

"While trees are furnished free at the College Park nursery, transportation charges must be paid by the applicant."

Applicable to All States

Florida has miles and miles of splendid roadways that can be made all the more splendid and attractive through roadside beautification, such as already has been done, or is being done, in many localities in the state. There is growing appreciation in Florida of roadside beautification. This is as it should be, for Florida extends an invitation to all the world, for its people to come here and enjoy the state's many natural beauties, not the least of which is the beauty along roadsides that have been planted with trees and shrubbery, and in many instances with flowers, all of which adds greatly to Florida's natural attractiveness.—Florida Times-Union.

Foundation of Citizenship

The solidity, contentment and close family feeling that are found to the greatest degree in owned homes, leave an inevitable stamp on the children reared under these desirable conditions. They come early into contact with the ideals of home making, of ambition, economy, pride and responsibility, which are the very foundations of our culture. They reap the moral and physical benefits of light, air and play space and almost invariably make better associations than otherwise would be possible.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Good Example to Follow

As a result of its recent clean-city campaign, Sydney, New South Wales, claims to be one of the spotless cities in the world. The change from litter-strewn streets to tidy thoroughfares was effected by a city announcement that after a certain date anyone who failed to use the receptacles provided, and threw even a street car transfer on the street, would be fined. Officials say that almost automatically the litter problem ceased to exist.

Zoning Regulations

There are 754 cities, towns and villages in the United States which have zoning regulations. Of the 68 cities having populations of more than 100,000, 56 are zoned. Taking the total number, 754, it is found that 475 have comprehensive ordinances regulating the use, height and area of buildings.

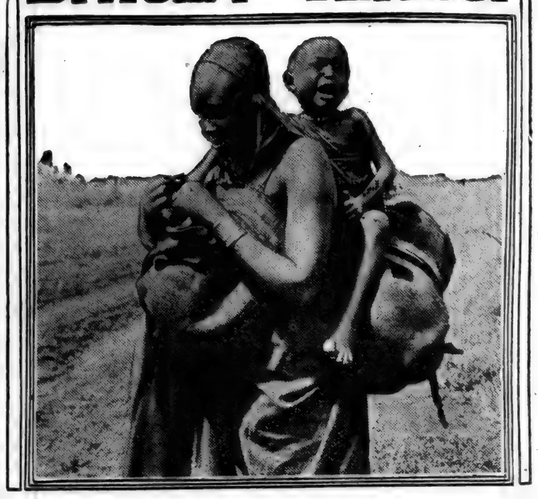
Britain in Africa



Mother of Kenya Colony, British East Africa, Carrying Her Child, as All Burdens Are Carried There, by a Strap Slung Across Her Forehead.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

IN HIS hunting trip to Kenya and Uganda provinces in British East Africa, the prince of Wales, like most other hunters in that region of the world, made his headquarters at Nairobi, capital of Kenya colony. The largest shops in town cater to the sportsman, and natives in the vicinity earn a livelihood as "safari boys," those who bear the supplies for the hunting parties. Specially equipped autos now follow the jungle trails and one may purchase a different type of gun to hunt each variety of animal.

In its early days Nairobi was known as "the tin town of East Africa," because of its houses and shops constructed of tin and corrugated iron. Handsome stone structures have generally replaced those earlier buildings. Wide, paved streets have supplanted dirt roads. Automobiles mingle with bicycles and jinrickshas drawn by natives. Nairobi is the capital of British East Africa and its attractive government buildings and large hotels give the city a cosmopolitan touch. The government of the city is vested in an elected council. Women have a municipal vote.

The climate of Nairobi resembles a perpetual Indian summer. Therefore plant life flourishes. Native English flora transplanted to Nairobi grows hardily. Gardens of hollyhocks and pinks and masses of roses make the suburbs resemble an English countryside.

Most of the whites in Nairobi are English. The native population consists mainly of the Kikuyu, a mild mannered, agreeable people, and the Masai, once the most famous warrior tribe of East Africa. The bulk of the trade is in the hands of the East Indians, of whom there are several thousand in the city.

Venerable Land.

Though Kenya calls itself the newest of the British colonies, it is one of the oldest lands of the earth. Theodore Roosevelt, in speaking of his African hunting trip, said that the Masai often reminded him of the pictures of the soldiers of Thothmes and Rameses made by the ancient Egyptian sculptors, in that thier faces were resolute and had clear-cut features. The same noted traveler said of this tribe that though the women were scrupulously clothed, "the husbands and brothers, very ostentatiously wear no clothing for purposes of decency."

Still Hunt "Sacred Book."

The Gallas, though they are now of little importance either politically or economicilly, take great pride in their past. They say that they once had a sacred book, like the Bible or the Koran, but a cow ate it, and not being certain about the particular animal, in their search they are still opening the stomach of every cow that dies.

The most effective weapon of the Masai and Andorobo is the arrow which they poison with the Acocanthera Schimperi, a small tree. They boil the leaves and branches until the mixture becomes thick and pitch-like in appearance, and place it on sheets of bark which they hide high on the branches of trees away from the children, until it is needed. When an animal is shot with an arrow dipped in the poison, it dies almost immediately. The natives cut out the flesh around the wound as soon as possible and throw it away. The remainder is eaten and the blood is drunk. This love of blood as an article of food is common among many African tribes, several of them going so far as to bleed their cattle and drink the blood hot or mix it with their porridge.

The mixed breed known as Swahilis, who live along the coast of the mainland and among the thousand-and-one representatives of other peoples of the world to be found in Zanzibar, have one claim to prominence among Kanya tribes—their language is the one in common use in the colony. If one speaks Swahili he can find some one to converse with him from Natal to Aden and from Mombasa to the Congo.

Uganda, westward of, and farther inland than Kenya, is a land where 30 years ago natives and wild animals roamed at will, seldom seen by the white man. Now the protectorate is an important source of Britain's cotton.

Land of Cotton.

Hemmed in from the sea by Kenya colony on the east, the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan on the north, Lake Victoria and Tanganyika territory on the south, and the jungles of the Belgian Congo on the west, the protectorate, which is about twice the size of New York state, has become self-supporting. And 90 per cent of Uganda's exports are cotton.

The cotton crop in 1905 yielded about 350 bales. Now more than 200,000 bales are produced annually. It is not the white population but the black, woolly-headed, flat-nosed natives who are the Uganda "cotton barons." There are about 1,800 white inhabitants among a total population of more than 3,000,000. Many of the whites are experts who operate experimental farms and instruct the natives in cotton culture. More than a half-million acres of cotton-growing land are tended by the tribesmen. In eastern Uganda, where the best cotton is grown, native chiefs have large holdings. Their tribesmen take keen interest in small plantations, some of which are smaller than half an acre.

One outlet of the protectorate to the sea is through ports on Lake Victoria where lake boats transport freight to Kisumu, British East Africa, the western terminus of the Uganda railway that does not touch the land for which it was named. Freight may also move by rail from the lake, 62 miles north to Namasagali, the head of steamboat traffic on the Nile. A branch railway line to the protectorate from the railways of Kenya has also been constructed. Mombasa, at the eastern end of the Kenya railroad system, is Uganda's Indian ocean port.

Cities Replace Native Huts.

Where small native villages once stood, the traveler now sees prosperous towns. Entebbe, the capital, is a beautiful little town of bungalows surrounded by well-kept lawns bordering wide streets, shaded from the tropical sun by huge trees. It occupies a peninsula almost surrounded by the blue water of Lake Victoria.

The government house is a gabled bungalow overlooking the lake. Save for a little business carried on in the Indian bazaars and the arrival of lake boats at the pier twice a week, Entebbe is quiet. It suggests a summer resort rather than the seat of government of a large, prosperous colony. Although the capital is little more than a stone's throw from the equator, its climate is not unpleasant. The thermometer reaches 115 degrees by day but the nights are cool, the mercury sometimes dropping as low as 50 degrees.

Contrary to popular opinion that central Africa is junglebound, Uganda has a large network of roads linking up various trade centers. On the roads between important towns it is not uncommon to see natives riding bicycles and driving pleasure automobiles and motor trucks. And beside the road, modern steel plows are often seen turning the soil that only a few years ago had never been touched by anything but the crudest implements.

From Jinja one can see Mount Elgon rising more than 14,000 feet. In Uganda it is surpassed in height only by Ruwenzori, on the western border, which is more than 2,000 feet higher.

Natives Accept Civilization.

There are numerous tribes in Uganda but it is the Buganda natives with whom the traveler usually comes in contact. The forests of the west are inhabited by pigmies. Lions, leopards, monkeys, hippopotamuses and elephants are still to be found there. The Buganda natives are intelligent, and according to the missionaries, easy to convert.

Both men and women usually wear a wide, cotton cloth, sometimes brightly colored, draped about their bodies from the shoulders to the knees. The cloth worn by a native may have been made from the raw product of his own plantation, after having been woven in the mills at Manchester, England. Tall, clumsily built and ugly, the men are brave, polite to travelers, and happy. The women, while not beautiful, usually wear a smile rather than the glum countenance of some of their neighboring sisters.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

TO BE A "BARNSTORMER"

NO NEED to ask anybody in the profession—that is, the theatrical business—what is meant by a barnstormer. The term is well known, and, to many of the old-timers brings back happy or not-so-happy recollections, depending possibly on just how keen is one's memory.

However, even the rest of the world probably knows that a barnstormer is an actor who performs in the small towns, traveling from place to place, and almost literally, as the saying goes, living in a valise.

This term "barnstormer" seems puzzling until the information is furnished that it is an allusion to the days when our small towns did not boast the theatrical emporiums that they do today and when many a play was staged in a farmer's roomy barn.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

CROSSING THE RIVER

A COMMUNICATION to the American Folk-Lore society from Baldwinsville, N. Y., speaks of a superstition general in that part of the state that a funeral procession should not cross a river on its way to the grave. This calls to mind the scene in the Aeneid where Aeneas sees the spirits of the dead clamoring to be ferried across Cocytus and being refused ferriage by the boatman because their bodies were still unburied. And the ghost of Patroclus in the Iliad begging for sepulture of his body so that he might cross the stygian stream and enter Hades. Many similar instances might be cited from the ancient classics.

It has already been noted in this series how primitive man conceived the soul as hovering near the body after death, still entangled in its fleshly tenement, as it were, a condition from which burial alone could relieve it. Many current superstitions of today hinge upon this idea. This New York state superstition—perhaps it exists in many other states also—would appear to be one of these. We have in it two elements handed down from days when the world was new. A disembodied spirit, in order to reach the abode of spirits, must cross a stream, and a disembodied spirit cannot cross over that stream until the body has received sepulture. From the plains of Troy to Baldwinsville, N. Y., is a far cry in space and time; but not in superstition.

DAVID'S PART ON LIFE'S STAGE

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

MONICA'S smile was coaxing as she looked up at the quiet face of the man beside her.

"Please tell me what you do, David. Why must you have a secret from me?"

He flushed guiltily. "Surely you can trust me, hon; some day I'll explain it all."

The clear brown eyes clouded. That age-old line: "Trust me." Her brothers had warned her against David Watson, telling her with unpleasant implications in their voices that mysteries were usually sinister. Gambling was one of the things mentioned. David did not work mornings and that looked odd.

"I once read a story about a man of mystery and he turned out to be the town hangman."

David's laugh rang out at this. "I'm not a hangman, Monica. I don't ask you to marry me immediately. Just have faith in me for a short time longer."

"I don't like it. I think I'll stop seeing you until . . . until . . ." she paused. She had intended to tease him into surrender, but it was at that moment that she saw the girl. In her mind the word was in capital letters. The girl was audaciously pretty, although her dress was shabby and her glance at Monica's David was filled with amused recognition. In the brief pause that followed the air seemed tense, mysterious—then with an almost imperceptible wave of a thin hand the girl moved on and David lifted his hat.

"You'd better join your friend," said Monica. "I think she wants you," and she mingled with the crowd of pedestrians who were waiting for the green light at the corner.

He made no effort to detain her, but his face was sober as he, too, was swallowed up by the hurrying mob of workers and shoppers.

"So glad I met you, dear," gushed Monica's sister-in-law, Maud. "I'm on my way to a fitting and I want you to take Sally up to the playroom here," she nodded toward the great department store before which she had paused. "There's a clown there who has a good line and the children are all mad about him."

Sally giggled. "He's terribly funny, Aunt Monica. I wish you'd stay awhile and watch him. He's named 'Pierrot.'" Her aunt turned into the store and made her way to an elevator.

"Don't allow Sally to leave the playroom for any reason," ordered Monica, tipping the maid in charge.

"The clown, the clown," came in childish shrieks, and smiling at the uproar Monica left to keep an engagement.

At 5:20 she rushed back, wondering if her sister-in-law had called for Sally, whom Monica had forgotten. Only ten minutes before closing time!

The smell of smoke sent a pang of fear to her heart. Her way was barred before she had reached the elevators. "Keep back, madam. No cause for alarm," repeated the floorman suavely, "the store is closing."

"I've got a niece up in the playroom," cried Monica wildly pushing at the figure barring her way.

"The playroom is closed. The store is closing. The smoke is nothing, merely a—" He turned aside, his arm firm against her struggles, and nodded to a clerk, who took his place.

The elevators had ceased running when Monica opened her eyes. The smell of smoke was very strong and the air thick with it. She had been carried to the entrance during her faint and was sitting on a stool, her head against a clerk who was dashing water in her face.

"Want me to put you in a taxi?"

Monica struggled to her feet and made a swift dash past the girl. "I've got to get up there. Sally, little Sally, is there!"

A fireman sprang toward her. "Out, lady, there's a fire upstairs!"

The air was filled with cries and shrieks of sirens as more fire engines sped up. The faces of the outpouring shoppers were smoke-stained and drawn. Sobs mingled with orders and women fought to get back into the store.

An elevator door clanged and a man's voice rang out: "The last load. Every child is here. Make way!"

An oddly garbed figure with burning eyes stumbled past Monica. In his arms were two small figures and just ahead, almost fainting from fright, tottered the playroom maid with a third child in her arms.

Monica dashed forward. The voice had effectually aroused her and she tore Sally from the sheltering arms.

From a face smeared with white grease-paint burned the eyes of David, his mouth a scarlet gash above the ruffled collar.

"My clown got us all out," Sally was sobbing, "my own dear clown. The firemen told him to go, but he only laughed at them. Auntie, he's burned his hands. Looky!"

"David, David," breathed the girl, totally oblivious of the surging crowd, holding Sally firmly with one hand while her left hand sought that of the Pierrot.

He winced as she touched his seared hand. "All the children are out, Monica. I—I didn't mean you to know my occupation," the bizarre mouth twisted in an ironical grimace that hurt the watcher to see, "but I had to take the work I could do, for I had to have money at once."

Belatedly she noticed his injuries and urged him toward the corner and around it. "We'll get a taxi and have your burns treated."

Sally lifted her smoky face. "We didn't get burned. He put big covers over us and wet them at the bubbly fountain. Say, Aunt Monica, I want an ice cream cone."

The incongruous request in the very face of tragedy served to lessen the tension and David turned to his sweetheart. "Are you going to forgive me for the mean part I'm playing on life's stage just now, hon?"

"Forgive," she repeated ashamedly. "I can never make up to you for my doubts. I can't even," a shaky sound intended for a laugh trembled through her white lips, "ask you about that remarkably pretty girl."

"My kid sister, Monica. She ran away from home and I followed to take care of her. Dad was so angry he stopped our money supplies, and that's how I happened to be turning my poor talent to account in amusing the children. She is returning to St. Louis tonight and—I need no longer remain incognito."

Demand for Products of Truck Garden and Field

By rights, the vegetarians ought to be the most prosperous and lively cult in this country, and yet you hardly ever hear of a vegetarian any more. They used to hold meetings to denounce carnivorous practices, and they had little restaurants here and there in the larger cities where nut concoctions were made to resemble wiener schnitzels and where the humble lentil appeared in a hundred disguises. It would be hard to find a vegetarian restaurant now, but it is ten times as easy to get tasty vegetables.

The reason is that we have all become vegetarians of a sort. All kinds of figures are available to show that Americans eat more lettuce and less meat. We cry for spinach and are unhappy without our salads. Fresh vegetables abound in the middle of the winter, so that no American need drop them from his diet.

The vegetarian clubs had little to do with the change. What converted us was the vitamin. As soon as we began to worship at the vitamin shrine, vegetarianism came into its own. Eating the fruits of the truck garden because we had to have vitamins, we presently found out that we were eating them because we liked them. Then along came the slender silhouette, and the cry was more vegetables! Vitamins and reducing diets did the trick. Nobody has ever seen a vitamin, but there is magic in the word.—Spokane Spokesman-Review.

Women Geographers

The Society of Women Geographers says that for active membership in this organization only those women are eligible who have done distinctive work whereby they have added something to the world's store of knowledge concerning the countries in which they have traveled. Among the members are Delia Akeley, who during her last expedition to Africa assembled a natural history collection of African curios which has been purchased by the Newark museum. Elizabeth Dickey in 1927-28 made extended explorations in Brazil and Venezuela. In 1928-29 she accompanied the expedition to the Maipures rapids, Rio Orinoco, which was led by her husband for the Museum of the American Indian, George Heye foundation, New York. The Better Part

Apropos of the gossip which linked the name of a famous movie star with that of an oil magnate recently at Palm Beach, Lord Charles Leverhoim said at a tea:

"It is not true that they are engaged. The young lady has, I know, refused him ten times. Her attitude is rather that of the beautiful Milo. Beaumesnil, the famous musical comedy actress who, when an elderly admirer offered her his fortune and his heart, replied:

"'The first half will be enough for me.'"

Forget Enmity in Hunger

The government's "bread line" in Glacier National park has been one of the most popular animal rendezvous in the Rocky mountain region. Here it was that hunger reduced animals of all kinds to a common level; here it was that internecine strife was forgone in the desire to obtain food. Among the patrons of the government dole were weasels, mink, crows, blue jays, mountain sheep, deer, bear, magpies and other birds and animals.

Roman Roads in England

Every road map of England shows tiny dotted lines where, in the course of centuries, in spite of the growth of the villages and the fluctuation in importance of the market towns, the old Roman road still exists, sometimes as a mere cart track, and at others merely a line of hedges, still standing as a monument of the busy life which passed away before even William the Conqueror gathered his armies across the Channel.—New York Times.

"Everyone Raves About My Rolls, Cakes and Breads," Says Mrs. Galloway

"They Could Make Just As Good, If They Used Gold Medal 'Kitchen-tested' Flour"

Mrs. Jake Galloway, Beaman, Iowa

"At the Iowa State Fair last year I won twenty prizes. A first on Cloverleaf Rolls, third on Nut Bread as well as several seconds and several thirds on different cakes—all made with Gold Medal 'Kitchen-tested' Flour. Everyone raves about my rolls, cakes and breads, but I tell them they could make just as good if they used GOLD MEDAL 'Kitchen-tested' Flour. I can surely recommend it as an all-purpose flour."

A Boon to Women All Over the Country

THOUSANDS of women all over the country now know how to bake prize cakes, pies, breads and biscuits every time. They use a new-type flour for all baking purposes—GOLD MEDAL "Kitchen-tested" Flour—that simplifies baking remarkably and banishes the cause of most baking failures.

Failures, experts found, were mostly due to the fact that 2 sacks of the same flour often acted differently, even with the same recipe... it was not uniform in oven action.

So now all GOLD MEDAL Flour is "Kitchen-tested" before it comes to you. As each batch comes through the mill it is tested by actual baking—bread, cakes, biscuits, pastries—in an oven just like yours. Only flour which acts the same perfect way every time is allowed to go out to you. Thus you know in advance exactly what your results will be.

Special "Kitchen-tested" Recipes In Every Sack
(Changed Every Three Months)

Please accept, free of charge, simplified recipes for 12 of Betty Crocker's most delicious baking creations. Recipes for the daintiest cakes, the finest cookies, the most popular pastries known. Each one is "simplified" until it is remarkably easy, too.

All 12 of these simplified "Kitchen-tested" recipes are inside every sack of GOLD MEDAL "Kitchen-tested" Flour. You can get a full set today—simply ask your grocer for GOLD MEDAL "Kitchen-tested" Flour.

"Just a few words of praise of your medicine. Nothing gave me relief and health as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did. I am a practical nurse and was so rundown that I was unable to work. I used to suffer agonies at times and would have to lie down the biggest part of the day. After two bottles of Vegetable Compound I felt better. Now I have used ten bottles and feel fine. Yellowstone Park Radio Playlet

A re-enactment of the Washburn-Doane expedition, in 1870, which made a discovery journey into what is now Yellowstone park, the greatest scenic wonderland in the Western hemisphere, is the subject matter for the weekly broadcast of the Conoco Adventurers.

Prior to the time of this expedition, various tales had been told by Indians and a few scattered hunters and scouts who had penetrated a short distance into the Montana wonderland, but the American people were extremely doubtful of these tales of boiling springs, geysers, volcanic peaks, and fields carpeted with wild flowers. It remained for the Washburn-Doane expedition to bring back the first authentic data regarding Yellowstone.

A thrilling incident in connection with the expedition, the disappearance and subsequent rescue of Truman Everts, one of the members of the party after he had wandered for nearly a month through the wilderness without weapons or supplies, is included in the Conoco dramatization. The playlet also gives an authentic historical story of the first conception of the plan to make Yellowstone a national park. The program may be heard over the N. B. C. network Thursday at 10 p. m.

His "One Big Moment" Recalled by Doughboy

I journeyed to Kansas City, Mo., June 5, 1919, parked in a hotel, ordered a room, then went out and did some shopping on the main drag, salvaging an alarm clock, a pair of pajamas and a sergeant's whistle. Then to my room, tipped the bellhop two francs, gave him the whistle, instructed him to come to my room at 3 a. m., open the door and blow the whistle and to yell, "Outside!"

Now this is where my big moment came in. I threw one of my hobnail shoes at that bellhop and sent him running down the hall. The other shoe I threw at the alarm clock, smashing it, then turned over, covered my head, and slept to my heart's content. Now, that was my big moment.—St. Louis Post Dispatch.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

Don't let politics get into your politics.

When we get to hunting around for our neighbors faults we usually find our own.

Just what influences are responsible for the criminal crop in the world, are the problems that cause educators to scratch their bald heads.

If a person were to tell us that we should love ourselves as we love our neighbor, we would send for the nut wagon. That would be thinking backward for most of us.

A short story: No fuss, no muss.

And now comes the latest of the news art—an art telling the fair sex how to slenderize. The art will be called Slenderization.

Well it don't make any difference what the results of the Literary Digest poll will be in the end. You will have the same question to answer every morning any way. Which way is the right way, wet or dry?

Taming a husband seems to be one of the highest callings of a woman. Many a succesful man owes most of his success to the patient woman that has stood the blunt. The reason why woman is rarely given credit for her noble contribution to civilization is because the world didn't see her do it.

When it comes to wives spitting tobacco juice on the wall and furniture of the home and smoking cigarettes and getting all oiled up it makes us wonder where the women and girls have all gone that used to say, "The lips that touch liquor and tobacco shall never touch mine." If recent reports are true there are some communities where parents ought to look into the alleged reports concerning the drinking of beverages and smoking of cigarettes by some petting party–ists. Why newspapers are reluctant in announcing conditions such as these is because the space looks better filled with news of the joyful tidings, variety instead of the pessimistic sort, yet parents should be warned and the newspapers seem to be the only logical and safe way of issuing warnings that will not hurt. The question is simply one of the control of flaming youth through the control of parents who are themselves under the control of higher living. We are reminded that criticism repels and example inspires.

Whether the church has a right to enter politics or not is a good question to debate these days. Some of our damp christians say that the mission of the church is to convert the sinner from sin into the folds of the church and confine all its activities in the pure undefiled application of spirituality. "To render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's and unto God the things that are God's." The dry christian explains that the duties of the church are two fold—to convert the sinner from sin and then mop up the mess that first made it necessary for him to be converted. In other words, the modern churchman knows well that the converted man will not long stay converted with places where he can be diverted near by. The heredity of a man and the environment of a man are two strong opponents of any changed man and must be looked at with the same two eyes of the reader in equal magnitude and significance. It must be remembered that sin is no respector of persons or churches and the only way to change environment is just to change it. A church must meet its enemies on its own ground and everybody knows that vice is in politics. Lets argue straight—if vice has a right in politics—so has the church.

WELCOME GIFT FOR TINY TOTS

For the baby or small child that has "simply everything," a welcome and inexpensive gift is always a pair of Hickory sock garters, which are sure to please his mother because of their usefulness, and His Majesty because of their parade of bunnies, elephants and other nursery motifs dear to the child ish heart. For "dress up", there are also sock garters with silk shirred ribbon, and rosebud trimming.

In either case, it is always the quality of the elastic that counts. Inferior, unresponsive elastic that does not snap back will not wear nor keep the stockings smooth and tight over fat, active little legs. The sock garter should never be worn so tight as to shut off circulation or leave a mark on the tender flesh. If the elastic is of first quality, it will keep up the sock without being worn too snugly. When the garter has stretched as part of the natural wearing process, it is better to discard them and get another pair. And, of course, fastidious mothers keep on hand several pairs in various colors to complete the little one's ensemble.

BABY BIBS IN NURSERY DESIGNS ARE POPULAR

It's a great day when the baby finally deserts his crib and takes his place around the family table in a high chair all his own! Of course, he's going to need a bib, as table manners are not acquired in a day or a week by the best of us and, in the meantime, there are going to be a good many rompers soiled unless he is given something to protect them.

A pretty little bib is one made of sturdy Hickory rubber that can be washed and washed a hundred times, and just in a jiffy, too—no egg or fruit stains to worry about and no ironing, either. The bib can be had in a number of colors and styles, ruffle trimmed and with an amusing nursery design appliqued on, also in rubber. A pocket at the end of the bib will catch crumbs and stray drops as well as make a good resting place for some childish treasure that not even meal time must part him from!

Facts For Farm Folks

Written by THE AGRICULTURAL AUTHORITIES

THE POULTRY CHAIN

(Prof. John E. Ivey)

There are four well known links in the successful poultry chain: 1. Clean Birds; 2. Clean Environment; 3. Clean Management; 4. Clean Feeds. A truer statement has never been made than "a chain is no stronger than its weakest link." Certainly this is true with the Poultry Chain.

By clean birds is meant the hatching or securing of chicks from disease free breeding stock. Breeders that are known for their exceptionally high constitutional vigor.

By clean environment is meant having the building disinfected and also the ground around the brooder house as clean as possible. If absolutely clean ground cannot be provided, then wire sun porches are by all means to be recommended.

By clean management is meant, doing the things for the chicks that should be done and at the time they should be done. Procrastination has wrecked many poultry farms. Know what should be done then, do it.

By clean feeds is meant, providing the chicks with a ration that is properly balanced to meet the requirements. The ingredients should be of the best quality obtainable. Not only should we know the analysis of the feeds but it is also necessary that the ingredients be palatable and of known high quality.

The degree of success in raising poultry depends entirely on how nearly perfect these four links are made on any farm or back lot where chickens are raised. We may be perfect in any three, but the real success depends on the strength of the weakest link.

Don't crowd the chicks. There are two kinds of crowding—first, not having enough floor space for a given number of chicks; second, too many chicks together regardless of floor space. Allow a square foot of floor space for every three chicks.

CAMP TRAINING OFFERED TO TWENTY YOUNG MEN

The Citizens' Military Training Camps campaign for candidates is drawing to a close in Indiana. DeKalb County's quota is 20 and there are yet vacations for a few young men who wish to take advantage of the opportunity to go to camp.

The camp nearest St. Joe is Fort Benjamin Harrison near Indianapolis and will be for the month of July. All new candidates will go to Harrison. Boys who were in camp last summer may go to Camp Knox, Kentucky, if they choose Artillery or Cavalry for training.

The camp will give each young man 30 days of the best sort of vacation. Forenoons are given to military training, drill, etc., and the afternoons are free for the boy to take part in athletics or other devirsions of his choice. Athletics of all kinds are provided at government expense. 150 medals for winners in athletic events will be given in each camp.

The whole month deos not cost the young man a cent. His transportation, food, clothes, equipment, and everything is furnished by the government.

The C. M. T. C. is a federal government program. It is recommended by President Hoover, Calvin Coolidge, Lindberg, Wilbur Green the President of the American Federation of Labor, and John G. Hibben the President of Princeton University and eminent philosopher. College presidents, school men and high church officials thru out America have addressed the C. M. T. C.

Boys must be 17 years old and in good health. Before going to camp candidates must be examined by a doctor appointed by the government. There is no charge for this service. Doctors appointed in the county are Dr. Reynolds in Garrett, Dr. Ish in Waterloo, Dr. Shumaker in Butler, and Drs. Dorsey Hines, A. V. Hines, Geisinger and Stewart in Auburn.

E. F. Fribley, principal of the high school in Auburn, is the county representative for DeKalb county. Application blanks can be obtained from him. In as much as the quota for the state is nearly filled boys who are interested are urged to get their application at once. They can be obtained by writing Mr. Fribley. He will be glad to furnish any information necessary. Mr. Fribley has served as instructor in Camp Knox two summers.

William Widdifield and family were Sunday evening guests of Mr. and Mrs. Nute Henderson.

Lesson for May 4

PROMOTION IN THE KINGDOM

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 20:17-28.

GOLDEN TEXT—The Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give His life a ransom for many.

PRIMARY TOPIC—How to Become Great.

JUNIOR TOPIC—How to Become Great.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Greatness Through Self-Denying Service.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Christ's Standard of Greatness.

I. The King Foretells His Death and Resurrection (vv. 17-19).

1. The King on His way to Jerusalem (v. 17).

This is His last journey to the beloved city. He took the twelve disciples aside from the traveling pilgrims to make known unto them what was before them. As they journeyed, he went ahead of the disciples. The courage thus shown by the Lord amazed the disciples who were following in fear (Mark 10:32).

2. The betrayal and death foretold (vv. 18, 19).

He went forward, fully conscious of the awful tragedy of the cross. He for the third time since the transfiguration tells the disciples of His approaching sufferings and death. But they are so filled with their ambitious schemes that they do not understand Him. The treachery of Judas, the fierce persecutions by the chief priests and scribes, the unjust judgment, the delivery to Pontius Pilate, the mockery, the scourging, the crown of thorns, the cross, the hanging between two malefactors, the nails, the spear—all were spread before His mind like a picture! Though He knew all this, He pressed on, not of necessity, but deliberately. The joyous outlook upon the victory which would be accomplished by the shedding of His blood led Him forward. He went courageously, for He knew the time had come for the accomplishment of His Father's will.

3. The resurrection foretold (v. 19).

Truly, this would have been a dark picture had the resurrection not been made known. The resurrection life beyond is always seen as the issue of the cross. The blessedness of the life beyond this "vale of tears" should induce us to press on. Christ is the grand example. (Heb. 12:2).

II. The Ambitious Request of James and John (vv. 20-23).

1. The request (vv. 20, 21).

This request was made by their mother. The request was for a place of prominence in the kingdom. It is not wrong for mothers to be ambitious for their boys, but they should know that life's pinnacles are exceedingly dangerous. It is desirable that parents should get places for their children near to Jesus, but the vain ambition of the world should not occupy their minds.

2. Jesus' answer (vv. 22, 23).

He spoke directly to the men, not to their mother, declaring that they knew not what they were asking. He showed them that the way to this position of glory was through suffering. The cup which they were to drink was of great agony. The way to the places of glory in the kingdom of Christ is by the path of lowly and self-forgetting service.

III. How to Be Truly Exalted (vv. 24-28).

1. The angry disciples (v. 24).

When the ten heard of the request of James and John, they were filled with indignation against them. Their displeasure did not arise from the fact that they were free from the same selfish spirit, but that these two had thrust themselves to the front.

2. Greatness among the heathen (v. 25).

The rule of the world has always been by the strong hand. The standards have not been moral excellence, but worth, station, and power.

3. Greatness among Christ's disciples (vv. 20, 27).

The standard here is in sharp contrast. The way to the place of prominence in Christ's kingdom is the way of self-abasement. To give is greater than to receive. To be serving some one is much better than to be served. There will be degrees of rank in Christ's kingdom, but this rank will be character, not position, or authority. The spirit of Christ substitutes "the greatness of love for the love of greatness."

4. Christ is the supreme example of greatness (v. 28).

All who will be great should study and imitate Christ. Let them forget self and serve others, even to the giving of their lives.

Courage, Unspotted Life

Then said Mr. Holy-man, there are two things that they have need to possess who go on pilgrimage: courage and an unspotted life. If they have not courage, they can never hold on their way; and if their lives be loose, they will make the very name of a pilgrim stink.—John Bunyan.

The Lunenburg Fleet

The famous Lunenburg fleet, as the fine clipper schooners that fish out of the Nova Scotia port are collectively known, now numbers 71. An old Lunenburg custom which endured for years was to give a vessel a name containing the letter "a" three times. Some of the examples in the present fleet are found in the Autauga, Delawana, Palitanna and Partana. Today, however, the custom has waned to a considerable extent, most of the Lunenburg vessels being named for the wives and daughters of the port's captains.—New York Times Magazine.

The Mutiny of the Albatross

By WYNDHAM MARTYN

COPYRIGHT IN THE U. S.
WNU Service

THE STORY

Floyd Unwin and Howard Bettington take dinner with an old college chum, Alfred Gibbons, financial magnate. Unwin produces a written pledge taken by the three at college to help each other in adversity, explaining that he needs financial assistance to educate his son Bob and daughter Mary. Gibbons scoffs at the "legality" of the pledge, but agrees to make a place for the daughter in his organization. Mary Unwin is stenographer to a wealthy debauchee, Elgar Radway. Calling at Gibbons' office, as arranged, Mary is asked to betray her employer's secrets and refuses. Radway plans an ocean voyage to recover from the effects of dissipation. Mary is to go as secretary, her brother to accompany her. Bettington, painting on the Maine coast, is kidnaped, and taken aboard a vessel. His clothes are found by Gibbs, a fugitive from justice, who dons them and goes to Bettington's studio, and there falls to his death. Bettington finds he is aboard Radway's yacht. Bettington is questioned by a man known as the "Boss." He is shown an account of Gibbs' death, the body being identified as Bettington. The "Boss" intends to hold Radway for $1,000,000 ransom.

CHAPTER V—Continued

When the Boss bent his eyes on Metzger, the engineer leaned back in his chair and sunk his yellow teeth in the cigar. Metzger had sworn to unmask the riddle he was compelled to call the Boss, the man who had tapped him on the shoulder, disclosed his power and commanded him to become the engineer of the Albatross. Metzger was sitting in the corner of a West street saloon not far from Fulton street. He had more money in his pocket than his appearance indicated and was afraid to spend it. He was wondering to what town he should go and dissipate it. It must be some town where he could be sure of not meeting certain detectives who had their suspicions concerning him.

The entrance of a stranger, a small, smiling, well-dressed man, put an end to speculation. The stranger had whispered in his ear certain charges against a man whose name was certainly not Metzger. Yet the man, who had engineer's papers calling him Metzger, dared not deny. He rose, followed the stranger and was now engineer. And that promised holiday was still afar off, and the gold its avoidance had saved was still in his money belt.

"This is our chief engineer, Herman Metzger. Metzger is not his name. There was a Herman Metzger, but his life went out as a knife went in, at Macau, where the Portuguese opium dives are. It was our engineer's hour. He killed a man, took his woman and became a chief engineer all in the same evening. This fondness for women may yet be his undoing.

"Next, Mr. Leary commands your attention, Doctor. When I suggested that he should accompany us as first officer he refused. Then I spoke of the sad wreck of the Pendennis on the Manacles, when so many were lost. Without a word, Leary reconsidered the situation. As a murderer we must reckon Mr. Leary in the wholesale way of business."

Leary's confusion was not due to any heart pangs over the ship he had cast away for a share of the insurance money. It was inarticulate rage that he dared not beat into pulp the smiling face and still that sneering voice for ever.

Leary pointed to Bettington. At any rate, he was not afraid of Bettington.

"What's the idea of letting him in on all this?"

Metzger nodded vehement approval.

"It's putting a weapon in his hand," said Metzger.

"He, too, has his history," said the Boss. "Gentlemen, this is the celebrated Andrew Orme, once of Yale and later of San Quentin. You have done murder; so has he. His use here on board is a double one. First, as ship's surgeon and, second, as a forger of first rank."

Metzger looked at him with respect. He remembered the trial years back. No wonder he looked coldly on commonplace crooks like Sam. In all things Metzger liked class.

Bettington was vastly relieved that the mistake in his identity remained undiscovered. This interview had banished for ever the hope that the Boss was insane and had begun an adventure which would end in failure. Assuredly these three men were not to fail because of lack of brute courage. And there were others whom he had not yet met, subordinates of these three who would stand or fall with them. He was wondering if the tasks demanded of him might not yet betray him as an imposter, when the Boss rapped on the table.

"The main reason why we are here tonight," he said, "is to correct certain impressions which are held by some of my men. You, Leary, were gratified that I allowed you to take one of the guest rooms from Bar Harbor to New York. Mr. Hallett was scandalized, but knows better than to try conclusions with me. The same thing applies to you, Metzger. You used the room the doctor has now."

Metzger looked at Leary. What did the Boss mean? They were already in their usual quarters.

"You probably were not aware that those rooms were planned by a former owner who placed dictagraphs in so that he might overhear what was said about him by two guests whom he suspected." The Boss took from his pocket a pad of paper. "Metzger said on many occasions that there was no reason, because I commenced a voyage, I should ever finish it. Leary said that it would not take him ten seconds to pick me up, break my neck and dump me into the ocean."

He turned to look at the two men. Their confusion was intense. They knew denial was useless.

"Don't give yourself such concern," the Boss admonished; "it was a perfectly natural thing to say. Self-preservation is the first law, one is told. I could put you each one in danger of your life and you know it. I am not in the least offended. I have no doubt the doctor here has his own plans for my sudden death, and that Sam, although he has resisted temptation, will eventually fall into it."

Bettington looked at the man with amazement. He was calm and cool. His smile was unabated. He looked at four men, whom he believed to be murderers, and unrepentant, and defied them. With what weapon, Bettington wondered, was this to be accomplished.

"What a fool I should have been to come into a ship like this without safeguarding myself first! In my home city there is a lawyer who attends to my business. Recently he made my will. When this voyage is over I shall go back and destroy a letter on which it says, 'Not to be opened until one year from date.' In that letter is an account of the life and works of each of you gentlemen. I have also given myself the trouble to pen memoranda concerning our cook, Kenzie, the second engineer; Graumann and Hamner. I shall talk to them tomorrow, but I think you will find it advisable to watch over my health very carefully. If I am killed you go back to prison, all of you."

"What do you want us to do?" Leary asked anxiously.

"Do your duty without giving Hallett cause for offense. I don't want his suspicions to take such shape as will make Radway distrustful."

"That d—n boy, Bob, is in the way," Sam grumbled. "We're all like one happy family down there in the forecastle and we have to keep mum because of him. I believe he's been planted there for a purpose."

The Boss shook his head. "Mr. Radway told me all about it. He is the girl's brother, sent on board as a sort of chaperon."

"She may need one," Sam sniggered. "She's sure a little beauty!"

"None of that," said the Boss sharply. "We are here to make money and not to fool with women. Don't stare at her, Sam; I can see you frighten her. I'll break any man here who disobeys my instructions."

"A man has his rights on sea as well as land," Metzger observed impartially. "If I see a pretty woman on shore I stare at her, and if I see a pretty woman aboard I do the same thing. Sam likes chickens, I don't. I'm all for class. Radway's wife—she's class."

The Boss was impatient for them to be gone. He waved them to the door.

"I only insist you disarm suspicion, and God knows, with faces like you three carry, that's hard work. I don't want you and Sam fighting over a girl."

"Me and Sam?" said Metzger. "We're not rivals." Metzger had decided by this time he did not like the doctor. He remembered what innumerable occasions there would be for him and Mrs. Radway to meet and it made him exasperated that his duties were not of a different sort. "The Doc here and I are the ones that would get scrapping, ain't we?"

Bettington turned his back on him. When they had gone, he looked at the Boss.

"If those two brutes got loose, there'll be h—l to pay."

"I keep them chained," said the other. "I'm glad you seem to be getting on with those women. I'm keeping Radway quiet. Find out what women friends Mrs. Radway has. You may have to write to them later and the use of any pet names is always advisable. It should not be difficult for you to find out what I want."

"Why not?" Bettington asked coldly.

"Because Mrs. Radway is a woman and women always trust the wrong man, as their history proves. She thinks you are the soul of probity because your face masks your soul so well. Those men who have just gone advertise the seven deadly sins whenever they look at one, and are less dangerous."

"I like Mrs. Radway," said Bettington, "and no matter what I have done, according to your ideas, no woman need be afraid of me. You were right to warn Metzger. You may as well tell him that if he tries to force himself on Mrs. Radway, I shall give him a beating."

The Boss leaned over the table and looked the other man full in the face. The hands were clenched and the voice that spoke was sharp and metallic.

"You heard what I said about quarreling over women? You risk a great deal by taking that tone to me."

"Less than you think," Bettington answered. He knew his remark would puzzle the other, and he was right.

"Do not let us misunderstand one another," said the Boss with a more cordial manner. "You and I stand to secure enough money out of this to make ourselves independent for life. . . . The others here are pawns on the board and can be sacrificed when the time comes. We must not imperil our success by misunderstanding. I do not want Mrs. Radway insulted and I don't want Metzger in one of his jealous rages to go to Hallett or Radway and talk. . . . There is always such a possibility in the air."

"And if it happened?"

"H—l let loose, as you observed. In that case, your Mrs. Radway is in real peril. Now she may possibly have to endure Metzger's staring at her. Make up your mind which is the more real danger?"

Unquestionably the Boss gave good advice. Bettington felt that a man had never been in a more difficult position than that in which he found himself. To tell Radway what he knew was only to precipitate mutiny. And to wait until the plot matured, seemed almost criminal. Unfortunately Hallett was one of those honest and obstinate men who imperil undertakings very often by their suspicions of what they do not fully understand. It would be very difficult to explain the situation to him and prevent him from disclosing that knowledge by an accusing face and a greater severity of demeanor.

"I Have Just Had a Delicious Swim."

The Boss broke in on his reflections. There was in his voice no longer the sharp assurance of the commander. Almost, Bettington thought, he detected an air of diffidence.

"You had the reputation of being one of the greatest surgeons of our day," he began. "Supreme skill always commands my respect. I had no idea of your ability until I read, almost a year back, an article in the Lancet on the operation they call by your name."

"One can't give up work of that sort for ten years and get it back. Blackport, Maine, killed all that."

Bettington could see that the Boss' eyes were fastened on the painter's hands.

"Those long sensitive hands of yours don't show me that you have lost your skill. Some time when we are not so tired, I want to have a long talk to you about certain surgical matters. I may need your help."

Bettington was startled.

"You'll need a higher aid than mine, if it's anything serious."

"It is not a major operation, but it needs a man with the skill you used to demonstrate. I shan't need you yet. This business must be accomplished first. If you do what I want I will give my word that I shall forget all your past life. You will be free."

"You forget that you told everything to those three men."

"They may not be in a position to bear witness against you. They are outlaws, remember."

Bettington went to his room in no calm frame of mind. The Boss had evidently decreed wholesale death. But for the moment the time was not come for action. Not until a month had gone by would Clements attempt to extort his ransom.

CHAPTER VI

The Surgical Smile

Bettington was awakened next morning by the consciousness that the Albatross had stopped and was rolling gently. He rose and dressed quickly, and ere he had finished the yacht was under way once more.

On deck he was surprised to see Elgar Radway striding up and down briskly. There was an amazing look of vigor and health about him. He came cheerily to the other's side.

"I have just had a delicious swim. It invigorates one. I dived down an enormous distance and left all my aches behind me."

So that was why the Albatross was stopped. Bettington followed the owner to the saloon. It was his habit to eat sparingly at breakfast. Plainly it was Radway's habit to eat a huge meal. He was concerned at the other's small appetite.

"Take a dip with me tomorrow morning and you'll eat better. I eat a great deal because I work a great deal and need the fuel. The worker, if he works hard and at high speed, must eat and drink all he can."

"There's a limit somewhere," Bettington warned.

"That's the difficulty," the capitalist admitted. There was already that burning sensation at the pit of his stomach.

"Clements!" he called. "A little of that old cognac; not a pony—bring it in a cocktail glass."

"Clements seems a remarkable man," Bettington hazarded. He was anxious to know more of him.

"A disbarred lawyer," Radway answered. "Had a gambling place of the highest class at Saratoga, once. He must have lost it all or he wouldn't need to attend to the catering and so on, and wear a livery. Odd smile of his, isn't it? I believe it's a kind of paralysis. Reminds me of that old phrase we used to hear of the smile that wouldn't come off."

Under the influence of the old French brandy, Radway's discomfort was dulled. He was beginning to find Bettington was an entertaining talker when he chose, and frowned when Clements said that a trifling accident to a member of the crew demanded the doctor's attendance.

Bettington followed Clements with justifiable misgivings. Suppose he should find that some bad accident called for skill not at his command. Would his crude first-aid methods betray him to the alert eye of the Boss?

"What is it?" he demanded, as he followed Clements through the saloon door.

"That d—d Unwin boy," the other said impatiently. "He's a nuisance to the men. I don't think it's anything bad."

Bob, looking very pale, had a scalp wound. Examination proved it to be less serious than the forecastle had assumed. The dressing of it was well within Bettington's range of skill. He had tied miles of bandages in his day.

"Now, my lad," he said kindly, "how did this happen?"

Bob explained that Sam wanted a photograph of his sister, and when he would not give it, had taken it by force and in the struggle knocked him down. Bob was very miserable.

"Wait here," Bettington commanded. "I'll see what can be done."

Captain Hallett received him, as usual, with a great deal of suspicion. Bettington explained the nature of the accident and its cause.

"If you would allow this lad, Bob Unwin, to take advantage of your nephew's kindness and berth with him in the wireless room, where there is plenty of space, I should be greatly obliged."

"That's a clever way of planting a spy amongst us," sneered Hallett. "How am I to know what you are saying is true?"

Bettington set a guard on his temper. He tried to realize how Hallett must be chagrined continually by the authority which Clements was allowed.

"But the boy is the brother of your owners' secretary."

"He stays where he is," said Hallett.

"One minute," Bettington cried. "Ever since I've been aboard you've shown hostility to me. There has been absolutely no reason for it. Why have you done so?"

"Because you're a friend of Clements, and he has undermined me with Mr. Radway, as I've no doubt you are trying to."

"I've not given you enough thought for that," Bettington answered; "but I may as well warn you, I shall ask Mr. Radway to let that boy come out of the forecastle."

He sought out Radway and put the thing before him.

"Do as you please," Radway said idly.

Bettington went back to his first patient.

"I've got leave for you to shift your quarters. The wireless operator told your sister he'd take you in hand. Take my advice, and keep out of people's way. I refer particularly to the skipper, who resents my interference, and the owner, whose temper varies according to the time of day."

The boy forgot his pains in the prospect of being able to leave the society of the crew and see his sister.

Presently Radway went below. When Bettington came on deck it was deserted. He took the opportunity to make an investigation of the Albatross.

Metzger was not in the engine room. Bettington looked anxiously at Kenzie. He was planning ahead and needed allies. He wondered what hold the Boss had upon this engineer who seldom, or ever, left his engines, except to sleep.

The cook welcomed the chance to talk. "What's good for a sick stomach, Doc?" he inquired.

"Fasting," he was told. This time Bettington had a good look at the chef. He was a very fat man and his eyes were too close together. The first glance showed him a gross, jovial man; a closer inspection showed him to be scheming, sensual and vain.

Bettington went from the galley depressed. In order to feel assured of success in case he had to declare open war against Sam, Metzger and their commander, he had at least to remove the disparity in numbers by recruiting some of the men to his cause. So far he could only think of Silvers, minute representative of the insalubrious Cherry Hill district which lies along the lower east side of New York's waterfront. Bettington knew the gamins of that district. Silvers had probably started life, feeling the hand of the law was against him. He would readily fall in line with those who arrayed themselves against established order.

On his way to his own quarters Bettington saw Clements.

"By the way," he began, "I wanted to ask you about meals. Am I supposed to dine with the Radways?"

"No," said Clements. "You mess with the officers. That is Hallett, Leary, Metzger and Hallett's nephew. I usually mess in my room. I'd like you to share lunch with me today. There are certain business matters I want to discuss."

"Very well," Bettington answered.

It was eight bells when Silvers brought luncheon into the room. At half-past twelve the lad had removed the dishes.

"I have half-an-hour before I need put on that damnable jacket and ask Hallett if he wants a second helping. I beg you to believe, Doctor Orme, that I am not a servant by accident but by design.

"I know all that is interesting of your career," Clement went on. "Do you know anything of mine?"

"Absolutely nothing."

"Have you ever seen me before?"

"Never. I'm sure of that. My memory for faces is unfailingly good."

"And yet," Clements went on, "my face has been in almost every big newspaper in the world. There have been rewards for my apprehension which in the aggregate exceed those ever offered for another man."

Bettington smiled politely. It was as though he did not want to awaken the other from a pleasing delusion.

"I see you do not believe me. That is part of my triumph. Did you ever hear of Reuben Beardsley?"

"Not to my knowledge."

"And yet you had no more sincere admirer. He was in one of your classes in surgery. To him there was no such operator in the world as Andrew Orme."

Bettington said nothing. This resurrection of another man's past was apt to prove embarrassing.

"That's all left behind long ago," he observed at length. "How could I ever hope to get famous as a surgeon with San Quentin hanging over me?"

"You will have no need to make money when this trip is done," the Boss reminded him. "Your pupil, Beardsley, is dead."

"Too bad," Bettington murmured. "He was young to die." It seemed a safe comment.

Bilingualism in Africa Amusing to Americans

One of the first features to strike an American visitor to South Africa is the country's bilingualism. As he steps off the boat at Cape Town he is confronted by the double admonition, "No Smoking—Nie Rook Nie." Walking up Adderley street, principal thoroughfare of the city, he is told to "Keep to the left—Links houden." If he wants to mail a letter back home he must by a "stamp—posseel," and if he buys more than one stamp he will find that while one is inscribed "South Africa," the next is marked "Suidafrika." At the railroad station he will find that the name of the city is given as Cape Town and Kaapstad, and the dining cars are labeled "Dining car—Eetsaloon" on a railroad known both as South African railways and Suid Afrigannse Spoorweg. And so on. Every official or semiofficial notice in the union is printed in two languages—English and Afrikaans. Meanwhile the Englishman grumbles about having to pay extra taxes to meet the cost of reprinting notices in Afrikaans, and the Dutchman wonders why the expense of using English as well as his own language should be tolerated.

Sophisticated Boyhood

It may be the age in which we are living that is responsible. You can't tell. But in the light of observation the sophistication of the nine-year-old becomes an actuality.

Witness the following:

A window display of a tire house.

Toy automobiles scooting around at an amazing speed. Crowd composed almost entirely of adults peering with obvious amusement.

Two urchins approach from the background. One of them elbows his way to the front. The other is not so successful.

"What is it?" yells the one from the back.

"Aw, just a tire advertisement," says the other with disgust.

Guard the Tongue

Give not thy tongue too great a liberty, lest it take thee prisoner. A word unspoken is like the sword in the scabbard, thine; if vented, thy sword is in another's hand. If thou desire to be held wise, be so wise as to hold thy tongue.—Quarles.

Dog Saved Browning

Robert Browning and Elisabeth Barrett did not elope alone. Miss Barrett's lap dog went along.

"Not because the lovers wanted it particularly," Dr. Andreas Bard informed the Kansas City Browning society at a luncheon, "but because they were afraid to leave it behind. One bark would have spoiled everything. Miss Barrett's father disapproved of the intended marriage.

"Think of it—the future of Browning poetry resting with a little dog. If that little dog had yapped, very likely there would have been no Browning society and, what is worse, none of those exquisite poems written by Mr. and Mrs. Browning after their marriage."—Kansas City Star.

Rulers' Futile Effort to Put Ban on Corset

The corset, writes Looker-On in the London Daily Chronicle, which threatens to resume its old whalebone rigidity with the return of longer skirts and tighter waists, must rank among the articles of dress which, however often denounced, seem invulnerable against attack. Louis XIV of France, though he suppressed the high headdresses of court ladies by a word, could not win obedience to a decree against the corset, and when Charles X, proving once more that the Bourbons are unteachable, condemned it to extinction, it was noted that the ladies merely clasped it about them more tightly than ever. A more subtle move was that of Emperor Joseph II of Austria, who sought to discredit the corset by ordering that women of bad character or convicted of serious crimes should be made to wear them. But even that did not discourage the others!

Only Looked Like Cash

A fourteen-year-old Belfast (Maine) boy rummaging in an attic of a century-old house had the surprise and disappointment of his young life. Although he found a barrel of money in $1, $3, $5 and $10 bills, they were presumed to be worthless, says the Boston Globe. The bills are said to run into the thousands and are on the Frankfort bank, state of Maine, signed by B. Shaw, president, and B. Johnson, cashier, dated 1834 and 1837. The history of Maine gives no such bank in its list of Maine banks and it is believed that the script is a relic of a private bank.

Almond Paste in Demand

It is estimated that from 6,000,000 to 7,000,000 pounds of almond paste is consumed in this country annually, most of which is manufactured by large candy manufacturers and sold to bakers for making cakes and macaroons.

Acidity

The common cause of digestive difficulties is excess acid. Soda cannot alter this condition, and it burns the stomach. Something that will neutralize the acidity is the sensible thing to take. That is why physicians tell the public to use Phillips Milk of Magnesia.

One spoonful of this delightful preparation can neutralize many times its volume in acid. It acts instantly; relief is quick, and very apparent. All gas is dispelled; all sourness is soon gone; the whole system is sweetened. Do try this perfect anti-acid, and remember it is just as good for children, too, and pleasant for them to take.

Any drug store has the genuine, prescriptional product.

SILK GIRDLE REPLACES THE OLD-TIME CORSET

There is about as much resemblance between the old-time corset and modern girdle that women have adopted as there is between an armored battleship and a canoe. It is safe to predict that never again will women allow themselves to be sheathed in steel and whalebone until all natural beauty of figure is hidden and free, spontaneous movement is impossible.

The type of a girdle the 1930 woman selects depends somewhat upon her type of figure and the purposes for which she intends to wear it. The larger woman likes a fairly deep, form fitting Hickory girdle with wide inserts of silk elastic over the sides, extended front shield and a light boning. The woman of slighter build, however, selects a narrow Hickory girdle, with small elastic inserts and little or no boning. Another style is of flower trimmed, shirred satin ribbon in slip on style. This type is particularly popular for sports and day-time wear. With the formal evening frock, which must be form-fitting according to fash ion's revived mode, the other types are selected even by the youngest and slimmest of girls.

In either case, the new style girdles meet the approval of doctors and physical educators who recognize them as the perfect happy medium that gives enough support to abdominal muscles and yet permits perfect freedom of motion regardless of occupation.

But the girdle has another important duty to perform besides the slight molding restraint it gives the figure, and that is the task of keeping the stockings smooth and straight. For this reason, any girdle selected should have four adjustable Hickory hose supporters, of live, responsive elastic, and with supporter buckles with rubber cushions to protect the hose from holes and runs.

Many women like to wear a dainty Hickory round garter in addition to assure straight seam lines in the stockings, which are universally acknowledged to be essential to correct grooming.

WHEN BABY GOES A-VISITING

The very early training in personal habits now urged by physicians and baby specialists is probably one of the most radical and desirable of all the changes in infant care which have occurred since grandmother's day. Along with strained vegetables, shortened clothes and the ban on rocking and pacifiers, this sensible and labor-saving practice of very early training is being adopted by modern mothers everywhere.

But just the same, it's a wise mother who takes precautions, especially when she is going visiting or traveling with the baby. At these times, especially, Hickory rubber baby pants become a boon and a necessity. She may select those of high-grade gum rubber, rubber dam, rubberized sateen or nain sook or, for special "dress up" occasions, of silk rubber sheeting, but whatever the basic material used, it is the cut that is the important feature in selecting baby pants.

They should be cut with a full back to give the active baby plenty of room for sitting or creeping and must be well ventilated, for the sake of the baby's health. For very warm weather one may choose those with the entire top of marquisette.

Several pairs must be kept on hand as they should never be worn after one notices they are damp. Wash them immediately if possible, in lukewarm water and soap flakes, rinse and rub dry with a clean towel and air them before putting them back on the baby or in his dresser. In this way the little pants will wear much longer and be sweet, clean and non-irritating.

Matthew 6.

Then the Lord answered Job out of the whirlwind, and said, Who is this that darkeneth counsel by words without knowledge? Give up now thy loins like a man; for I will demand of thee, and answer thou Me.

Where wast thou when I laid the foundation of the earth? declare, if thou hast understanding. Who hath laid the measures thereof, if thou knowest? or who hath stretched the line upon it? Whereupon are the foundations thereof fastened? or who laid the corner-stone thereof; when the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy?

Canst thou bind the sweet influences of Pleiades, or loose the bands of Orion? Canst thou bring forth Mazzaroth in his season? or canst thou guide Arcturus with his sons? Knowest thou the ordinances of heaven? Canst thou set the dominion thereof in the earth? —Job 38—entire (quoting 1-7, 31-33).

FRESH GARTERS THE THING TO RENEW OLD CORSETS

What part of an article gives out first? Where the greatest strain is, naturally, and with corset, corselet or girdle, or whatever article one finds most comfortable and convenient, the part that is sure to go first is the hose supporter that gets a constant tug and strain all day long. They also get somewhat soiled from constant rubbing against clothing, which makes the whole garment seem shabby and worn out. The next time you are tempted to discard your girdle, try washing it and then putting on a fresh pair of Hickory so-on garters and see what a difference it makes.

The old ones can be ripped off and the new ones put on in a jiffy by simply stitching around the convenient tab tops which come with the so-on garters. In selecting garters, whether to replace old ones, or in getting an entirely new girdle, the wearer should see that good, live elastic is used and that all metal parts are smooth and rounded so as not to catch the fingers or tear the stockings and, to promote the long life of sheer hose, the supporter buckle and loop should both be entirely protected with rubber where it touches the stocking.

A pair of so-on garters kept always on hand will save annoyance when an emergency arises, and should always be part of one's traveling equipment.

STURDY WAISTS FOR ACTIVE YOUNGSTERS

Dressing the children sensibly suggests having them wear as few separate garments as possible. This not only saves washing and expense, but what is most important, means greater freedom of movement, and free circulation of air around the body. A Hickory pantie waist, drawers or bloomers and, for the girl, a little frock, and shorts and blouse for the boy, are all the healthy child needs except in the most severe weather, when knit underwear may be worn.

The pantie waist is the key garment, so to speak, of the child's outfit. To this the garter is fastened, and drawers, shorts, bloomers and skirts buttoned. For this reason sturdy materials and strong, unbreakable bone buttons, securely taped on, are necessary features. In selecting the waists one should note also that the essential parts are double stitched, that the stout tabs or patent pin tube attachments are provided for the garters.

Cut is also an important part of the waist. The arms must be full cut to avoid binding and the front and neck sufficiently low not to show above the outer garments.

When buying the children's clothes, see that they are the kind they can easily get in and out of themselves.

OBITUARY

George W. Bleeks was born in Richland County, in the State of Ohio, on the 12th day of March, 147, and departed this life at his home in St. Joe, Indiana, on the 23rd day of April, 1930. He was the son of James B. and Eizabeth Bleeks. His father was a carpenter by occupation, and April 20, 1854, made the trip, which was a strenuous one for those days, to DeKalb County, locating at Newville. The father engaged in farming east of Newville, and it was there that his son, George, was raised, and attended the public schools. On October 27, 1870, he was united in marriage to Mary Tiffany, a school-mate of his, and the daughter of Louis and Olive Tiffany, a neighboring pioneer. In 1871 Mr. Bleeks moved to Orangeville, began housekeeping, and engaged in farming.

In 1879 he moved to St. Joe, where he bought an interest in a sawmill with Alex Filley, and John Sommerlot. In 1894 he moved to the Moody farm, east of St. Joe, where he lived for five years, when he returned to St. Joe, engaging in the lumber business. In 1902 he was selected by the Democratic party as its candidate for Sheriff of DeKalb County, and was elected and served his term with distinction to himself and credit to the office. At the close of his official career he returned to St. Joe.

His good wife died July 11, 1923, since which time he has resided with his children. In 1925 the light of day faded from his eyes, but throughout the years he has remained patient and borne his affliction with gratitude in the joy of living. Mr. Bleeks joined the United Brethren Church in 1878, and later became one of the charter members of the Methodist Protestant Church at St. Joe, and is the last survivor of the charter members.

Mr. Bleeks was the father of three sons and three daughters, one little daughter having died in infancy, and his sons, Ray and Coran having gone on before, many years ago at the time they were about six years of age. He leaves surviving him, his son, Jay, and his daughters, Adah and Sadie; also eight grandchildren, two great grandchildren and three step grandchildren; two brothers William Bleeks, of St. Joe and Hiram Bleeks, of Butler.

Mr. Bleeks was a fine example of the early pioneer families. He was of rugged physique and rugged character. All his life he was regarded by his neighbors as a man of the highest integrity, God fearing, kindly, courteous, hospitable and helpful. He had a host of friends and no enemies. Every trust reposed in him was executed with fidelity, and his death removes from DeKalb County one of the last and few surviving members of the old pioneer band which settled and developed DeKalb County, and made it what it is today—one of the finest places in the world in which to live.

In his going he leaves a host of mournful friends and neighbors, but in the excellent example of citizenship which he characterized, he has builded himself a monument which will never be forgotten.

The funeral services were conducted last Friday afternoon from the M. P. Church, with Rev. B. W. Mayfield officiating. E. R. Kinsey funeral director. Interment was made in the Newville Cemetery.

CARD OF THANKS

ST. JOE ORGANIZED FOR THE SEASON

The St. Joe Independents have met and organized for the season of 1930. This brings to your approval the officers of the club: Walter Zonker, manager; Clarence Hart, secretary and treasurer, with Grant Baltz as assistant. With a unanimous vote Mark Williams was elected Captain, thus, with the old lineup back and three new faces, Kobelia, Sapp, and "Casey" Williams, we feel and hope to demonstrate to the fans that we have one of the fastest teams in northern Indiana.

Our playing manager, Walter Zonker, is now contemplating the buying of our new uniforms which will be a great benefit in appearance and is also a necessity, in view of the fact that the present ones are "shot."

Next Sunday, May 11, brings the fast Wayne Independents to St. Joe for the opening game of the season. On the following Sunday the Hart, Schaffner & Marx team from Fort Wayne will be here to give the St. Joe team a battle.

The following is the lineup that St. Joe will have on the field this season:

Mark, "Wid" and "Casey" Williams, "Skipper" Curie, "Lefty" Blair, and Adam Kobelia, Roy Koch, "Young" Sapp, Walt Zonker, George Simanton, Chas. Sucher and Louis Gibford.

With this lineup St. Joe should come in at the close of the season with a good record.

It is Manager Zonker's aim to play all games with teams having a reputation of clean, fast players. With this aim in mind there should be some real base ball games for the fans for the season.

With the buying of new uniforms and the extra expense of having good teams we are forced to charge the ladies admission. Nevertheless, we are looking for and banking on our lady fans to help us win many ball games.

During the season we hope to have "Ladies Day" occasionally and in this way show them that we want them to come and root.

Mrs. Gertrude Borthwick, Junior Girls.

BIG SHELL ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN UNDER WAY

One of the largest and most far-reaching advertising campaigns ever undertaken by an oil company was inaugurated during the week of April 14 when approximately 1000 newspapers in 28 states in the mid-continent and southeastern sections of the country ran the first of a series of advertisements on Shell motor oil and gasoline.

The advertisements are scheduled to apear twice a month and the campaign, inaugurated to tie up with the intensive sales efforts of Shell jobbers and distributors, will be run from April 14th thru the balance of the year, and is designed to secure exceptionally complete coverage in the 28 states embracing the territory of the Shell Petroleum Corporation, through the use of morning and evening newspapers as well as a large number of weekly newspapers, of which the St. Joe News has been selected for this community.

The copy used in the campaign is largely educational in character, its mission being to drive home to the motoring public the vital importance in the right choice of motor oil and gasoline in order to secure maximum efficiency, adequate performance, and economy as well as long life in the motor cars driven by the public. In the first several advertisements in the campaign the vital necessity of good lubrication is stressed and what constitutes an efficient lubricant for motor cars brought out in emphatic manner. The progress made thus far in the perfection of lubricants for motor cars, and how it has kept pace with the automobile industry, is interestingly set forth. An entirely new Shell slogan is employed in these advertisements and thru its use motorists are urged to "Be up-to-date Shell-Lubricate."

In the copy covering the series of advertisements on Shell 400 Extra Dry Gasoline and Super Shell gasoline, operating efficiency, economy and quick pick-up thru the use of these products of proven quality, are stressed.

It is planned to alternate the several series of Shell motor oil and gasoline advertisements during the six months campaign.

BUTLER ACCIDENT PROVES FATAL

Mr. James Scott, who is night watchman at The Butler Company, was struck by a truck driven by Mr. Darley Beck, of Paulding, O., about 6:45 Thursday morning while on his way home, which is near the Ginder corners south of Butler. He is seriously injured, and after being taken home, the doctor ordered him removed to the hospital, where he was taken in the Johnson & Son ambulance.

The truck was going to Michigan for a load of merchandise, and just as it was nearing Mr. Scott, in a Ford, the Scott machine seemed to swerve suddenly directly in front of the truck, which did not have time to avoid the collision, and struck him squarely. Mr. Scott had just left the factory for home.—Butler Herald.

Mr. Scott died Sunday as result of injuries and funeral was held Tuesday afternoon from the Newville U. B. Church. Mr. Scott was a brotherinlaw of Mrs. Laney Gee.

REMEMBER MOTHER NEXT SUNDAY

Special days of one kind and another are getting to be so common that we are not particularly interested in some of them.

Hot-dog Day, Marshmallow Day, Comb Your Hair Day, Brush Your Teeth Day, Take Off Your Winter Underwear Day—all or any of these may put in an appearance within the next year, and we can hardly be blamed if we fail to greet them with a smile.

But Mother's Day, well, that's different. The only fault we can find with this day is that no one thought of it centuries ago.

Mother's Day is not old —in many cases far younger than Mother herself. But Mother's Day stands for something that plays softly even around heartstrings that seldom give off musical strains.

Remember Mother on Mother's Day. Give her any gift you choose —fruit, confectionery, money, a nice plant, or at least a written or verbal token of your love and admiration for her. She may not be with you next year, but Opportunity today stands knocking at your door.

Appropriate services will be held Sunday morning, in all the churches, in her honor.

AN APPRECIATION

During the many weeks of my recent illness there were showered upon me many kindnesses by neighbors and friends of the community, which I shall never forget, and for which I wish to express my heartfelt thanks.

Cities With SUBWAYS

An Early Stage in Subway Construction, New York City.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

THE cities of the world that possess underground street railways—11 in all—are about to have a recruit in Stockholm. This capital and metropolis of Sweden with its 465,000 inhabitants is negotiating for the construction of a comprehensive subway system to cost many millions of dollars.

This decision of Stockholm to place street railways under the earth's surface comes soon after the newest and one of the most ambitious of the world's subway stations has been opened under Piccadilly Circus, the center of London's activity and the place of her greatest traffic congestion. The two events recall the brief period during which the present extensive underground railway systems in great cities have developed.

It seems strange that man, who deserted his caves scores of thousands of years ago and who has been busy since subduing the earth's surface and even invading its air, should turn back and begin burrowing beneath ground. It seems strangest of all that he should delve below the surface for rapid, mass travel, a thing that he probably never dreamed of in his most imaginative moments until perhaps a century ago.

Underground rapid transit is the result of the tremendous growth of certain cities. It was only where population increased to such an extent that surface streets became choked with myriads of people seeking to move about that the idea of travel beneath the surface could ever seem desirable. And it was only after the invention of the railway that the idea became feasible.

Just as the cross-country railway developed from the stagecoach, so the highly organized and heavily capitalized subway systems of today grew from the omnibus, the stagecoach of the city. In New York, a city stage line was started in 1830 to operate north on Broadway from Bowling Green; and within two years the world's first street railway—its cars drawn by horses—was born in the same city. It was a line along Fourth avenue from near the present site of city hall to near the present location of Grand Central station. The idea spread in the United States but Europe was slow to follow. Paris established a horse-car line in 1856; but it was not until 1861 that London had its first "passenger tram."

In London and New York.

Londoners did not take kindly to street railways; they objected to the rails which interfered with other traffic. It was because of this feeling that railways in cities should be out of the way that the first steps were taken in London toward underground rapid transit. The earliest line, constructed before 1870, was not all underground. Much of it was in open cut, and only part in tunnels. The trains were operated by steam engines, and the tunnels were so smoky and ill ventilated that the system was not a success.

In the meantime New York, faced with a growing congestion of street traffic, and a lengthening city, was experimenting with a new solution, the elevated railroad. The first was built in 1868 and by 1787 there were four elevated structures on which steam trains were operated. Placing fast moving city trains above the street level proved the best solution while steam was the only motive power, and the system was adopted in Chicago, Berlin and Liverpool.

London, then the world's greatest city, continued to look underground for the solution of the rapid transit problem. After cable cars first came into use in San Francisco in 1873 and spread to other cities, the idea was conceived of operating cable cars in tunnels in London. In 1886 the world's first all-tunnel subway was started in London; by the ime it was completed in 1890 the electric locomotive had been perfected and the new underground railway was put into operation with this newest draft agency.

Glasgow, Scotland, and Berlin, Germany, opened subway railroads about the same time. Budapest, Hungary, was next to join the ranks of subway cities. Boston was the first American city to begin work on a subway. It was opened in 1898. In 1900 the Paris "Metro" began its underground career, and in the same year New York started on its first underground railway. The first train rolled through the New York subway in 1904, and the work of extending the system has been under way almost continually since. Philadelphia first joined the cities having underground rapid transit systems in 1908. Since then the roster has been added to only by Madrid, Buenos Aires, and Tokyo. The subways in Madrid and Buenos Aires are only a few miles in length, but the Tokyo system is fairly extensive.

Big Population Needed.

The fact that heavy population is essential to the success of subways is demonstrated by a glance at the roster of "subway cities." Of the world's 10 greatest cities, all but Chicago, Osaka and Moscow have subways, and in the missing three the construction of underground railways is being given serious consideration. Of the smaller cities having subways, Budapest, Glasgow, Madrid and Boston, the two first named have more than a million population; while the recorded population of Boston, applying to a restricted area, does not indicate the magnitude of the crowds daily dependent on the city's rapid transit facilities. The Madrid underground system is of limited extent.

Of the sub-surface city railway systems, those of New York and London, the two cities which vie for the title of world metropolis, far surpass all others in extent. Yet in plan and operation these two great metropolitan systems are in some ways strikingly different. London was the pioneer and some of her early construction was found later to lead to marked inconvenience and expense. Thus her earliest "tube" tunnels were constructed at great depths, making it necessary to supply batteries of elevators and escalators at the stations. New York took up subway construction late, but profited by the experiments of those earlier in the field. She adopted the Budapest plan of placing the tunnels as close as possible to the surface so that elevators would be unnecessary.

Another radical departure from the older methods, adopted in New York, was characteristically American. This was the virtual building of two subways in one, by the provision of four tracks, two devoted to express and two to local service.

Good Devices by the English.

In London the sub-surface railway system is known as "the Underground"—"subway" is applied only to pipe tunnels, footpaths, under-street crossings, and the like. Some details making for the convenience and comfort of passengers stand out in the operation of the Underground. Stations are more ornamental and less starkly utilitarian than most of those in New York; and in some, as in the newest Piccadilly station, striking mural paintings adorn the walls. The Piccadilly station is virtually an underground square, brilliantly lighted, surrounding which are well-appointed shops.

The best feature of the Underground to a stranger in London, however, is the remarkably sensible method of keeping him informed of his whereabouts. It is not necessary to peer out at stations seeking to make out dim numbers or names on posts and walls. Suspended from the ceiling in the middle of each car is a large-scale map of the system with a tiny electric bulb at each station. When the train approaches a station the bulb for that station flashes on, and remains lighted until the train starts again.

New York has more than 800 miles of subway track and this will be materially increased when the new independent subway system is placed in commission. In both London and Paris the underground trackage is close to 200 miles. In Chicago the construction of a passenger subway has been discussed for many years but at present only surface and elevated lines are in use. Chicago has a possible nucleus for a subway system in its almost unique freight tunnel system. Under the streets of the business section of the city exists a gridiron of 50 miles of tunnel, six feet wide and seven and a half feet deep. On two-foot tracks in these small tunnels a busy railway traffic is carried on every day while few Chicagoans are aware of its existence. By the system freight is delivered to the basements of stores, and thousands of tons of ashes and refuse are removed annually.

States Awake to Needs of Beauty on Highway

In the past quarter of a century new roads have destroyed the beauty of picturesque countrysides. All attention has been given to utility, and none to beauty. While highways have made the forests and open country available to millions of people, they have probably done more than anything else to destroy the attractions of the country through which they pass. And close on the heels of the road builders come the outdoor advertising companies with their hideous billboards.

In the next 25 years highway construction doubtless will continue at a rapid rate, but in all probability special emphasis will be placed on beautification. A highway commission will no longer be allowed to cut through a beautiful section of country and leave that part which is most noticeable to travelers defaced with scars and broken ground. The problem has already been taken up in a number of the states. New Jersey plans to replace each tree removed in widening its roads with two new trees. Connecticut has undertaken to plant rambler roses, woodbine and honeysuckle vines over newly graded slopes. Massachusetts is credited with having set out 60,000 trees along its state highways. Michigan and Indiana plant evergreens along their roadways, and a similar practice has been adopted in California.—Washington Post.

Proper City Planning Seen as "Good Business"

More than 800 American cities now have city-planning commissions and zoning regulations, according to figures published in the American Architect.

The rapid growth of the city-planning movement, which got its real start at the beginning of the present century, is due to the business man and property owner's realization of the fact that money put into well-kept parks, pleasant streets and beautiful buildings is not an extravagance but an investment, the architectural magazine observes.

"Even the intelligent remodeling of a single house may raise the standard of an entire neighborhood," it says, pointing out that the difference between profitable and unprofitable rental of either home or business property is often dependent upon the attractiveness of its surroundings as well as the features of the building itself.

Benefit of Home Owning

The new home is not unlike the first watch possessed by a small boy. The watch is probably of the one-dollar variety, bought by some thoughtful uncle or father with the thought that it would probably crash on the sidewalk within a few days. But the mental effect of that watch upon the boy is not in ratio with its intrinsic value. Now he can tell people what time it is—now he is an important person—he has become somebody.

How much more does home ownership mean to the average grown-up boy! He is somebody in his community from the moment he moves into this home of his own. He is consulted about the new street paving and begins to take an interest in other civic matters. The new home has aroused his ego. It has made him a better citizen in the community in which he lives. It is a mark of thrift. —Washington Post.

Community Advertising

Industry and commerce ceased long ago to ask if advertising pays. The presence in all towns and cities of whatever size of chambers of commerce, boards of trade and other bodies, a part of whose function is to sing community praise, testifies that the value of public advertising is equally demonstrable. It is helpful, no matter how haphazardly or incompletely projected. When put upon a sound, thoroughly businesslike basis, when a city is advertised as intensively as a commodity reaching out for world markets, results are astonishing.

Alive to Benefit of Trees

In the last three years 350,000 trees were planted in New Hampshire. The offer last year of free trees was largely responsible for the year's total exceeding that of the three previous years combined. Boys and girls under sixteen were allowed 250 trees, and those between sixteen and twenty-one were given 500 trees.

This number of trees would plant a solid block of 400 acres, and if properly cared for, would yield 15,000,000 board feet of white pine lumber in 50 years.

Grounds Important

Even though your house be similar to others in its architectural details, your grounds can express your individuality. This is only one of the many possibilities which properly arranged plants present.

Truly, it is not a home until it is planted.

Show City's Stability

The number of resident house owners is a reliable index to a city's stability.

DEMONSTRATION OF NEW CRASH ABSORBER

Capt. Franzcarl Schleiff, one-armed former ace of the German air force, pointing out his invention, a crash absorber, after a demonstration. In one test he sped into a pillar of the Riverside Drive viaduct, Twelfth avenue and One Hundred Thirty-fourth street, New York, at a speed of over thirty miles an hour. The absorber consists of a 30-inch bar of solid rubber attached to the chassis by steel claws or scissors, its lateral extension and recoil spending the impact to right and left before it reaches the chassis. The absorber may then be restored to its proper shape. This was the first United States demonstration of the device which is being used in Europe.

Many Towns and Villages Have Pavements Designed for Horse.

(By E. E. DUFFY.)

Street and road progress has been rapid within the last few years, so rapid that numberless communities are still building pavements that are not at all suited for the heavy influx of automobiles.

Towns and cities the country over are largely equipped with pavements that were designed for the leisurely horse, who reigned when loads and vehicles were light and when bumps and rough spots didn't matter.

Modernize Designs.

Highway authorities are in accord on the thought that every community should modernize street designs and have a rehabilitation program underway with the purposeful replacement of antique highway surfaces by pavements that are both smooth and long wearing.

Aside from the wear and tear that poor pavements inflict on the motorist's car and pocketbook, they also account in a large measure for traffic congestion. Even small towns find that the bulk of the traffic is confined to a few through streets which have been well paved and that countless other streets carry little traffic because of holey, jagged bumpy surfaces.

Spring is in the offing and the havoc of winter is becoming more and more apparent. Chuck holes in inferior street surfaces are as much harbingers of spring as a game of marbles on the corner lot.

Coming of Repair Gang.

Year in and year out the coming of spring means the coming of the street repair gang and the going of taxpayers' money. Most street repairs come out of a community's general funds, and the taxpayer doesn't worry much because he isn't levied directly for this repair. But he foots the bill just the same. If street repairs were paid for by direct levies, taxpayers would insist on better pavements.

Modern traffic demands smooth hard surfaces, and where they are not supplied automobile operating costs are high, pavement upkeep is out of line, and satisfaction is conspicuous by its non-presence. In the words of one prominent city official, "Keep repair gangs off the streets by building the repairs into the pavement when the pavement is laid."

Solve Parking Problem by Use of Machinery

An automobile parking machine has been developed by engineers in East Pittsburgh, Pa. All that is necessary for a motorist to do is to drive his car onto a platform, pull a lever, obtain a check, and his car is automatically whisked upward out of sight. The device immediately places another empty platform at ground level, ready for another car. When ready to leave, the motorist can push a button corresponding to his check, and his car is delivered to him at ground level almost immediately. The machine consists of two endless chains passing over wheels at the top and bottom. Platforms are suspended between these chains. Each platform provides space for one automobile.

Cars Financed in 1929

Four hundred and eleven automobile financing organizations have reported to the Department of Commerce that 3,441,629 cars were financed during 1929, with an advance of $1,586,819,550.

Comparisons for 1928 were not furnished by these firms, in a statement made public by the department, but 325 identical financing concerns reported statistics for 1928 and 1929.

Weather Given as One Reason for Tire Wear

The prime causes of tire tread wear are high speed, temperature and weather, starting and stopping, and improper inflation.

Speeds can be reduced, tire pressure can be kept at the proper mark, and quick starts and stops can be reduced, it was pointed out.

The weather, naturally, cannot be controlled, and the tire owner who lives in a hot, dry climate must expect to get less mileage than the motorist who lives in a locality where cool and wet weather prevails.

AUTOMOBILE FACTS

A rim will cut through the best rubber if the tire is too soft. Maintain the proper pressure and you won't be troubled with rim cuts.

America has an automobile for every seven persons and only one bathtub for every twenty. Which shows our preference for outdoor sports.

"A Texas goat makes a specialty of eating motor tires." We have several unusually tender tires around the garage which are of no further use to us.

• • •

It has been predicted that the price of tires is going up. That means that the destruction of tires through underinflation will be more expensive than ever. And you can't maintain the right inflation unless you check your tires with a gauge regularly.

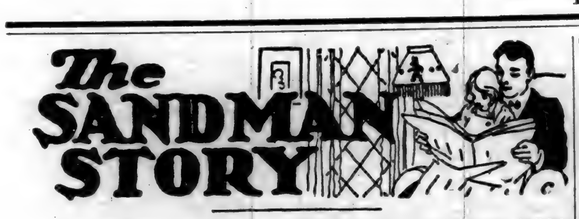
The SANDMAN STORY



GEORGIE, THE FROG

TOMMY hung on to the Wind, who was taking him for a trip, and all the time the Wind flew along; he whistled gayly.

But the trip was not a long one, even during his early adventures. In no time at all they were at the mountain top and the Wind introduced Tommy to the great pond leader.

The trip hadn't really taken so long, after all. Of course he had been enormously helped by this lift, which the Wind had given him. Still, it hadn't been so hard—save for the time he had almost stayed by the lake below. After he had made up his mind to come further, it had been easy.

Now he was at the top of the mountain and right in the heart of the top of the mountain was a pond—the loveliest pond he had ever seen.

"Thank You," Tommy Answered, "I'll Make Myself at Home."

In it were the colors of the sky. In it were the colors of the moss and ferns and flowers that were about. It seemed to hold in itself all the loveliest of shades and colors. And so close at hand seemed the sky, though Tommy stretched out a hand and found the sky, after all, was nowhere within reach.

Sitting on a stump, a handsome old stump, sat a big frog.

"I want to introduce you to Mr. Georgie Green Frog," said the Wind. "Georgie, meet Tommy."

"Goog-a-room," said Georgie, "make myself at home."

The Wind had gone off again, and Tommy was sitting by the edge of the pond, very near the stump. He thought he must have misunderstood the frog.

"Thank you," Tommy answered, "I'll make myself at home."

"Goog-a-room. I didn't say that," Georgie gurgled. "I said to myself, 'Make myself at home.' That makes me happy and puts you at ease. You'd be ill at ease, I'm sure, if I let a fly or a bug escape my nose. So I just go on the same, whether I have company or not."

"Is the cave near here?" Tommy asked.

"It is," said Georgie, "but don't hurry away just as you've come. Besides, the old man said I could talk to you first."

Tommy thought Georgie was quite an entertaining frog, and the thought of talking to him was a jolly one.

"The whole secret in this business of understanding animal talk," said Georgie, "is patience. Of course, as you're an adventurer, you're being given special permissions and privileges—and you can talk in a word-fashion with us. But as the old man says, anyone who has patience and who cares for creatures such as we are, can learn what we have to say and what we do and how we live.

"I'm the pond leader now. It was a great promotion for me."

Georgie swallowed a bug which had landed on his nose. Then he continued:

"There was a time when I was a foolish young frog. I thought I was better than all of the others. I went to take up my abode with the Sbons who live at Gums Landing. If you spell those words around the other way, you will see what they really mean, but in those days I didn't see anything right, and so I didn't see that.

"Well, they're creatures which look big at first, but you find they're pretty small after a time. And how they did treat me. They gave me a banquet, but they made remarks about my having been a tadpole in my youth and having come from a mud home, and that I swallowed my skin when I molted, showing, they said, how poor and of little account the family was that we had to eat our own skins!

"That was enough for me. So here I am leading the Frog Chorus every night."

Again Georgie swallowed a bug. "That was delicious, thank you, bug, so much," Georgie said. And then he added: "Of course the bug can't appreciate my thanks after he has been swallowed, but every once in a while I believe in being mannerly. It keeps one in practice."

"And it makes me think," said Tommy, "that I'm most frightfully hungry, and I've a knapsack filled with food."

Georgie started to croak and croak, then, and from all around came frogs and turtles, birds, squirrels and little wild rabbits.

Tommy spread out the knapsack, and everyone had a feast. Such good things as there were to eat, and such a lot of everything, too.

HISTORY'S MYSTERIES

Unsolved Riddles That Still Puzzle Authorities Here and Abroad

The Javanese Dancer

HER true name appears to have been Marguerite Gertrude Zelle, though the one by which she was much better—and rather more notoriously—known was Mlle. Mata-Hari, the title which she took when she made her vows as a vestal priestess at the great Buddhist temple of Burma at a time when mixing in the affairs of the great nations of the West was as foreign to her thoughts as the World war was to the minds of the majority of people. But Mata-Hari was destined to come intimately into connection with the conflict of nations, and finally, after a life of mystery, to face a firing squad in the fortress of Vincennes.

The child of a Javanese mother and a wealthy Dutch planter, Marguerite Zelle appears to have been given exceptional opportunities for education and training, opportunities far above those usually afforded to children of her race. Even before she entered the service of Buddha she gave signs of possessing more than an ordinary talent for dancing and, during the ten years which she spent within the walls of the nunnery, Mata-Hari perfected herself in the wierd, barbaric measures in which the natives wooed the beneficence of their deities.

But the world stretched forth its first tentacle in the shape of a young and personable army officer who attended one of the Buddhist festivals and with whom Mata-Hari fell in love at sight. Less than a week later she escaped from the sanctuary and fled with her lover to Paris, where they were married and lived for several years. It was not long, however, before the French capital began to hear rumors of a beautiful and extremely graceful dancer who had brought with her all the sinuous sensuous movements of the East, presenting these before private audiences at special afternoon functions.

Society, ever watching for something novel, enthused over this new sensation and her fame spread rapidly to other parts of the continent. London, Madrid, Rome, Lisbon, Berlin and Vienna, all put in bids for her services and Mata-Hari found it hard to meet all the calls for her art. Apparently, she divided her time equally among the different capitals, but those who followed her career closely recalled later that she made a point of being in Berlin and Vienna at certain stated periods of the year—the time when the agents of the Wilhelmstrasse, the dreaded German secret service, were gathered together for their conferences behind locked doors.

However, no suspicion attached itself to the beautiful Javanese until some time after the outbreak of the war. She came and went, unhindered by any thought of treachery, and during the first two years of the hostilities she flitted through England, Holland, Spain and Portugal, undoubtedly in constant communication with Berlin but unsuspected by the authorities. How much valuable information she had gathered during these trips was never discovered, but the fact that she spent huge sums of money upon her personal adornment and the support of her large and imposing retinue is in itself proof of the fact that the German secret service considered her well worth her hire.

Finally, the combination of her friendship with a young officer of the British tank corps and the fact that the Germans had been receiving an almost constant flow of information about this most important branch of the service led the English authorities to place Mata-Hari under a more strict surveillance. Sensing this, the dancer removed the scene of her operations to France, but the instant she stepped ashore at Cherbourg the French officials took up the trail where the British had left off. Mata-Hari was a marked woman. Less than a month later she was placed under arrest and the verdict of the court-martial was "Guilty and condemned to be shot for high treason!"

Just what secrets Mata-Hari had discovered, how she managed to get them past the watchful eyes of the British and French censors, how she received the money which enabled her to live in almost regal splendor and the way in which she had secured admittance to the charmed circle of the Wilhelmstrasse are only a few of the mysteries which surround this remarkable woman—mysteries which she took with her when, on the morning of October 15, she faced the rifles of the firing squad in the court yard of the palace of Vincennes.

Small Boy Disillusioned

To Stanley, aged four, Doctor L., as he drove about in his motor car, making his professional calls and curing aches and pains of little boys as well as grown folks, was a being worthy of profoundest admiration.

One day as Stanley and his mother waited their turn in the doctor's reception room, filled with patients, his mother remarked to a lady next her:

"What a large practice Doctor L. has!"

"Practice," exclaimed Stanley, with amazement, disappointment and a shade of contempt registered in his voice. "Is he only practicing, mother? I thought he was a real doctor!"—New York Sun.

For Meditation

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

WOMEN AND CIVILIZATION

THE civilization of Egypt was the greatest of the ancient world. The wealthy classes were educated, but the schools placed a barrier against the education of the common classes. The main purpose of Egypt was to develop men. Women were relegated to obscurity, her rights and privileges being limited by the superstition of her age. The schools of Greece admitted any person except women and slaves. There was, however, a certain woman belonging to a definite class to whom was given all the cultural advantages of the times. No money was spared in her mental and physical development; but she was not the Christian mother of our day, but the notorious charlatan. In India every fifth girl was a widow. Twenty-five million of these widows resided in India, eighteen millions of whom were very little girls from five to nine years of age. Only six out of every thousand were educated. In India a husband could have as many wives as he was able to support. A wife could be divorced at the will of her husband. According to the Hindoo philosophy there was no place in the mental development of the age for women. "We all believe in the sanctity of the cow and in the depravity of women." Female babies were frequently murdered at birth. In India a woman could pray to the gods only in her husband's name. She had to be reborn in this world as a man before she could hope to have a place in eternity. In Africa women were sold like cattle. "Five large blue glass beads would buy a woman, but it took ten to buy a cow," the cow being the object of religious veneration.

L. A. Barrett.

How different is the attitude toward women in Christian civilization. The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world. Motherhood is a most wonderful national blessing. The majority of those whose names are in the American Hall of Fame were children of Christian mothers. If America owes her greatness to any one thing more than another, it is the silent influence of her Christian motherhood. Paganism inevitably must perish because the Orient has no stabilizing power upon which to build her future. Civilization is fighting no losing battle, it is moving steadily forward and will ultimately dominate the world, because Christian mothers will continue to give to sons and daughters the power to decide between a "secular civilization whose God is science and an unselfish civilization whose God is love."

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

BIRDS AND DEATH

"IF A bird alights upon a person's head that person will die." "If a bird alights on a sick person's bed the sick person will die." These are two of the many superstitions common in this country regarding birds with which superstitious people make themselves unhappy. They might spare themselves this unhappiness did they but know that the superstitions in question are merely survivals of the Pythagorean doctrine of the transmigration of souls changed into evil omens by that morbid strain so common in man's mental makeup.

"What is the opinion of Pythagorus concerning wild fowl?" asks the clown in Twelfth Night. To which Malvolio replied "That the soul of your grandma might happily inhabit a bird."

Many savage peoples today are as wise as Pythagorus and believe that the souls of the dead frequently enter birds. George I promised the Duchess of Kendal—one of his left-handed widows—that he would come to her after death if possible and soon after his demise a great raven flew in at the window of the duchess' villa at Wickenham. She chose to imagine that the king's spirit was in the sable bird and took special care of her visitor. Thackeray wonders—for these birds are very longlived—if her heirs took the bird to Hanover and whether "it is still flapping its wings about Herrenhausen." The connection between the doctrine of the migration of souls into birds and the foretelling of death by the alighting of a bird upon a person's head, or a sick person's bed is clear. The alighting of the bird is a presentation of the receptacle for the soul, as it were.

Humorous Americans

"The saving grace of Americans," said a Russian visitor, "is their sense of humor. Without this they would crack from the severe competitive strain that sends them scurrying about the streets at such a mad rate. But Americans can always stop to laugh, and in so doing they provide themselves with the relaxation they would not ordinarily get. This sense of humor is a national asset, and lacking in most Europeans."

"No," answered Senator Sorghum. "I like it for the sake of variety. It gives me a new kind."

When BABIES are upset

Baby ills and ailments seem twice as serious at night. A sudden cry may mean colic. Or a sudden attack of diarrhea—a condition it is always important to check quickly. How would you meet this emergency—tonight? Have you a bottle of Castoria ready? There is nothing that can take the place of this harmless but effective remedy for children; nothing that acts quite the same, or has quite the same comforting effect on them.

For the protection of your wee one—for your own peace of mind—keep this old, reliable preparation always on hand. But don't keep it just for emergencies; let it be an everyday aid. Its gentle influence will ease and soothe the infant who cannot sleep. Its mild regulation will help an older child whose tongue is coated because of sluggish bowels. All druggists have Castoria; the genuine bears Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper.

The greatest prevailing illusion is chicken salad.

The peanut vender is always working a shell game.

Old and young can take this family laxative; free trial bottle!

The next time you or the children need a laxative, try this famous doctor's prescription which aids the bowels without doing any harm. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, containing pure senna and laxative herbs, is effective in a gentle and helpful way. Its action is thorough, but it never weakens the bowels. It stimulates muscular action and is thus actually good for the system. So remember Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin when coated tongue, fetid breath, headaches, nausea, jaded appetite or biliousness tells the need of a thorough cleansing. Druggists keep it in big bottles, or write Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, Monticello, Ill., for a free trial bottle.

Only One Woman Nominated

The democrats cast a total of 3,081 votes for the candidates for congress, or about 400 more votes than they cast in the primary in 1928. The republican vote for all candidates for state representative Tuesday was 2,119, which is more than 500 less than the total cast two years ago.

Of nineteen county offices to be filled, the republicans nominated eleven farmers and the democrats twelve. Only one woman candidate had the distinction of being nominated. She is Mrs. Mary McCague Brown of Garrett, republican, named for county recorder. She had no opposition in the primary.

Mr. Kelham had the largest margin of votes among the democratic contests, while Charles E. Miser, for assessor, had that distinction among the republican candidates. The closest democratic race was for recorder and the closest republican vote was for commissioner southwest.

The republicans renominated their candidates for congress, coroner, assessor and county councilman from the first district, while those renominated on the democratic ticket are the prosecuting attorney and E. W. Johnson and J. H. St. Clair for councilmen-at-large.

The first precinct making its report to the county election commissioners at the court house was No. 6 of Wilmington township at 9:30 Tuesday night. All reports were in before noon Wednesday and the official tabulation was completed by the canvassers by 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

PROHIBITION TO BE CAMPAIGN ISSSE

Results of Primary in Two Indiana Congressional Districts Indicate Wet and Dry Battle

Indianapolis, May 7.—Prohibition will be an issue in the November election in two congressional districts, it appeared today on the face of incomplete returns from yesterday's primary.

Incomplete returns of the Marion county vote gave Ira M. Holmes, a wet, considerable lead over his dry opponents in the race for the seventh district republican nomination. Holmes would oppose Louis Ludlow, dry democrat, for the election in the fall.

In the 13th district Samuel B. Pettengal, lawyer and modificationist of South Bend, was conceded victory over J. Harry Browning, Elkhart, dry, for the democratic nomination. Rep. Andrew J. Hickey, Laporte, who was given the support of the Anti-Saloon League, will carry republican colors in November.

All of Indiana's thirteen congressmen will be entered in the fall election it was certain today.

Some doubt still remained over the contest between Rep. Albert H. Vestal, Anderson, and Joe H. Davis, Muncie, in the eighth district, this morning but tabulations late today showed that Vestal would win renomination.

With exception of the eighth district, and Lake county, voting throughout the state was spiritless. In the eighth, however, it was believed the vote would exceed the record balloting of 1928, and in Lake county a near record vote of 50,000 was cast.

Seven of the congressmen were without opposition. They were James W. Dunbar, New Albany, third district; Fred S. Purnell, Attica, ninth district; Will R. Wood, Lafayette, tenth district; David Hogg, Fort Wayne, 12th district;

This Week's Short Story

The strong man, knife in hand, gazed at the smooth white body in the water. "I cannot do it!" he groaned. "It is not a man's work!" and the tears streamed from his eyes. The woman, with a look of utter scorn on her face, took the knife and—finished peeling the onions.—Maroon and Blue.

Among Us Women By Mrs. Ruth Stone

RUBBER CRIB SHEET PROTECTS MATTRESS

Most mothers include in the layette a couple of good quality crib sheets of durable rubber to put on the baby's basinette or bed. Every mother wants her baby to be sweet, clean and appealing at all times, and there is no way to do this if the bedding is not always fresh and dry. A Hickory crib sheet will make this possible as well as saving a great deal of superfluous washing of sheets and blankets.

At least two crib sheets are necessary, one to put on the bed and another to be washed, dried and aired and then put in the baby's dresser ready for use. Hickory crib sheets are of good quality coated rubber, yet not so heavy as to be cumbersome and hot to the little body. They are acid and moisture proof, which assures long wear. And because a mother wants daintiness wherever her baby is concerned, even in the most prosaic details, these crib sheets come with pretty little colored ruffled edges. They may also be had plain in white or flesh.

To wash use lukewarm water and pure soap flakes. Do not ring, but squeeze out the water lightly and dry by rubbing with a clean cloth and then sprinkling with talcum. Be sure the sheet is absolutely dry before putting it on the baby's bed, but do not put it over the radiator to dry.

RUBBER APRON KEEPS SKIRTS WRINKLE-FREE

A wrinkled skirt is as taboo by well-dressed women as are crooked hose seams or ill-kept hands. In these days of close-fitting frocks with rippling hemlines, a creaseless skirt is more essential than ever. One of the best ways of keeping your dresses in good condition and with the minimum of effort and expense is to wear a Hickory sanitary apron at all times. This tends to keep body warmth and perspiration from creasing one's skirts and makes pleats stay in much longer.

Sanitary aprons can be had in a variety of shades, styles and weights and at prices to suit all purses. There are sturdy aprons of good weight rubber for service use, silk faced, lace edged aprons for the woman who insists on daintiness at all times, and the softest, filmiest aprons of gossamer weight in beautifully patterned rubber for evening and dress wear. In all styles, a shaped band of net, nainsook or silk over the hips makes the apron fit smoothly and allows for ventilation.

Many women prefer to haste a sanitary apron in each frock, so that there is no extra garment to be put on, no strings around the waist, and the apron is always in perfect position. The apron is removed before the frock is sent to the cleaners. It should be washed in lukewarm water with pure soap flakes, and dried with a towel.

In addition to keeping skirts wrinkle free and to affording periodic protection, the use of a sanitary apron tends to make transparent garments shadow proof.

Business Ideals

We are justly proud of our up-to-the-minute equipment, and of our experienced and efficient staff. But even more important, we feel, is the spirit back of this organization—the ideals and aims which actuate every transaction into which we enter.

Like all other business enterprises, we try to receive a reasonable compensation for our work. But we have found there is a higher reward than profit, the knowledge of a genuine service rendered in a conscientious and sympathetic manner.

JESUS ACCLAIMED AS KING

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 21:1-46.

GOLDEN TEXT—Hosanna to the son of David: Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord; Hosanna in the highest.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Children's Praise Song.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Hailing Jesus as King.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Making Christ Our King.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Making Christ Our King.

I. The Preparation (vv. 1-6).

1. The sending of the disciples for the ass (vv. 1-3).

Christ told them just where to go to find it and how to answer the inquiry of the one who owned it. This shows how perfectly Jesus knows our ways. The providing of the animal was not man's plan, but according to Christ's foreknowledge.

2. The fulfillment of prophecy (vv. 4, 5).

Some five hundred years before this, Zechariah had made this prediction (Zech. 9:9). Christ's coming in this way was in exact fulfillment of Zechariah's prediction. This is highly instructive to those who would understand as yet unfulfilled prophecy. If the predictions of His first coming were thus literally fulfilled, there is no alternative but to believe that those of His second coming will likewise be literally fulfilled.

3. The obedience of the disciples (v. 6).

The request may have seemed strange and unreasonable, but they obeyed.

II. The Entrance of the King (vv. 7-11).

1. The disciples put their garments upon the ass and set the Lord thereon (v. 7).

This act showed that they recognized Him as their King (II Kings 9:13).

2. The multitude (vv. 8, 9).

Some spread their garments in the way; others who had no garments to spare, cut down branches and did the same with them.

3. The city awakened (vv. 10, 11).

It was a stirring time, but a more stirring time is to come. This will be when the Lord comes in power and glory.

III. The King Rejected (vv. 12-16).

The immediate occasion of this rejection was the cleansing of the temple. To sell oxen and sheep and doves was legitimate, as well as to exchange money in doing it, but doing it for gain was wrong. As soon as the spirit of avarice enters, the house of prayer becomes a den of thieves.

IV. The Nation Rejected by the King (vv. 17-46).

Having shown their unwillingness to receive Christ as King when officially presented to them, Christ now turns from them and makes known their awful condition in the following parables:

1. The barren fig tree cursed (vv. 17-22).

It was on the morrow after his official presentation as He was returning from Jerusalem that Jesus observed the unfruitful fig tree. The barren fig tree is a type of Israel. With its leaves, it gave a show of life, but being destitute of fruit, it had no right to cumber the ground.

2. The parable of the two sons (vv. 28-32).

Both sons were told by the father to work in the vineyard. The one refused outright to obey, but afterwards repented and went. The other pretended a willingness to obey, but in reality did not. The first one represents the publicans and harlots. The second the proud and self-righteous Pharisees—priests and elders.

3. The parable of the householder (vv. 30-46).

(1) This was God Himself. (2) The vineyard. This means Israel (Isa. 5:1-7, Jer. 2:21, Ps. 80:9). The Lord went to particular pains to gather out this nation and make it separate, bestowing peculiar favors upon it. This vineyard so well kept and provided for, did not bear fruit. (3) The husbandmen. These were the spiritual guides—the rulers and teachers of Israel. (4) The servants were sent for the fruit of the vineyard. These were the various prophets whom God sent to the nation. They were beaten and killed. (5) The Lord Jesus Christ, God's only and beloved Son, came into their midst. They knew Him to be the Son, but did not show Him reverence. They not only rejected the kingdom, but the King who was the Son.

A Great Will

Look at a great life, and you will find a great will behind it. But it is not self-will; it is a will attuned to that of God. Therefore it goes forward on the road of victory.—Young People.

Believing in God

There is nothing, in fact, that you can undertake with so great hopefulness and assurance as a victory over yourselves if only you can believe in God.—Horace Bushnell.

THE STORY

Floyd Unwin and Howard Bettington take dinner with an old college chum, Alfred Gibbons, financial magnate. Unwin produces a written pledge taken by the three at college to help each other in adversity, explaining that he needs financial assistance to educate his son Bob and daughter Mary. Gibbons agrees to make a place for the daughter in his organization. Mary Unwin is stenographer to a wealthy debauchee, Elgar Radway. Calling at Gibbons' office, as arranged, Mary is asked to betray her employer's secrets and refuses. Radway plans an ocean voyage to recover from the effects of dissipation. Mary is to go as secretary, her brother to accompany her. Bettington, painting on the Maine coast, is kidnaped, and taken aboard Radway's yacht. His clothes are found by Gibbs, a fugitive from justice, who dons them and goes to Bettington's studio, and there falls to his death. Bettington is questioned by a man known as the "Boss." He is shown an account of Gibbs' death, the body being identified as Bettington. The "Boss" intends to hold Radway for $1,000,000 ransom. Bettington is told he will be forced to assist.

"It was a very serious blow to me, and it's an amazing coincidence that the master can finish what the pupil began. I was in luck there. Listen, Orme. At a word I can send you back for that sentence which will end only when you die. Furthermore, I am not putting myself in your power. You may never know my real name. I could look calmly at the very detectives who had spent years looking for me because I gaze at them with a different face. I will wager that you have seen the face I wore for years. When my bank failed, with such disastrous results, I was in every paper where illustrations are found. Yes, you know the real me. But Clements—the man you are looking at—is only a year old and his past is blameless. It took Beardsley a year to re-create me and it will take you a few minutes probably, to rectify one mistake."

Bettington had heard, often enough, of the comparatively new branch of surgery which devoted itself to the face. He had associated it with beauty parlors and quackery in general. Now, suddenly, he was convinced that what Clements said was true.

But to find that he was expected to undertake some of it was horrifying. He shrank from the idea, but would not permit Clements to see it.

"Beardsley must have cut a nerve, for suddenly I found myself with this damnable smile. It never leaves me, Orme, I haunt myself. . . . Sometimes I think I cannot go on living, unless the curse is removed from me. I thought everything was well done. I had finished with Beardsley before I knew."

Bettington wondered what was the cause of Beardsley's death.

"He died of pneumonia," said Clements, as though he had read the doubt in his companion's mind. "It was a sad blow to me."

"He was never strong," Bettington found himself saying, with gravity.

Reluctantly Clements rose and put on the steward's livery coat.

"In this drawer," he said, "you will find some of the most recent books on operative surgery. They may refresh your memory. Take them to your room."

They proved of no benefit to Howard Bettington. Their idioms were beyond his comprehension. He put the books aside and went out on deck.

Mrs. Radway was sitting in a chaise longue, writing letters. She looked up at Bettington and smiled as he passed.

"I am driven to writing letters to people I have almost forgotten. I'm afraid this is going to be a very dull month, doctor."

"Dull!" he said to himself, as he took a seat and looked out at the placid ocean. "If she only guessed!"

Never, he supposed, in the history of yachting had such a company been assembled by the design of one man. He was tempted to cross the deck to Todd and tell him to wireless to the government what was afoot. If any accident happened to him, what could save Evelyn Radway and Unwin's children?

"The other night," Mrs. Radway began, "it was as a friend I spoke to you. I felt you were friendly to me."

"Indeed, you were right," he said earnestly.

"Now it's to the doctor I am speaking." He hoped his face did not show his alarm and disappointment. "It's about Mr. Radway. I am horribly disappointed in his behavior. He came here to get himself into good physical condition and he has given way to absinthe. Doctor Waite, you must help me."

"How?" he demanded. He was overcome with the layman's feeling of hopelessness in the presence of illness.

"After all, you are a physician, aren't you?"

"Yes," he found himself forced to say. It seemed horrible to have to tell her a deliberate lie.

"Then it is your duty to go to him and tell him he's killing himself. And couldn't you see that that horrible Clements offered him drinks all the time?" She sighed. "It isn't very pleasant to have to confess that my warnings or pleadings have no longer any effect."

"You wish me to go now?"

"If you would."

"I'm afraid there is very little I can do," he said rising. "I have no sort of authority except what he gives me. If warning him is any good, I'll certainly do that."

He went below and then to the bow of the boat, feeling he was going on a useless errand.

Radway looked up as though he had been expecting such a visit. Except that a purple hue was spread over his face more deep than anything Bettington had ever seen on human visage, he had no air of intoxication. Years before in Paris, Bettington had noted how absinthe acts. It is a curious property of the spirit that its effects vary with the individual. It gave Radway the delusion of incredible powers and predisposed him to acts of physical violence.

"I should like to have them all down here," he said in mordant tone. "I am not sure that a man has lived unless he has actually squeezed the life out of the throats of men he hates."

"What particular lives do you want to end?" Bettington asked.

"The Gibbons gang. Alfred Gibbons first. He and his group have tried for years to hate me to death; it's quite possible."

"They're succeeding apparently," Bettington replied, and pointed to the bottle of absinthe in the rack. "Have you ever thought that they may all be concentrating on you to drink this stuff? I don't know any surer way of death. You better lie down, you look all in."

"It's my constant headache that knocks me out," Radway returned, and pressed his temples as though in pain. "Sometimes it is so bad, I actually am blinded. . . . It's their concentrated hate."

Bettington turned away in disgust. The spectacle of this wreck, drifting toward destruction and blaming others for his disaster, seemed pitiful.

"Don't go," Radway said querulously. "Stay here."

Bettington paid no heed to him. Mrs. Radway was waiting for him anxiously. She could not rid herself of the feeling that this voyage was to end in tragedy.

"Were you able to do anything?" she demanded eagerly.

For the moment he did not answer. He wanted to ask her a question and did not desire her to feel the humiliation of having to endure his gaze as he asked it.

"Have you any reason," he said gently, "to fear physical violence from him in this state?"

There was a perceptible pause before she answered.

"The possibility exists, but it's most remote."

"If you like," he said, "I'll take one of these forward staterooms to be near him."

He hoped she would construe this to mean that he was merely exhibiting the physician's readiness to be at his patient's side in danger. He did not want her to realize that Radway's safety meant nothing to him. He felt she would be frightened to learn that his only concern was to protect her from the violence of a man almost insane.

"I think there is no need for that," she returned gratefully. "In fact, it might anger him if he found it out. He has a hatred of being spied upon, as he calls it."

Mary Unwin came up at this moment with Crosby Todd. Mary smiled pleasantly, but the wireless operator paid no attention to the ship's surgeon. Bettington watched Mary with the artist's admiration as she went off with Todd. She seemed to embody youth.

"I hardly realized the child was so beautiful," he muttered.

"She's in love," said Mrs. Radway. "I don't think she has ever been in love before. She has found a new heaven and a new earth."

Clements passed by.

"There's the man Captain Hallett particularly dislikes," Mrs. Radway said, when he had gone.

"Don't you?" Bettington demanded.

Mrs. Radway hesitated. "I'm never quite sure. He is so courteous and has such an agreeable voice . . . and yet, I sometimes feel afraid. Perhaps it is that settled smile which prejudices one. His features are good. Yes, it must be that smile."

Bettington wondered what the real Clements had been like. The voice had been cultivated to avert suspicion that the face gave rise to. And now the face was gone and one had been created to match the voice.

"Why do you sigh?" Mrs. Radway asked curiously. She noticed that there was a look of sadness, almost of despair, on his face. He was far too good looking, she had often told herself, to have escaped the attentions of her sex. "Something has upset you, doctor," she exclaimed.

He realized suddenly that he was nervous. Suppose the role he had set out to play was one beyond his ability or courage. He thought of Sam and Metzger and Leary, and the lesser men they controlled. Somehow he felt that Clements was only money-mad and could be satisfied only with money. But Metzger and Sam! Metzger who liked what he called "class," and Sam who loved youth. Even at this moment Sam, enormously broad, prodigiously strong, and in his heart free from all sentiments of pity, was crossing the deck slowly, watching Crosby Todd leaning over the side talking to Mary.

Bettington wondered if there could be a better example of a beautiful woman, beautifully gowned and exquisitely cared for, than the lovely

"You'd Better Lie Down—You Look All In."

Mrs. Radway. She had never been deprived of the luxuries of her class and country. Everything about her was beautiful and rare. What a morsel for Metzger!

Bettington was musing on this when he felt a hand on his shoulder. It was Sam. Sam was looking in the direction of Todd. His great flat face was distorted with rage.

"I seen him kissing my gal," Sam growled.

Bettington shook himself free of the sailor's grasp. "He's young and good looking, and you're not."

Sam paid no attention to this. He was still glaring at the retreating wireless operator. If murder looked out of human eyes it was focused on Todd then by the deep-chested sailor.

Bettington was glad he had an excuse to get away from the angry brute. "I must change my clothes for dinner," he said.

They had to wait for Radway. Bettington hoped that the owner would not come to dinner.

Mary Unwin was plainly nervous. Mrs. Radway showed no fear at all. She was playing a bright little dance by Chaminade when Radway came in. His face was still highly congested. Clements met him with the inevitable cocktail.

It was toward the end of dinner that Radway made his one remark. It was addressed to Bettington. There was a mocking politeness in his voice.

"Is it part of your contract to dine with your employer?"

"Unfortunately it is," Bettington returned instantly.

There was silence until Mrs. Radway and Mary left. Bettington, who had risen when the ladies did, dropped in his chair again and stared at the financier. He felt he had never detested any living being so much. This was the man who had married beautiful Evelyn Whiteburn and had made her miserable. This was the man who had promised her so much and had done so little. He wondered what violent passages there had been in their lives. She had admitted that there was a possibility of danger for her when he was in this state; and it was no new thing for him to be as he was now.

He watched Radway rise, this time not steadily, and go to his quarters. Bettington made his way to the after quarter deck.

It was Clements who interrupted his unhappy meditations. Clements presented an unusual appearance of haste.

"It's Radway," he cried, "you'd better come at once. I don't know what's the matter."

Radway was lying on the floor insensible.

"No wonder after what he's drunk this week," Clements said. "Absolutely dead to the world." He watched Bettington stoop down and carry Radway to the bed. "By Jingo, but you're strong!" he said.

"I don't think this is drink alone," Bettington said. "I don't like it at all."

Clements had no suspicion that Bettington was not a skilled physician. It chanced that Harrowgate, the celebrated painter, had just such a seizure as this in the studio he shared with Bettington in Rome. The doctor who attended him put Harrowgate's feet in hot mustard and water and applied ice to his head. Clements saw Bettington loosen the senseless man's clothing and then begin the treatment.

After a while Radway opened his eyes.

"I remember falling," he said presently. "I must have knocked myself out. I'll be all right in the morning." In a sense he dismissed them peremptorily.

They heard him bolt the door when they were outside it.

"Clements," Bettington said with conviction, "you've helped him to kill himself. That man's very ill."

"Nonsense," Clements said. "You're a surgeon and this sort of thing isn't your line at all. It's like asking a racehorse to pull a huckster's van. As for my helping him to kill himself, that's absurd. What that man has wanted he has taken. The whole world knows that."

"I suppose so," Bettington admitted. After all, neither he nor a steward had any control over Radway's appetites.

"I want you to meet the other men," Clements said.

"I've seen them already," Bettington returned.

"You are to meet them on a different footing this time. They feel you have no right to be supercilious. There is only one boss among them, and I'm he. They are to be in my stateroom within a few minutes. For your own good, I advise you to seek their goodwill."

Bettington looked at him squarely. "If you think I'm going to make a bosom friend of men like Sam and that hangdog Hamner, you are mistaken. I did not elect to come on this trip and I shall behave as I choose. I signed on as ship's surgeon. Very well, I'll play the part, but whenever did you know of a ship's surgeon making a companion of a deck hand?"

They traversed the length of the ship in silence. Bettington felt certain that Clements was enraged at what he supposed to be insubordination.

"I will not have my plans imperiled," Clements said, in the safety of his stateroom. "You must be careful not to risk any quarreling with them. They are hot-headed and feel you are reveling in luxury, while they work hard."

"You are thinking of Metzger?"

"Particularly of him. He is a jealous brute, as ready with a knife as with his tongue. He complains that you glare at him offensively."

"And shall continue to do so."

"Do you mean to defy me? Have you forgotten that I hold your life in my hand?"

"Have you forgotten that the master of Beardsley will some day hold your life in his?"

There was a subtle change in Clements' bearing.

"We must not misunderstand one another. Yes, I depend on you; I admit it. We are using these swine for our own purposes, but we must not let them know it nor get out of hand. I think I hear them outside now. For the success of the venture, unbend to them."

The cook, who walked majestically and had the air of one who has cooked but for kings, was introduced as Antonio Pereira.

"A very skilled user of the knife," Clements said. "He would be in a palace kitchen now but for it. He has all the villainy of the world at his fingertips."

Antonio Pereira bowed as one might who had been introduced as the greatest musician of his time.

"Graumann," Clements went on, "is the greatest 'peteman' out of jail. I have uses for him later, among the ports of South America. Kenzie has no special attributes except his skill as an engineer and a preference for crooked paths. Krause"—he indicated a blond man, almost bald—"Krause has the newspaper instinct. He is an expert at listening posts. As a news gatherer he has few equals. These four men, doctor, know their jobs."

Bettington bowed to them amiably. He longed to transfer their faces to canvas. Each one a different type and yet each wholly villainous. The cook was the most picturesque; Hamner the one he most disliked. Graumann looked like a wolf without disguise.

The meeting resolved itself into a kind of committee meeting in which accounts of the past week's business was demanded by the chairman. There was no wild, incendiary talk.

When the others had gone Bettington turned to the steward. "I'm anxious to know when you plan to let Radway discover how things are."

"Not for a long time. It will be two weeks more, let us say."

CHAPTER VII

An Ocean Tragedy

Bettington was glad when he entered the main saloon next morning for breakfast that Radway was not there. He rather dreaded that false, pre-prandial heartiness and he was not anxious to have to be amiable toward a man whose qualities he despised.

"Radway isn't up yet." It was Clements' voice. He had not seen the steward steal to his side. "He doesn't answer when I knock."

Bettington put down his cup. He could swear trouble brooded in the other's eyes.

"Think it's anything serious?"

"You know you were frightened of his condition last night, doctor. I think you'd better find out if anything's wrong."

Radway's door was locked, but Clements had a master key. Bettington closed the door behind him. He had seen enough in one brief glance.

Elgar Radway was dead. It was plain, even to Bettington, that he had been dead many hours. The two men looked at one another and said nothing. To Bettington the thing seemed the hand of Providence. It meant that the Albatross must put about and run for New York. It meant that the two women would never know the peril in which they had been placed. Evelyn was now doubly safe. Safe from the violence and cruelties of the dead man, as well as from the lusts of Clements' crime crew.

"This means ruin," Clements said slowly.

Bettington shrugged his shoulders. "What will be, will be."

"A fool's creed!" cried Clements. "Was that what you felt in San Quentin? You know it wasn't or you would never have killed a guard in order to escape. The only death which will ever beat me will be my own."

"Mrs. Radway must know," Bettington reminded him.

Clements nodded. "All right. It comes better from you."

Bettington found her on deck.

"Have you seen Mr. Radway?" she asked. He thought there was an air of coldness about her, an aloofness that was strange.

Evelyn Radway, although all vestige of affection for her husband had long since disappeared, was actuated by what she felt to be duty to him. She had realized with a start that her life on board would have been unutterably dreary without Doctor Waite. She was conscious of a quickening of her pulses when he was with her and a loneliness when he was away. Even after schooling herself to be cool, indifferent and aloof, she could not help being glad when Howard Bettington came to her side. Few girls marry their ideals; she had not. But she recognized in the ship's surgeon, as one sees an old and almost forgotten face, the man she had idealized before she set ambition above love.

"It is about him I want to speak."

"You mean he is ill?" she cried.

He bowed his head.

"Oh," she cried. "You mean he is dead!"

Without a word she followed him to the forward stateroom. Clements withdrew as he heard her coming.

She glanced in a little fearfully. For a few seconds she stood in the doorway. Then she turned to Bettington.

Literature for Blind Before Braille System

One of the earliest systems whereby the blind might read originated in Peru, where the alphabet was formed by knots on a length of string. In the Sixteenth century Francesco Lucas, a Spaniard, engraved characters on wood for the blind, and in 1640 an arrangement of movable metal type was used in France. This plan failed through lack of funds and the blind had to revert to the wooden letters and pins stuck in cushions. Other devices for the blind were Doctor Pinseaux's frame with a small handle into which metal letters could be inserted, and a German scheme with letters cut in cardboard. Then Valentin Hauy realized the possibilities of embossed paper. It was at this school that Louis Braille was a pupil and he saw the superiority of the point system over the many others, including Gall's Moon type, that were causing confusion. His method is now world-wide. The Koran has been transcribed into Braille, and the system adapted to Chinese and Arabic.

Wisdom of Antoninus

For a man can lose neither the past nor the future; for how can one take from him that which is not his? So remember these two points: First, that each thing is of like form from everlasting and comes round again in its cycle and that it signifies not whether a man shall look upon the same things for a hundred years or two hundred, or for an infinity of time; second, that the longest lived and the shortest lived man, when they come to die, lose one and the same thing.—Marcus Aurelius Antoninus (121-180 A. D.), "Meditations."

Fearsome Creature

Maud Rex Allen says: "As known in Japan, the conception of the dragon is undoubtedly derived from the products of the imagination of the early Chinese, who were especially fond of evolving supernatural forms by combining parts of various animals. It is essentially a serpent, with horns of a deer, the head of a horse, eyes like that of a red worm, scales like those of a carp, ears like a cow, paws like a tiger and claws like an eagle. It has flamelike appendages on shoulders and hips. On either foot are three, four or five claws—the imperial dragon of China has five; that of Japan three."

Pretty College Custom

Horace Mann began the custom of the "May walk" at Antioch college in the early days of the college. It is an annual walk through the glens to Clifton. The scenery is unusually beautiful.

FARM BUREAU MEETINGS SCHEDULED

A large group gathered in the Assembly Room of the Court House on Monday evening for the Farm Bureau meeting. Mr. Clif Townsend from the Indiana Farm Bureau Indianapolis made a very forceful speech indicating that it was the duty of every farmer to belong to a National Farm Organization. Mr. E. G. Frieke, District Representative of the Indiana Farm Bureau Cooperative Association was present and gave a short discussion in regard to the set up of the local farm bureau cooperative association. Mr. Frieke explained how co-operative associations are chartered by the state and federal laws. After his discussion it was clear to all that after his explanation of the cooperative organization only members of the Farm Bureau should receive patronage refunds.

At the close of Mr. Townsend's address it was decided to hold several township Farm Bureau meetings that will start Monday, May 12th. The first meeting will be held in Keyser Township at the City Hall in Garrett on Monday night the 12th at 8:00 Central Standard Time. MAY AND JUNE CHICKS

Did you ever hear a poultry raiser make one of the following statements: "My late hatch chicks just sleep themselves to death; my first bunch of chicks this year did fine; those I put out the latter part of May just didn't do any good at all?"

But occasionally you hear a man say, "I bought chicks about the first of June last year, and they laid all winter. They did me a lot of good, and I made some real money out of them."

It is harder to do a good job of raising chicks that are hatched in May and June than it is those earlier in the season. It is not impossible, however, to raise a higher percentage of chicks hatched during these months, nor to make good profitable producers of them.

One of the reasons we have more trouble with May and June chicks is that the poultryman is usually busier this time of the year and does not give the chicks as good attention as he does earlier chicks. Anyone who has had the experience of brooding a February, March or April brood and then putting some chicks out May or June has more or less let down on giving them close attentoin; when the truth is, May and June chicks need as much, if not more attention than those hatched earlier.

It is hard to keep the brooder stove running so that the temperatures are comfortable for the chicks. If the weather is warm, yet the chicks are not old enough to do without heat, it is not always possible to run the temperature low enough by reducing the amount of fuel consumed to make them comfortable, and more ventilation is the only answer to it. Often a mistake is made by taking the heat away from chicks completely because it is late enough in the year that it would seem they could do without it. It is not safe to take heat away from chicks until they are reasonably well feathered even though they are hatched late in the year. Heat ought to be continued at least for five or six week.

Sometimes the idea is expressed that we can put more chicks in the house in May and June because they are out doors more. I would recommend less chicks be put in the house through May and June than are housed earlier in the season. The difficulty is not during the daytime but when the birds go to roost at night. During the hotter weather it is necessary that they have a chance to spread out more so that they can keep comfortable at night.

Disease is more likely to hit the late hatch chicks on account of the fact that they get on the ground earlier and range farther. It is very necessary that late chicks be brooded on clean ground if we want to keep away from trouble with Coccidiosis and worms, and they should not be allowed to range with the flock of laying hens.

Paint the perches and perch supports with a good wood preservative or shingle stain in order to keep mites down.

STATE POLICE FORCE IS NOW COMPLETE

Indianapolis, May 9.—Law violators generally and those in particular who pay little heed to traffic regulations on state highways will have rough going in Indiana from now on.

Under new regulations laid down by Otto G. Fifield, secretary of state, through Robert T. Humes, chief of the state motor police, every inch of state highway is to be patrolled thoroughly during the months of heavy traffic.

Redistricting of state police districts has been completed at the request of Mr. Fifield, becoming effective May 1. The new regulations interlock in a manner that place a state motor policeman on a state road throughout the entire day. A difficult task has been accomplished by the police bureau in revising the patrol system to cover the maximum number of miles with the few men in the police department.

"This summer will undoubtedly be the busiest season we have had on the highways since the creation of the state police department, Mr. Fifield said. "Every state policeman has been instructed to use every means at his command to make highway travel as safe as possible."

Under the regulations of the department, in order to insure complete patrol of the roads, each policeman is required to have his report stamped by the postmaster of the city at each end of his patrol.

Installation of a radio receiving set in the headquarters at Indianapolis has been completed, the station being tuned in on the Indianapolis police department station WMDZ. Although funds are not available for equipping machines used by the state policemen, two of the officers, Carl Losey and Charles Bridges, have financed installation of receiving sets in their machines and are tuned in at all times on announcements from Indianapolis police station.

VOL. XLIV | ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, MAY 15, 1930 | NUMBER 20

MEMORIAL DAY IS DRAWING NEAR

As has been the custom in years past, to observe Memorial Day on the 30th of May instead of some other day, the same will be true in St. Joe again this year.

Plans are in the making for the celebration to be held here in the forenoon, instead of afternoon, at 10 o'clock, on the public square, providing the weather permits an out-of-doors meeting.

The graves will be decorated in the out-lying cemeteries by a committee during the early forenoon. The band will be secured to furnish patriotic airs for the occasion and everyone will assemble on the streets for the service.

Further details will be announced next week.

ST. JOE SHOWS INCREASE BY CENSUS

Additional preliminary census returns for a number of communities have been announced by Chas. F. Hess, U. S. Census Supervisor for this district, and among them was Concord Township with a total of 996 against 949 of 1920.

St. Joe is among the towns showing an increase with a total of 407 as against 386 in 1920. This is a record we are proud of showing that this small town center is holding its own.

Mrs. Mabel Thornton was the enumerator in this territory.

We shall be glad to report other districts near at hand as soon as figures are available.

Mrs. Twice—"He surely was. Why on the coldest winter's night he would think nothing of getting up from his warm bed and lying down beside the crack under the door to protect me from draughts."

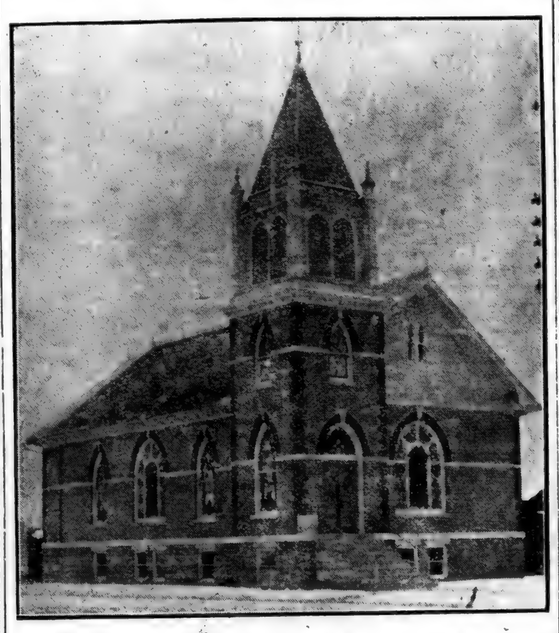
ST. JOE, IND.

FIFTY YEARS AGO



The St. Joe Lutheran church had its fiftieth birthday on last Sunday, May 11, it being the oldest church in town. An elaborate all day program was arranged to commemorate this unusual occasion and dinner was served in the basement o fthe church as a part of the festive thanksgiving observance of the fifty years of faithful administration of divine truth to the St. Joe community.

The program began at the Sunday School period solemnizing Mother's Day which added to the beauty of the occasion and the day's spiritual sequence.

After the noon luncheon, the afternoon program was continued by speeches made by visiting church members.

Fred B. Leighty, Rev. J. N. Scholes and Rev. A. K. Mumma, of Harlan, a former pastor, gave interesting sketches of the olden days of the church and their relation to the present. Following this there were three speeches made on the past, present and the future of the church. Martin Engle vividly portrayed the early church and the problems that confronted the people in the good old simple days when communities stood for the community's sake in general. Derwood Ridgway, a middle aged member of the church, talked of the differences between the past and the present, showing the needs of the modern church to be different from the past. Lawrence Pflaumer, the youngest spokesman, talked on the probable church of the future. In the evening the Rev. Paul H. Krauss, of the Trinity English Lutheran Church, of Fort Wayne, preached. In the course of his address he said, "Whenever any church practices deceit, malace, and hate towards its own members and the rest of the world it ceases to be a christian church." His address was what the church was seen to be in the eyes of the world, making allowance for misrepresentation and ill advising stories of its worthleasness and its criticism by agnostics. In speaking of the church's possibilities he said that the greatest tragedy of church history was the division of the church into 100 or more denominations.

He hinted that churches ought to be broad enough to be able to do the will of the Christ that made them possible and brought them into the world and if broad mindedness were used closer fellowship in all church life would be the result. He closed by saying that the church was the only hope for western civilization. May this day just celebrated be the start for the higher spiritual life.

Special music was furnished by the choir throughout the day.

CHURCH HISTORY

The beginning of St. Mark's Lutheran Church parallels rather closely the begining of St. Joe itself. In 1872 St. Joe consisted of only a few scattered houses. The nearest center of religious interest was at the Widney School House which was located at the cross roads at the North East corner of the Widney Orchard. Enterprising citizens of St. Joe saw the need of facilties for preserving and strengthening their Christian faith both for themselves and their children, and for the community which they were building. To have a church in their midst was a necessary institution for the welfare of the future village. It would make a more desirable place for one to work and live, and, finally, to retire. The people of this past generation were interested in religious living, and they wanted a church.

On August 7, 1875, a church organization, under the title of St. Mark's Evangelical Lutheran Church was organized by the following citizens, namely: John Boyle, Samuel Widney, Isaac Lawhead, Jane Lawhead, James Widney, John Widney, Nancy Widney, Daniel Reasoner, Sarah Reasoner and Smith Rhodenbeck. Part of the Constitution reads as follows: "Whereas, the Holy Scriptures teach the necessity of assembling ourselves together for public as well as private worship: and we the undersigned citizens of DeKalb County, Indiana being desirous of promoting the cause of the Redeemer, and to secure salvation for our neighbors, ourselves and families, Believing that the Bible (Old and New Testament) to be inspired of God, and our only true rule of faith and practice, and believing also that the doctrines of God's Word are taught in a manner substantially correct and its ordinances properly administered in the Evangelical Lutheran Church of America, as presented by the General Synod . . . . . "

They met for worship and religious instruction in the Center School House so called because of its being in the center of Concord Township. This school building still stands on the William Hollabaugh property where it was located. Here would assemble many people, sometimes more than are present at our ordinary church service. The popular way of coming to the services was by walking, since only a very few had a satisfactory wagon to use. The men would precede the women who would have difficulty in keeping their long skirts from becoming too soiled by dust or dampness. When services were in the evening different families would bring their oil lamps. Once it happened that only one lamp was brought, and its oil supply gave out during the service leaving the house in darkness. "It gave one an unusual feeling" is the remark of a youth who was

MOTHERS ARE ENTERTAINED AT PURDUE SUNDAY

All mothers of Purdue students were invited to be present at special exercises arranged for them Saturday and Sunday, May 10th and 11th, and two thousand mothers responded by registering at Purdue Memorial Union Building on Saturday afternoon.

May 10th was selected by Purdue University to be Mothers' May Day and was celebrated by the girls of the University, under the auspices of the Women's Council, giving a May Day pageant, "Spring Processional." The pageant was given in the Ross-Ade Staduim and the cast comprised one hundred and fifty girls. The costumes were beautiful and elaborate and the acting and dancing were both of the highest type. The girls were assisted by Purdue University Orchestra and Girls Glee Club.

Following the pageant the mothers were entertained at a tea in the ball room of the Union Building.

In the evening the play shop players gave "Pygmalion," a play by George Bernard Shaw, in Fowler Hall. After the performance the mothers were invited to attend a "mixer" in the ball room of the Union Building.

On Sunday all of the churches had special Mother's Day programs after which the various Fraternity and Sorority Houses invited the mothers for dinner.

Mothers in attendance from here for both days were Mrs. O. E. Ginther, Mrs. E. N. Miser and Mrs. F. R. Bowman. They were accompanied by Miss Martha Miser who "chauffeured" for them. They all report a wonderful time.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed Storer and children, Wayne, Beatrice and Beulah, spent Sunday at Purdue.

The SANDMAN STORY

ABOUT THE SEWELLELS

PROBABLY every one, when they think it over enough, is thankful not to be anyone or anything else.

Often some one will say:

"Oh, dear, if only I had all the money so-and-so has I would be able to do this and that," but if it came right down to it they probably would not be willing to entirely change places.

They would want their own homes, or their own families, or their own little favorite pets or toys or surroundings.

They would want something perhaps they didn't have but they wouldn't be willing to give up what they had in exchange—even though it didn't have any great value or worth according to what the world would think.

"It Is Fine to Be Satisfied."

It would have value and worth to the one to whom it belonged and that is what counts.

In the same way people wouldn't want to be other than people. They wouldn't want to be dogs and lie on the floor.

They wouldn't want to be pussy cats and purr. Boys wouldn't want to be girls and girls wouldn't want to be boys—that is not all the time, though sometimes it does seem as though boys could have more fun.

Mostly, though, girls can play the same games and they have others to enjoy which they couldn't enjoy if they were boys, such as playing house, dressing up as big ladies, and all those nice games.

Now the Sewellels, relations of the mountain beavers, felt much the same way, too.

"I've always been thankful," said Sewellel, "that I wasn't a Mrs. Rat or a Mrs. Mouse, or even a Mrs. Cat or a Mrs. Dog."

"I have been glad all my life," said Mr. Sewellel, "that I wasn't born a Mr. Rat or a Mr. Mouse, or a Mr. Dog."

"It is fine to be satisfied," said Mrs. Sewellel.

"It is, indeed," said Mr. Sewellel, "and it is even finer to have a family name of which to be proud. Wouldn't it have been dreadfully sad if you had fallen in love with a Mr. Kangaroo for example? It would have been equally sad if you had fallen in love with a Mr. Pig."

"It would have been just as sad if you had fallen in love with a Miss Kangaroo, and still more dreadful if you had fallen in love with a Miss Pig," said Mrs. Sewellel.

"Of course," said Mr. Sewellel, "we are related to the Mountain Beaver family which is very fine. We look like a good-sized muskrat.

"That is, each one of us looks about that size.

"But our lives are like the lives led by the Beaver families.

"We burrow in damp and marshy ground and we work when it rains as the prairie dogs do.

"We are fine, strong fighters and we are as brave as brave can be."

"We are all that," said Mrs. Sewellel.

"Yes, and more than that, too," said Mr. Sewellel.

"We are very rare.

"We come from British Columbia and from California, but we like it here in the zoo for we are shown off with great pride.

"The keeper tells visitors that they will see some animals they have never seen before.

"And then he shows them Mr. and Mrs. Sewellel.

"The keeper knows we're rare and how pleased he is when people say, with surprise:

"'I've never even heard of them before.'

"Ah, my dear Mrs. Sewellel, we have a great deal for which to be thankful.

"We have a superior name, we haven't become common or usual. We are a treat for the visitors to see.

"We work hard as our cousins, the Beavers do, and we're brave, very brave."

"Yes," agreed Mrs. Sewellel, "I have always been thankful that I was a member of the Sewellel family!"

For Meditation

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

IMMORTALITY

"IF A man die shall he live again?" This has been the universal quest. Job of old asked this question, so did the philosophers and the poets. Every person has at some time wondered—what comes after death. The philosopher, Fisk, said there must be something worth while in the world to come, for surely this wonderful human being would not have been made just for the purpose of tumbling it down. Even the Indian buried in the grave with the departed one the dog and gun, that the loved one might be perfectly happy in the unseen hunting ground, for such was his conception of heaven. The poet, Byron, who died at thirty-six, wrote: "I feel my immortality o'ersweeps—all pains, all tears, all time, all fears and all pangs—Like the eternal thunders of the deep—Into my ears this truth: Thou livest forever." Tennyson wrote: "Thou wilt not leave us in the dust—Thou madest man, he knows not why—He thinks he was not made to die—And Thou hast made him; Thou art just." Shakespeare's last will convinces us that he believed in immortality—"I commend my soul into the hands of God to be made perfect in the life everlasting."

L. A. Barrett.

Many ask for definite proofs of immortality. Frankly there are none. No one ever came back to tell us what it is like or where it is. Science is powerless if asked for evidences produced from its laboratories. The evidences lie within one's thinking and feeling. Cicero argued that there must be an immortality of life or why should we so greatly desire it. Whence the desire if it has no foundation in fact? What is death? What causes it? The answer is simple enough—breaking down of the bodily tissues. When the organs of the body no longer function death results, regardless of what causes the breakdown. It is the same law as in all nature. The body dies just like all material substances die. Death does not destroy the spiritual realities. Love, goodness, integrity, in short—character are not of the body and are not dependent upon it. Building up the character, or personality, as some call it, is the most important thing in the world.

The stars shall fade away, the sun grow dim with age
And nature sink in years;
But thou, O, Soul, shall flourish in immortal youth
Unhurt amid the war of elements
The wreck of matter and the crush of worlds.

Community Building

Move to Reduce Costs of County Governments

The problem of county government is spreading into nearly all the states that have cut themselves into many county units. Two evils have developed demanding economic and political treatment. One is a growing extravagance in the government of populous and rich counties and the other is the burdensome cost of maintaining the officiaries and functions of small and poor counties.

In all cases where the problem is becoming acute the remedy, and the only remedy, suggested by the economists and the politically unselfish, is the merging of the counties into fewer and larger units, or the consolidation of certain public services and institutions with common officials and communal buildings.

For example, in North Carolina there is a proposal to set up at Elizabeth City a district jail to be used in common by five counties; the county seats of the four other counties than Pasquotank being in quick and easy reach now of Elizabeth City over new hard paved roads. The taxpayers of those counties seem agreed that a central jail with one jailer and a few guards will serve them much better and more economically that the five jails, five jailers and five bodies of guards they now employ at a large cost to each county.—Atlanta Constitution.

Seek Rational Control of Outdoor Advertising

A resolution passed by the Outdoor Advertising association at its annual convention looks toward harmony between billboard interests, civic improvement projects and those organizations seeking to protect property values. The resolution asks that the Department of Commerce make a survey outlining the manner in which advertising companies should proceed in suburban communities.

The resolution suggests that the Department of Commerce secure the aid of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, the National Association of Real Estate Boards, the American Hotel association, the Association of National Advertisers, the Art Center of New York and the National Federation of Women's Clubs in making its recommendations to the advertisers.

The National Association of Real Estate Boards four years ago placed itself on record as opposed to outdoor advertising of such a nature that it destroys scenic beauty and lowers property values. At the annual convention of this organization, held last June, in Boston, at a special conference on outdoor advertising, a resolution was passed asking the Department of Commerce to make a survey of present outdoor advertising.

Landscape Home Lot

After the lot has been graded and rolled so that it is level and ready for planting, sow grass seed if the lawn is in bad condition. A stretch of velvety lawn is just the first step in the plan.

Next comes the planting of shrubbery and hedges. A low, trimmed hedge along the public sidewalk and the boundary lines of the lot, defines the limits of the property and holds the lawn together, artistically speaking.

Well-massed shrubbery to soften the abrupt change in line.

Near the house additional shrubbery should be used to conceal the foundation of the dwelling. Flower beds are often set near the house for the same purpose.

Canada Sees Light

The planting of trees is not a costly undertaking and gives splendid returns for the labor and expense it involves.

In the United States special commissions have been appointed by some legislatures, whose sole duty it is to undertake tree planting.

New Jersey provides for a special commission "whose duty it shall be not only to plant trees along highways of the state, but to look after their welfare as well."

Such a measure is well worthy of emulation by Canada's federal government.—Montreal Family Herald.

Beauty Asset to Community

One beautiful home of assured permanence attracts others of the same type and thereby increases its own value as well as the real estate value of the community. This attraction is made stronger when the construcion is of a type which increases the fire-safeness of the locality. The better residence sections of most communities recognize this in their building restrictions.

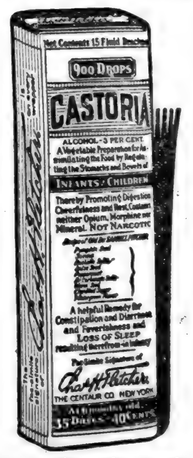
Modernizing Reclaims Values

Many thousands of our old homes, stretching from coast to coast, that are obsolete and out-of-date inside and outside, will take on new life and beauty within the year. Modernization will bring about this great reclamation.

Sound Investment

Those who invest in real estate carefully and wisely have profited in the past and will continue to do so in the future.

An Ailing CHILD



Are you prepared to render first aid and quick comfort the moment your youngster has an upset of any sort? Could you do the right thing—immediately—though the emergency came without warning—perhaps tonight? Castoria is a mother's standby at such times. There is nothing like it in emergencies, and nothing better for everyday use. For a sudden attack of colic, or the gentle relief of constipation; to allay a feverish condition, or to soothe a fretful baby that can't sleep. This pure vegetable preparation is always ready to ease an ailing youngster. It is just as harmless as the recipe on the wrapper reads. If you see Chas. H. Fletcher's signature, it is genuine Castoria. It is harmless to the smallest infant; doctors will tell you so.

You can tell from the recipe on the wrapper how mild it is, and how good for little systems. But continue with Castoria until a child is grown.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

SINGING AT TABLE

TO SING at table is a sign you will be disappointed or that you will have bad luck. This superstition is rather common in the rural districts and is evidently a survival from the ancient conception of a charm as words of power cast in a metrical form to be sung or chanted. This idea has already been noticed in considering the superstition with regard to involuntary rhymes. The majority of these ancient magic songs perhaps were like the paeans which celebrated the healing power of Apollo or the healing song chanted by his relatives over the wounded Odysseus. The Runes of the old Scandinavians are good examples of the versified chanted charm—and they were not always beneficent charms by any means. Among the northern races at least witches and warlocks "dropped into poetry," when they wove their hellish spells and cast their baleful charms. Witness the witches scene in "Macbeth." Early man, in short, appears to have conceived the magic power of words as being greatly increased, either for good or evil, when the words were sung in a versified form. There was something mystic about a song: it was not to be lightly dealt with. Now a person who begins to sing at table may, for all you know, be casting a spell upon the food or on the eaters thereof. Some idea of runic incantations appears to linger in the idea that "it is bad luck to sing at table."

THE BAYONET

THE bayonet, which is a sort of blade attached to the end of a rifle, is not a distinctively modern weapon of warfare—far from it.

Indeed, history indicates that the bayonet in practically its identical present-day form has been used for almost three centuries. And if we include the long jousting spear, which undoubtedly furnished the inspiration for the bayonet, its origin dates much farther back.

The term itself, by a peculiar coincidence, has a double origin. The article itself was first manufactured on a large scale in the town of Bayonne, France. And it was the Basque province of Bayonetta whose troops, in the course of one of their spasmodic conflicts with their neighbors during the middle of the Seventeenth century, first improvised the weapon in its present form. Modern bayonets are of various shapes and are often used as intrenching tools, as well as for assault.

Dear Editor:

THE other day I met a novelist. What kind of a typewriter do you suppose he uses? An old 1904 model where you lift up the carriage to see what's been written.

I've noticed several other well-to-do writers still cling to some old typewriter of their youth. They seem to feel it's friendly and will be patient with them if the thoughts don't come right at first.

Many a good idea has been jotted down on the back of an envelope; many more, probably, than on any new-fangled desk memo pad. An idea is a weak, timid thing to start with; it needs to be encouraged. The BERMUDA ISLANDS

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

THE Bermudas, island outposts in the Atlantic of the North American continent, have long been a resort for sojourners from the eastern United States, but never before have they been so speedily reached from the mainland as recently when the trip was made from New York by seaplane in about eight hours flying time. Boats from New York require 48 hours for the voyage.

In the Pacific, where there is much island competition, the Bermudas would be a negligible group; but in the almost islandless Atlantic they have played an important role. They form a microcosm, the catastrophes, the vicissitudes, the political, economic, and religious controversies, and the development of whose people, as a solitary unit, far out to sea, reflect much of the world history of the English speaking peoples.

They are a group of what are said to be 365 islands (one for every day in the year) north latitude 32 degrees and west longitude 64 degrees. There are only five important islands, and all of the group are so close together that those capable of use are united by bridges and causeways, so as to give to the sojourner in his drives the impression that they are but one island, with large indenting bays and inlets.

Strung together, they have the form of a fishhook with the stem pointed to the northeast and the curve of the hook to the southwest. From the northeast end to the point of the hook, you can piece out a curving drive 22 or 23 miles long, and the width of the land from sea to sea through which you drive will hardly average a mile. The superficial area of the whole group is 19½ miles.

The islands are nearly 600 miles from Cape Hatteras, the nearest mainland; they are 700 miles from Charleston, S. C., opposite which they lie in the Atlantic; they are nearly 700 miles from New York and about 50 miles farther from Halifax.

They are about 800 miles from the nearest of the West Indies; they are nearly 30 miles from the southern or southeastern edge of that river of warm water, 100 fathoms deep, flowing over an ocean depth 2,500 fathoms, from the gulf of Mexico to New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, and beyond to European shores, which we call the Gulf stream.

Pulverized Shell on Volcanic Rock.

They are irregular hills and ridges of pulverized shells, reaching in some places to a height of 250 feet, drifted and deposited by the wind on the top of a mountainous column of volcanic rock rising from the floor of the sea three miles below. This peak is a solitary one in all that part of the Atlantic ocean. It has been covered by this wind-formed limestone and a thinner plaster of coral rock.

After the expedition of H. M. S. Challenger on her scientific exploration of the Atlantic ocean bottom and islands in 1873 had disclosed the lonely column upon which the Bermudas rested, there was an effort to reconcile what seemed a pile of coral rock three miles high in the sea with Darwin's conclusion that the coral animal would not work more than 100 fathoms below the surface.

A desire to find fresh water on the islands led to the sinking of a well 1,200 feet deep, and while it did not bring what was sought, it greatly gratified a lot of puzzled scientific men by disclosing that the coral rock and limestone were a mere cap to what was an old volcano sticking its cratered top up to within less than one thousand feet of the shining surface of the translucent sea.

The top of this undersea mountain is much greater in superficial area than that of the visible islands, but it is everywhere crowned with coral and limestone, which protrude in dangerous reefs on the north, west, and south sides of the islands, as far as eight and ten miles from their shores, sometimes peeping above the surface, and at others lurking just beneath.

One need not say that such a situation makes Bermuda an awkward place for ships to reach and safely land, and this circumstance is an important factor in her history.

Bermuda is all by herself in the scientific and naturalist world. Her soil, which is red, is nothing but the result of the working of the weather on the limestone and coral rock. These islands came from the wind and drift and currents of the seas. As one writer says: "Probably we could not select a more perfect example of current-formed islands than the Bermudas."

This origin has turned the closest attention of natural scientists to these islands and brought out from them many articles and volumes on the geology, conchology, zoology, astinology, arachnology, ichthyology, meteorology, and the flora and fauna of this little punctuation point on the surface of the Atlantic.

While we cannot entirely exclude from the enthusiasm and prolific activity of our scientific men the motive which the charm and bodily comfort of the islands furnished for these expeditions thither, the publications manifest an exceptional interest on their part in this tiny spot on the world's and ocean's surface which the peculiar history of its creation has justified.

Some of the most fruitful sources of the spread of life, animal and vegetable, are wind, current, and birds; and here we have the result of them all in an isolated form, so set apart as to permit the most satisfactory study of their results.

The turtles must in old times have been of huge size; one, it was said, was large enough to give a good meal from its meat to fifty men, and the eggs and the oil of such monsters were equally useful. There are turtles there still, but they have been discouraged in their expansive ambitions and do not furnish forth a marriage feast as generously as in the dawn of civilization in that little community.

New Varieties of Life Flourish.

The Bermudas are the land of adopted nativity. They are most hospitable to new varieties of life. Some enterprising grower of plants introduced a toad to take care of the insects which were troubling him in his garden, and though this was only in the latter part of the last century, one runs across everywhere frequent evidence of these immigrants.

Very early in the settlement, and before 1620, a vessel brought some enterprising rats, which, with enthusiasm worthy of a better cause, multiplied until they ravaged the islands, ate everything in sight, swam in great multitudes from one island to another, leaving havoc in their train.

Cats were introduced, but to no immediate purpose. Even the fish took part in resisting the rats, and many of the finny tribe were caught with rats in their stomachs. Suddenly they disappeared as they had come and left nothing but a plague of cats, with their night blooming characteristics, as a reminder of this rodent visitation.

Lovely Flowers and Climate.

The luxuriance and wealth of color of the flora of the Bermudas have attracted the poets, who have sung their beauties.

The purple bougainvillea, with its varying shades in and out of the sunlight, is entrancing in its beauty and welcomes one into the grounds of the government house, climbing over the smoothly cut walls of coral through which the white road makes its way to the home of the governor.

The oleanders are so fine and so gorgeous in their hues that it has been suggested that these be called the Oleander islands. Coffee, indigo, cotton, and tobacco are of spontaneous growth.

It may not recall pleasant associations in the minds of the youthful to say that in no place does the castor oil plant grow more perfectly than here.

The climate of Bermuda has a maximum temperature of about 88 degrees, a minimum of about 48 degrees, and a mean of about 70 degrees. This mild climate assists the growth of esculent plants and roots and promotes early growth of onions, potatoes, carrots, tomatoes, and beetroots, as well as lily bulbs and arrowroot, though the last two have not been successful of late.

DIET AND FOOD

After all the advice from various diet experts as to reduction of fat, if we simmer it down to the reasonable and normal conclusion, we find that if one is overweight, we need less food and more of exercise. Less food does not mean that we should change our mode of living, or give up the foods we like, but cut down on the amount. Leave the table with the feeling that you could eat more, and would really enjoy more; but refrain. Such is good discipline for both the body and the mind. The Chinese, healthy, long-lived and normal in weight, eat one food mostly. The single diet, that is their secret. In Russia cabbage is the main dish. One of the evils of our modern civilized life is the complexity and mixtures that we make of food.

Look at the large families of healthy children if there are any large families in your neighborhood; note their diet. One family of nine, with seven healthy, rugged, bright-minded children would have for a noon meal such a one as this: When green peas were plentiful, they made a meal of cooked peas with bread and butter. When strawberries were in season strawberry shortcake would be the whole meal for the nine. All had all they wanted and everybody was satisfied and needed nothing more.

Every one of those children is well and doing his or her part in the world's work. They were poor, but never made any apologies if a friend dropped in at meal time; he was as welcome as if they were serving a feast, which it was, to every guest.

The ordinary meal in the average home is begun with a cocktail, or soup, usually both; then a main dish of meat, fish or fowl with vegetables, often with sauces that fight with every other food. Salad with rich dressings, and desserts also rich and frozen, followed by strong coffee to retard digestion, so that the stomach may get its second breath and try to get some order out of the chaos that it is expected to take care of.

Is it any wonder that our stomachs rebel at the way we force them to take such mixtures of unrelated foods?

How simple we could make our meals if we followed the single diet; what a saving on the housewife and wear and tear on our stomachs. But of course we hear some one say, I cannot eat strawberries and it doesn't run in our family to like cabbage? Well, pick out the food you do like; there should be many, and give a day to the enjoyment of each, or even a meal of one food now and then.

OUTDOOR AND GYPSY DISHES

During the warm weather there is nothing more pleasant than to take one's family and friends out to a stream or lake, or in the beautiful woods, rest and listen to nature and feed the inner man with just such things as may be cooked out doors. Here are some really good gypsy dishes that every one will enjoy:

A heavy iron kettle with an iron cover is best, place it in the coals and when hot add some chopped suet; when tried out add chopped lamb's heart and liver, simmer for three minutes, add a sprig of fennel and six peeled potatoes. Cover and cook one hour. The fennel is important to give the stew that tantalising flavor.

Steak.—Take willow sticks, green and strong, sharpen and string the steaks on them. Turn the steaks while cooking, then season with salt and pepper and plenty of butter on hot dishes.

Gather the flowers of wild mustard, dry them and rub between the hands. It is much more delicate than the ordinary kind. Serve this with all meats.

Baked Potatoes.—Wrap potatoes in yellow dock leaves and skewer with thorns. Roast in the hot ashes covered with coals.

Roasted eggs. Pierce each shell at the ends and wrap in wet leaves. For soft cooked eggs leave in the hot coals for six minutes—if wished hard leave twenty.

Sausages of various kinds are always enjoyed cooked out of doors. String them on willow sticks and hold over the heat. Toasting marshmallows for desert will make a menu, with some satisfying sandwiches, fit for any appetite. The coffee of course is an important item. Mix it with egg and a little cold water, add boiling water, boil up and stir down lightly three times, then add a little cold water to settle and it is ready to serve.

Dangers Forgotten in Keen Desire for "Drag"

This may not be your idea of a big moment, but it sure was one big moment for me.

I was a first-class private in the Seventh Machine Gun battalion, Third division.

On June 15, 1918, we were ordered to take positions on Hill 204. At this point the lines were very close together; in fact we could hear the boches talking.

We were given strict orders not to smoke, for fear the enemy would locate our positions. Anyone disregarding these orders was very liable to be court martialed.

I was a runner at the time and was about all in for want of a smoke. Determined to get a few drags regardless of orders, I went into the shelter half, crawled under a blanket, and had just nicely got started to smoke when in strode Lieutenant Hose. "Who in h—l is smoking?" he bellowed. I knew I would be discovered anyway, and fearing the worst, I answered nervously, "Private Allan, sir."

He responded in a much lower voice, "For G—d's sake give me a drag—I'm dying for a smoke!"—Stanley H. Allan in American Legion Monthly.

Idea of Ungartered Hose Attracted Small Boy

The uncle, a young man, is addicted to the fad of wearing no hose supporters. Thus it was without any thought on his part that he carelessly sat in his usual manner, with crossed legs, which showed his hose to be hanging loosely about the ankles.

After he had left, his sister suddenly noticed her son's stockings were wrinkled in a manner that she deemed unattractive. However, thinking it was caused by his play, she straightened them without comment.

A half hour later the same condition was noted. This time the mother exclaimed impatiently, "Why, Robert, what are you doing that musses up your stockings in that way? Mother can't stop her work every few minutes to fix you up."

Her repair of the state of the stockings this time met with strenuous objection and finally the boy revealed that he "wanted to wear his stockings like Uncle Charles did."—Springfield Union.

Liberal

When the French ministry fell right in the middle of the naval conference in London, Premier Tardieu shrugged his shoulders and smiled. "I think I shall be back," he told Secretary Stimson.

"And will you find it in your heart to forgive your enemies?" asked Mr. Stimson curiously.

"I even forgive my friends," said M. Tardieu with a sad smile.

Shocked the Waitress

The American colony at Istanbul, Turkey, is chuckling over the linguistic mishap of an elderly American woman missionary, who after long years in Turkey, visited the United States. Lunching in a sedate New York tearoom, the missionary called a waitress and tipping her glass of lemonade, said: "Please bring me some booze." The waitress stared, but the dignified old lady repeated her order unruffled. Unwittingly she was using the Turkish word for "ice."

"No other Flour could make such light fluffy Biscuits," says Mrs. Schneider

Mrs. Frank Schneider
Peoria, Ill.

"That's How I Knew It Was 'Kitchen-tested' Flour"

"My husband brought home a 'sack of flour' and put it in the bin. I did not see him do it and I did not ask him what kind it was. But when I made biscuits with this flour—which I consider the supreme test—they came out light and fluffy every time. Then I found the blue slip and I knew I was using Gold Medal Flour. It had met the test and come through with flying colors. No other flour can satisfy me now. I could tell Gold Medal 'Kitchen-tested' flour in the dark."

Thousands of Women Have Banished "Guess Work" From Their Baking. They now know they can get perfect results every time—that time is saved and worry eliminated.

THEY use a new-type flour for all baking purposes—GOLD MEDAL "Kitchen-tested" Flour—that simplifies baking remarkably and banishes the cause of most baking failures.

Failures, experts found, were mostly due to the fact that two sacks of the same flour often acted differently, even with the same recipe . . . it was not uniform in oven action.

So now all GOLD MEDAL Flour is "Kitchen-tested" before it comes to you. As each batch comes through the mill it is tested by actual baking—bread, cakes, biscuits, pastries—in an oven just like yours. Only flour which acts the same perfect way every time is allowed to go out to you. Thus you know in advance exactly what your results will be.

CONGRESSIONAL RACE SPECTACULAR

Last Tuesday's primary decided one of the closest congressional races in the political history of the Twelfth District of Indiana, in which J. I. Farley, of Auburn, won by the small margin of twenty-five votes.

There were four candidates in the race, being equally divided on the prohibition issue, which formed the main issue in this state's politics. T. P. Riddle, of Clear Lake and Sig. W. Kann, of Fort Wayne advertised themselves as wet candidates, while J. I. Farley of Auburn and H. W. Morley, of Angola, were known to be dry in their views. Many political observers view this congressional race as rather significant of the voters verdict on the prohibition issue. Many believe that the people have expressed their views on the issue in their vote. Adding together the votes of Riddle which were 6,958 and those of Kann which amounted to 2,002 and we have 8,960 votes cast for the wet candidates. Adding together the votes for Farley and Morley, which were 6,983 and 3,207 respectively gives a total of 10,190 for the dry candidates or a majority of 1,230 dry votes for the dry candidates.

This shows what would have been the probable majority of the drys had there been only one wet and dry candidate in the field.

Many voters pin a great deal of faith in the findings of the straw vote sponcered in the prohibition issue, with its tabulations of wet majorities in the various states. Leaving the reader to his own conclusions about the authenticity and accuracy of the straw poling system and its results, we only point to the actual voting done by the undisputable majority of the citizens at the regular voting time and place.

As a matter of fact, the wet candidates went to the trouble of printing in red type their wet standing in their campaign material. Mr. Riddle stated in his platform that the Eighteenth Amendmend should be amended. He said, "Prohibition is the political bunk and blunder of fanaticism," which made the issue clear in the minds of the voters just where the wet candidates stood on the issue.

It must be said with a great deal of certainty that the American people have not asked for a referendum vote on the wet and dry issue and that where they have had a chance to express themselves on the issues they have stood by the whole constitution as it stands. Americans are still Americans. The prohibition laws were not intended to remove from any man his personal liberty. These laws only take away the personal liberty of men who use liberty to enslave other people and rob them of the same liberty they say they are fighting for.

Isn't it a fact that it would be better for many men if they had never had personal liberty? Whether or not personal liberty and the destruction of the Eighteenth Amendment would be a good thing or not, depends on where you go after you are dead or what you do with liberty while you are still here on earth.

Personal liberty, like money, brains, and political power, it depends upon what you want to do with it that gives the individual the right to use it.

The following is an account by county of the vote in our Twelfth District:

Whitley: Farley, 622, Kann, 145, Morley, 521, Riddle, 722.

Noble: Farley, 493, Kann, 333, Morley, 499, Riddle, 697.

DeKalb: Farley, 1,742, Kann, 163, Morley, 392, Riddle, 784.

Lagrange: Farley, 143, Kann, 50, Morley, 85, Riddle, 143.

Steuben: Farley, 89, Kann, 23, Morley, 128, Riddle, 68.

Allen: Farley, 3,894, Kann, 1,-238, Morley, 1,582, Riddle, 4,544.

Totals, Farley, 6,983, Kann, 2,-002, Morley, 3,207, Riddle, 6,958.

Farley's majority, 25.

Well why don't Uncle Bim marry the poor girl and have it over with.

There's music in the air, there's goodness in the air, there's evil in the air. We get just what we tune in for.

"Guard in bank admits theft of $53,500 from bank" is a news head line. And now the banks will have to employ guards to guard against the guards. Its just so expensive to be rich.

Have faith in the young people of your community. Don't tremble. They haven't yet made the mistakes that some old historians have stored in their collection of reminiscences of their ancient history.

Educators and librarians of the nation are in conference at the Edgewater Beach hotel in Chicago discussing adult teaching. No doubt the first thing that will come up for discussion will be, "How can we teach old dogs new tricks" —the biggest job in all the world.

Every man who aspires to be a public benefactor will have to be greater in power than his opposition, and over coming it. Men become great by buckling into opposition. In other words, oposition is the making of us. Opposition is what makes a kite go up. Don't worry about it, just eat it.

Telephone service, both national and international, is constantly being improved. During the past five years the average time required to complete a long distance connection has been cut from 7.5 minutes to 2.4 minutes. Errors in completing calls have been reduced to the point where they are practically non-existent. The telephone industry is not only keeping up with the times but is always in advance.

The world is still waiting for the sunrise. Any critic of the prohibition law has a right to tell his countrymen how the country can be run with booze, without booze or with light wines and beer. About the first thing he will have to explain will be, why wasn't the country a success before the prohibition law was enacted and how can it be a success now after it has been enacted—in other words, where do we go from here?

Health in the Home Garden

By Richard S. Bond

He thrust his thumbs in his vest, swelled out his chest impressively, and allowed his glance to sweep across a tiny plot of ground —a mass of greens, reds and goldens.

"Eighty hard-earned cents worth of seeds from the store around the corner, a lot of real enjoyment in the open, some exercise I surely needed, and there you have it."

Extracting his right thumb from the well-worn vest, he waved his hand toward the peas, the corn and the other vegetables that had responded to his magic touch.

"Next week I'll give you some real corn. Grown myself, don't forget it, neighbor. Today you eat tomatoes, radishes and lettuce from the old two by four back yard. What do you think of that?".

Who is this magician? His name is Legion, a Prince of Good Fellows, and a member of the unorganized "International Association of Home Gardeners Incorpolated," of which each member is President, Treasurer, Outer Guide and by all means, the Supreme Janitor and Caretaker.

There is something in the Spring air that brings fatigue to all but three groups—lovers, fishermen and home gardeners. These three exert themselves to answer a call so insistent that a simple thing like Spring fever remains unnoticed, if present.

And don't for a moment imagine that the call of Spring to the home gardener is one whit less appealing than that of the swishing wind to the fisherman or the caressing breeze to the lover. There is a deep, dank call from Mother Earth that assails his nostrils and starts the muscles of his spade arm twitching long before the first earth worm has stuck his nose above ground in search of a mate.

Once plant a seed and watch it grow and you are an incurable. You may be forced into a city apartment where gardens of all kinds are out of the question, and there be compelled to grow a potted plant or two as a sacrfice upon the alter of memory. But anywhere else you will gloat over the opportunity to till the soil.

You may have a real garden behind the garage. You may have a tiny plot at the rear of the house. You may have to be content with a box on the window ledge into which you reverently deposit the proper soil and later a few lettuce or radish seeds, or two or three tomato plants.

Once a gardener, always a gardener, and it is surprising what results may be obtained from even the tiniest plot of ground. Ashes will break the stickiest clay. Paper mulch will put a damper upon the most aggressive weed. The ever-obtainable seed catalog will advise what to plant, how to plant it, and how to care for it.

The army of home gardeners is studying en masse today. Each member of that army is searching for some variety that will mature earlier than other members of its immediate family, so that his product may be proudly exhibited a day or two before that of neighbor Jones or neighbor Brown.

There is a little work ahead of these home gardeners, but that work is needed exercise and a pleasure combined; there is the anticipation of crisp, fresh greens for the family; there is a knowledgt that a leafing, blooming, fruiting garden makes a far better impression upon visiting friends than an ash dump or plot of weeds; and there is the ever-constant craving to be able to flaunt the first ear of corn grown in the block.

Turn seeds into vegatables this year. Old timers will do this without the asking, but may I suggest it to those who have never enjoyed the thrills it brings? There are a few seeds left in the little store around the corner. There is health to be gained as you caress Mother Earth with gloved hands or with bare in the little plot of ground at the rear.

Be a home gardener, no matter upon how small a scale. You will never regret it.

Deep in the wilds of New Jersey lives a man of seventy-eight who has never seen an automobile. Well! MOTORING NO LONGER REQUIRES "costumes"

The linen duster, goggles and the motoring veil went out of fashion when people stopped thinking of the automobile as "the horseless carriage." Nowadays, nobody puts on special apparel for a Sunday drive. ¶ And Shell Motor Oil has helped make motoring a matter-of-fact necessity. As the automobile developed, Shell has regularly anticipated lubrication requirements. Always a step ahead, it is ready now for the models which will be announced next year. ¶ That is why owners of all kinds of cars are turning to Shell Motor Oil in ever increasing numbers for the protection they know their engines must have. All the world knows that if the Shell organization cannot make a quality lubricant, no organization can. Have you tried it?

HAGENBECK-WALLACE CIRCUS AT AUBURN

Sensations and thrills are packed into the 1930 performance of the Hagenbeck-Wallace Circus, which will make its appearance in Auburn on May 22. Great interest has been manifested in the coming of this high-class circus and hundreds of people from this community are going to attend the exhibitions.

Heading the list of dare-devils is "The Great Wilno" who is actually fired with violent velocity from the mouth of a monster cannon. Wilno's act is one of the sensations of the present day, as this human bullet shoots through space from the hugh gun to a net many feet away. Wilno is an exclusive Hagenbeck-Wallace feature.

Clyde Beatty the youthful subjugator, who is said to be the world's greatest animal trainer, will offer a display of over 30 ferocious Royal Bengal and Siberian tigers and African lions. This is the largest group ever presented under the tutelage of any American trainer. Aage Christensen a noted European trainer, will present a vicious and savage group of hyenas, leopards, pumas, bears and other animals.

Included among the arenic stars will be the Albert Hodgini Family of riders, the Flying Herberts, the Motsumots Troupe, the Montmarte Family of acrobats, the Jess Sisters, the Albertas, Hauser Trio, and the Nortons. Clown alley, as usual, will contain only the best of laugh-provokers.

The Golden Orient," a beautiful story of old Japan, will provide the opening musical presentation.

CROSSING DANGERS BEING ELIMINATED

Indianapolis, Indiana, May 13. —With the elimination in 1929 of 385 rail and highway grade crossings from the federal aid highway system, the total number of such crossings abolished on that highway network since 1917, when federal aid was launched, has been 4,676, according to a statement issued by the Hoosier State Automobile Association.

Forty-eight of the crossings eliminated last year were abolished by the construction of bridges over or under the railroads, the remaining 337 passed out of existance by virtue of relocating the highways. The latter method has been employed to a large extent in former years, likewise; since 1917, 3681 crossings have been eliminated by relocation of the highways and 995 by grade separations.

"The elimination of these potential death traps may be expected to increase from year to year, inasmuch as every state highway department is now fully aware of the hazard involved," the Motor Club pointed out in the statement. "New highways are being planned that will be free of crossings of this type and every effort is being exerted to keep the number of crossings on secondary roads to a minimum."

JESUS TEACHING IN THE TEMPLE

(Temperance Lesson.)

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 22:1-22, 34-40.

GOLDEN TEXT—Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. The second is like unto it. Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself (22:37-39).

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Teaching in the Temple.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus in the Temple.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How to Become a Good Citizen.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Who Is a Good Citizen?

In the previous parable, the responsibilities of the subjects of the kingdom were set before us in the light of the obligation to render to the householder the fruits of his vineyard. In this one the emphasis is placed upon the privileges and blessings of the king. Christ's kingdom is infinitely more than a system of laws and regulations to be obeyed.

I. The Marriage Feast (vv. 1-14).

The benefits of the kingdom are set forth under the figure of marriage. The highest ideal of love and friendship known to the world is expressed in marriage.

1. The king's invitation despised (vv. 1-7).

The previous parable showed the attitude of the Jewish people toward the king up to the crucifixion. This one carries us beyond the cross, even to the present age of the Gentiles. The marriage feast which the king made for his son and to which he invited guests, represents the gracious offer of God to give joy and blessing to His creatures. This feast has been made in honor of his son, and is an exceeding rich one. The repeated invitations show God's earnestness in seeking to bless men. They not only neglected it, but made light of it and hurried on to their worldly business, showing their disregard for the salvation of their souls. Some did violence to the messengers of the king, even killing them. Primarily, this is a picture of the attitude of the Jews from Christ's crucifixion to the destruction of Jerusalem, but it has its counterpart in the present day.

2. The king's invitation accepted (vv. 8-10).

When those first invited refused, the king sent his servants to others, for his table must be provided with guests. The Lord's table has been prepared at infinite cost.

3. The king inspecting the guests (vv. 11-14).

As a result of this inspection, one was found without a wedding garment. Failure, therefore, to conform to the regulation of the feast was an insult to the king. The wedding garment provided for each one invited to the Lord's table is the righteousness of Christ.

II. The Wonderful Wisdom of the King (vv. 15-22, 34-40).

That which called forth this wisdom was the effort of the leaders to entrap Jesus.

1. The tribute money (vv. 15-22).

The Herodians sought to test His loyalty to the Roman government; therefore, they came to him with the subtle question, "Is it lawful to give tribute unto Caesar, or not?" For Christ to have answered "Yes" would have conveyed the impression of endorsement of the Roman government, and "No" would have brought him into conflict with the government. Christ's reply to this question is the final word on the Christian's relationship to civil government.

2. Concerning the resurrection (vv. 23-33).

The Sadducees did not believe in the resurrection. To entrap Him they placed before Him a hypothetical case of a woman who had had seven husbands—as to whose wife she would be in the resurrection. The Scriptures make it clear that marriage is only for this life; that in the resurrection human beings will be as angels of God.

3. The great commandment in the law (vv. 34-40).

(1) The first commandment (vv. 34-38). "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart." Supreme and undivided love to God is the first and great commandment. (2) The second commandment (vv. 39, 40). This is like the first, in that it centers in love. The measure of love to my neighbor is my self-love.

4. The question put by Christ (vv. 41-46).

The mystery of Christ being the son of David and at the same time being David's Lord put to silence all those who had sought to embarrass Him.

Our Prayers

Our prayers are ships. We send them to no uncertain port. They are destined for the throne of grace; and while they take a cargo of supplications from us, they come back argosies laden with the riches of divine grace.—Presbyterian of the South.

Our Supreme Duty

Our supreme duty is to give ourselves to Christ, and with ourselves all that we possess.—Bishop R. R. Hoss.

THE STORY

Floyd Unwin and Howard Bettington take dinner with an old college chum, Alfred Gibbons, financial magnate. Unwin produces a written pledge taken by the three at college to help each other in adversity, explaining that he needs financial assistance to educate his son Bob and and daughter Mary. Gibbons agrees to make a place for the daughter in his organization. Mary Unwin is stenographer to a wealthy debauchee, Elgar Radway. Calling at Gibbons' office, as arranged, Mary is asked to betray her employer's secrets and refuses. Radway plans an ocean voyage to recover from the effects of dissipation. Mary is to go as secretary, her brother to accompany her. Bettington, painting on the Maine coast, is kidnaped, and taken aboard Radway's yacht. His clothes are found by Gibbs, a fugitive from justice, who dons them and goes to Bettington's studio, and there falls to his death. Bettington is questioned by a man known as the "Boss." He is shown an account of Gibbs' death, the body being identified as Bettington. The "Boss" intends to hold Radway for $1,000,000 ransom. Bettington is told he will be forced to assist. Radway becomes desperately ill.

"Please leave me," she said. "I want to be alone."

When the door was shut she looked down at the white face. There he lay, who had trampled her heart in the dust; who had satisfied her ambition for a little while, and then given her so large a measure of unhappiness. She wondered why, as she gazed at the heavy-lidded, half-closed eyes, she had not long ago shaken herself free of him. She supposed it was because of his dominance. Such dominance as his had captured a girlish fancy and she had never been able to rid herself of it. . . . Women, she told herself wearily, are so different from men. Less gross, or more stupid . . . which was it?

When she rang the bell it was for Captain Hallett she sent.

"How soon can we get back to New York?" she demanded when he had recovered from his astonishment at the spectacle.

He considered a moment.

"I'm afraid we won't get there in time. I mean," he said in confusion, for he had a natural delicacy at such a moment, "we may have to bury him at sea."

"Very well," she said, "I will leave it in your hands. And Captain Hallett, you complained that Mr. Radway did not give you complete charge. I shall remedy that. Tell the steward to come to the library."

She looked with the utmost distaste at this small grinning man.

"I have told Captain Hallett," she said quietly, "that he has absolute control now."

"Hasn't he been captain heretofore, madam?" Clements returned.

"You know what she means," Hallett said fiercely. "I don't want to speak disrespectfully of the dead, but Mr. Radway was too easy with you. He gave you authority you hadn't any right to, and Mrs. Radway is taking that away from you. Isn't that what you mean, ma'am?"

"Exactly. You understand, Mr. Clements?"

"I fear I do not, madam. Captain Hallett suffers from an inability to think clearly or correctly. You will invariably find such characteristics with his type of skull. He is narrow and prejudiced and seems my enemy although I have tried to help him."

"Help me!" Hallett snorted.

Clements still addressed his remarks to Mrs. Radway. "With your permission, madam, I will announce Captain Hallett's promotion to the men. It will amuse them."

"Please let us have no violence," Mrs. Radway said sharply. She had seen a baleful light in the captain's eye and had noted the clenched fist and the step forward.

"I'll attend to him later," Hallett said, breathing hard.

"I hope you will do nothing of the sort," she said. "Personally, I have witnessed none of the slights you refer to. I have only noticed that you are uniformly uncivil to Doctor Watte and never lose an opportunity to speak ill of Clements."

"They're two of a kind," he said doggedly.

She made a gesture of weariness.

"I want to hear nothing more about it."

"It's my duty to tell you," he persisted. "There's something wrong with the crew."

"You are captain," she reminded him.

"I'll show them I am," he cried and made his way on deck.

Slowly Mrs. Radway went to Mary's stateroom. The girl was dressing hurriedly; she feared she was late.

"My dear," said the elder woman. "We are going back to New York. Mr. Radway died last night."

Then, suddenly, she broke down and wept tumultuously.

Mary tried in vain to stem this torrent of tears. "She must have loved him, after all," thought the girl.

She was not to know how much of relief was mixed in this seeming grief. After all these years Evelyn Radway found herself free. No more need she fear all those subtle cruelties with which he had so often amused himself, or look forward to succeeding years with dread.

"You must send your parents a wireless," she said when she was more composed, "but I can't spare you Mary. You must not leave me when we get ashore. I have had very few loyal friends in my life and I need some now."

On deck Captain Hallett was already asserting himself. He stopped squarely before Bettington, who was pacing up and down.

"A word with you," he said peremptorily. "I command this ship, and I'll have no plotting or insubordination."

"Quite right," said Bettington mildly.

"I was talking to Mrs. Radway awhile back, and I said that you and your pal, the steward, were two of a kind."

"I am always sure of a kindly pat on the back from you," Bettington answered. It was not so easy to return meek answers to a man of Hallett's type. "I had an idea you men of the sea were bluff, hearty sort of fellows, and yet you tell me you have been saying things to Mrs. Radway which were unwarrantable. . . . It is that your mariners' way of giving a man a square deal?"

"A square deal for square men is my motto," Hallett retorted. "I say what I mean and I mean what I say. I don't like you."

How impossible it seemed to be able to make a confidant and allay of such an incarnate prejudice as this! He watched Hallett cross to the wireless house; there must be some sort of kindliness in the man, for he put his arms about the shoulders of his nephew and young Unwin in a friendly fashion.

"The fool," Bettington muttered. "Those three and I are the only ones aboard to guard the women if there's trouble; he makes it very hard for me."

He turned to see Clements coming toward him.

"Doctor," said the steward loud enough for the captain to hear, "I'd be glad if you'd have a look at my throat. It feels like tonsilitis."

"Hi, you steward," Hallett called, "I'm using your quarters for the rest of the trip. You can berth amidships."

Bettington, as he followed Clements to his doctor's office, wondered what rage was tearing at the vitals of this lithe, deadly man.

"If Hallett only knew it," said Clements, "the noise he is making is really his death rattle." He flung himself into a seat. "There's nothing the matter with my throat, but he isn't allowed to come in here without your permission; that's shipboard etiquette. Hallett has practically told Graumann that if the wireless isn't ready for sending messages in a few hours' time, he'll put him in irons."

"That won't hurt you," Bettington said. "Why look on it as a great misfortune?"

"Because with Graumann out of the way they'll put the instrument in shape. I can't have it known that Radway is dead."

"It will have to be known. We are running back to New York now."

"But we shan't get there. Listen to me, Orme. I thought when I saw him lying dead that the whole game was up, just as you did. But it isn't. Mrs. Radway is a rich woman in her own right and she is Radway's sole heiress. She will be one of the richest women in a world of rich women. If I could get a million from Radway, I can get it just as easily from her."

Bettington shook his head obstinately.

"The cases are not parallel. Mrs. Radway is not money mad. Her fortunes are not dependant on her personal exertion."

"You miss the whole point of it," Clements returned. "She, like Radway, will see that a million is the easiest way out."

"Out of what?" Bettington cried sharply.

"Difficulties. I shall not specify them. One is named Sam and the other is known as Metzger."

"Impossible," Bettington asserted. "What about Hallett and the others?"

"You have heard the death rattle in his throat. As to the others, what are they but boys? There will be no trouble at all. I think I can prevail upon Mrs. Radway to see what is best to be done. I count on your influence with her. Naturally Hallett has tried to influence her and most likely something of what he has said has made her uneasy. She will realize that her position aboard is different now. Radway was the conventional protection and now he is removed. Inevitably, she will become more reserved, but that will not mean she has ceased to have confidence in you."

Bettington experienced keen pleasure in this comforting thought. It was quite probable that she would feel as Clements said.

"What do you want me to do?" he demanded.

"This is my plan," said Clements. "I want her assurance that the money will be paid. If she agrees to do this without consulting lawyers or friends, I shall let that fool of a captain run the Albatross into the East river and rant and dictate as he chooses. I shall attend to him at my leisure. She will refuse at first; she will certainly want to consult some one. Women always do. I shall forbid her to tell Hallett. He would never allow it on a ship he commanded. He couldn't. He's the obstinate, honest sort, who would meet death for a prejudice and think he was dying for principle. She will talk to you."

"And she'll find me backing you up very strongly." What was a million dollars compared with the immunity it bought!

"I am going to see her now." Clements rose without any appearance of haste. "It may be she will call you in while I am there. You will be indignant, angry, threatening, until I point out the strength of my position. Then you will see light."

What a damnable situation to be in! Bettington was a man who detested deceit and now he was committed to the practice of it in order to safeguard the woman for whom he cared.

The Girl Was Dressing Hurriedly; She Feared She Was Late.

He wondered if he could explain that his actions were dictated solely in the interests of Mrs. Radway and his friend's daughter. Hallett's unfortunate enmity, which had infected the wireless operator and Bob, would make any effort to explain the real situation impossible. Hallett would scent a plot, shout loudly enough for some of the crew to hear of his opinions, and Bettington would lose his usefulness.

• • • • • • • •

Captain Hallett read the burial services for those who die at sea and Mrs. Radway beheld all that was mortal of her tyrant sink into the green water. All hands were mustered to the last rites and she saw, for the first time, to what men the Albatross was entrusted. There was a ravening look about these creatures gathered together by the steward; they reminded her of the crews she had read of as gathered by crimps for service in merchant vessels of another day. She was relieved when the captain dismissed them to their stations.

"Mary," she said kindly, "run away and talk to your wireless boy; I want to be alone."

She wondered how she would order her life now that there would be none to coerce her. She no longer wanted the care of great houses or the ordering of splendid entertainments. Of political ambitions she had none left. Mary Unwin should live with her and if she married Crosby Todd she would see that the girl never wanted, as she suspected the parents had. To make people happy: that was the most pleasant task of all. Resolutely she banished all thoughts of Bettington from her mind. Later, she hoped, he would call upon her. She needed new friends and the wider outlook they might bring.

Her train of thought was broken by Clements.

"I want a few minutes' talk with you, madam," he began.

She hesitated a little. She was in no mood for business. She supposed it was something to do with the catering. This was a department over which her late husband had exercised his own supervision.

"Tomorrow morning," she told him. "I am not feeling very well today."

"I fear that will be too late," he answered.

She had a premonition that what he wanted to say must be of great importance. But she did not let him know that his presence had a constricting effect upon her as though some malign influence had fastened upon her heart.

"What is it?" she asked.

He looked around him. There were several people on deck. Bob Unwin, his sister and Crosby were grouped together. Hamner was polishing brasses near the bridge; Hallett was in the chartroom and a deckhand, named Mike, at the wheel.

"I must not run the risk of being interrupted," he said gravely. "I suggest the library, madam, if you will permit it."

When she had taken a seat below and had told Clements to sit, she asked him for what reason he needed privacy

"I have observed you for some time now, Mrs. Radway," he began, "and I think you will keep calmer than most women when I tell you what you must hear."

She noticed that he had dropped the use of "madam." He was no longer the obliging and civil steward. Although he was courteous, his manner was that of an equal.

"What I have to say," he continued, "directly concerns the safety of, among other people, Miss Unwin. I am going to ask you to promise me you will not consult Captain Hallett or his nephew on what I tell you. They are too much prejudiced to be of value."

"And if I decline?"

He reflected a moment.

"I am going to rely on your intelligence when you have heard my news to do as I advise. Mrs. Radway, you must know that I am not a steward at all. I assumed this grotesque and braided jacket for special reasons. The death of your husband upset my plans."

"Then what are you?" she demanded. Clements was glad she did not show fear, although he was sure she experienced it. He knew there was no creature so difficult to deal with as an hysterical woman.

"A collector of coins. You might call my hobby by a harder name. At considerable cost I induced Mr. Radway to buy this boat. Gathering the crew together was another item. It was my intention to hold your husband to ransom for a million dollars."

He outlined his plan and the reasons for which he believed success would have been certain. But he made no mention of the forger's name.

"You horrify me," she cried, "and I am glad your plans have come to naught."

"But have they?" he returned. "That's just the point. I admit I feared they had at first. You are his heir, Mrs. Radway, and I shall tax you the same sum. If you agree to pay me the money and swear not to take any legal steps against me, I will engage that the trip back to New York will be swift and free from unpleasantness. Hallett will never need to know anything."

"I shall not pay you. I will not lend myself to such an infamous thing."

"Then you will put yourself to a great deal of trouble," he said in an even tone. "Much more trouble than you can imagine. Let us take the thing in detail. You inform Hallett. Very well. He will try to intimidate the crew. He will find himself, if I can save him in time, in irons. Leary, one of my men, assumes command and we turn again south. We shall coal at the Bahamas."

"You will have to give in some time or another. The authorities will look for us."

"Oh, no. Miss Unwin will have written to her parents, stating that you are remaining away for an indefinite period. The same hand which was to have forged your husband's letters will forge hers. Letters from you will be received by your attorneys in New York to the same effect. I have left nothing to chance."

"But after a time you will have to give in. You cannot keep us away for ever."

"After a time, my dear lady—that is, if you wear out my patience—you will not want to return to your native land; nor will the girl Mary. Come now, you are a woman of the world. Consider the situation; consider the type of men there are aboard. . . . I observed that during the service just over, you could not help looking at the chief engineer. He is the man with the crooked nose and the eyes like polished jet. There is a man who is hard to handle. And you may have seen the man called Sam. He is the broad ape-like creature with the rolling walk and enormous face. In his less angry moods he likes the solace of youth."

Evelyn Radway put her hands over her burning face.

"Stop! stop!" she cried. Most vividly the horrors presented themselves to her which he had but hinted at. They were ravening wolves. She wondered how many more of them were hidden in the secret places of this horrible vessel to come out like jungle animals in the darkness. Little Mary Unwin, who had been allowed to come on the trip because she had promised to take care of her!

"I am glad you see what lies in store if you are foolish enough to force my hand. You are helpless. It is fortunate a man of my temperament is in command."

He wondered what sudden thought changed her face. She was looking at him with almost a pleading way.

"Is—is Doctor Waite one of your men?"

"No. What makes you think that?"

He could see that her relief was enormous.

"Captain Hallett told me you and he were so much together." She felt ashamed that she had doubted him. She ought to have known that he was one of the dependable loyal men of the stuff true friends are made of. There was one man aboard on whom she could rely for guidance. Clements made the surgeon's position even more reasonable.

"My health is indifferent and I have needed his care. I suppose you wish to talk this over with him. Warn him that a word to Hallett, his nephew or the Unwins, and there will be bloodshed instantly. If once fighting begins even I can't say when it will cease."

He did not try to emphasize matters. He could see that she had made up her mind. She would not let Hallett know. The matter of the payment would be taken up when she was in a more composed frame of mind. The coming interview with Andrew Orme would be of great service to him. A million dollars! With his lion's share of it, what might not his next carefully planned coup realize?

Most criminals have longed to be able to start anew with the knowledge the years have brought them and freed from those marks of identification which the police record so well. Perhaps in all the history of crime there had been no such case as that of the man who called himself by the name of Clements. Not again would he run the risks that he had once taken. With money, he could always hire men for the rougher work.

He roused himself from these pleasing reflections when Mrs. Radway rose to her feet. She was a beautiful woman. There was little to marvel at in the doctor's surrender to her charm. He rather liked the man he thought of as Andrew Orme, and he hoped Andrew Orme liked him. The minor operation of which he had spoken was in reality one of extreme delicacy; no bungler must attempt it. He intended to keep Orme with him permanently. Facial surgery was not old enough for anyone to state with certainty how well it would last.

"I think I should like to see Doctor Waite," Mrs. Radway said.

"I will send him in, but caution you not to let him try any violence with me or endeavor to make Hallett an ally. If he disobeys your warning he may be dooming you to a worse danger than he knows."

Bettington was in his room.

"Mrs. Radway wants you. Everything has turned out as I wished. She will warn you not to be violent to me; she thinks you are her only friend. It will not be difficult; already she believes in you. You have no prejudices to overcome."

Old Structures High as Modern Skyscraper

The skyscraper is probably our most striking achievement, says Emil Lorch, professor of architecture.

"Europeans are thrilled by its daring fusion of art and science and by the unusual street effects, and skyline created by these huge towerlike masses which rise here and there above our cities much as do the cathedrals over the lower and more even outlines of foreign towns.

"It must not be assumed, however, that high buildings are of recent or American origin.

"The Great pyramid of Egypt, built 4,500 years ago, was originally nearly 500 feet in height, with a base 700 by 700 feet, covering 13 acres, or an area equaling one-third that of the original campus of the University of Michigan. Its height equals that of a 45-story building. The interior of Beauvais cathedral is nearly 160 feet high; it is 450 feet to the top of the dome of St. Peter's in Rome, a maximum for masonry construction being reached at about 500 feet in the towers of Cologne cathedral and in the Washington monument.

Famous Early Bishop

Francis Asbury was born at Hamstead Bridge, near Birmingham, England, in 1745. He died at Spotsylvania, Va., in 1816. He came to America as a missionary in 1771. There were then only 316 Methodists in America. When he died he had traveled more than 270,000 miles, preached more than 16,000 sermons, and ordained more than 4,000 Methodist ministers. He never married. Constant travel, limited resources and his zeal in church service were some of the reasons advanced for his single life.

French Superstitions

To a considerable extent, the French peasants still attach credence to the evil eye, to witches, to were-wolves and to other weird medieval superstitions, in spite of years of persistent effort to eradicate these primitive beliefs. In many remote villages of Normandy and Brittany belief in heathen deities also survives. Sacred trees are the object of midnight worship, when young girls gather to dance in the moonlight, as in the days of Druidical heathenism. Healers and medicine men abound in the rural districts and certain animals still are treated with reverential awe. Cases involving superstition are constantly coming to the attention of the French courts.

When Food Sours

Lots of folks who think they have "indigestion" have only an acid condition which could be corrected in five or ten minutes. An effective anti-acid like Phillips Milk of Magnesia soon restores digestion to normal.

Phillips does away with all that sourness and gas right after meals. It prevents the distress so apt to occur two hours after eating. What a pleasant preparation to take! And how good it is for the system! Unlike a burning dose of soda—which is but temporary relief at best—Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid.

CANADIAN MEMORIAL AT VIMY RIDGE

The quarries that were worked by the Emperor Diocletian are now supplying the huge blocks of stone required for the Canadian war memorial at Vimy Ridge. Since 305 A. D. they have remained idle. The story of their new activity is told by W. S. Allward, Toronto sculptor, who won the award for the erection of the monument on the battlefield where the Canadians made their greatest effort during the World war.

Mr. Allward was in need of large, flawless blocks for the heroic figures of the memorial. He sought them in various parts of Europe. His wanderings brought him to the little town of Spalato on the eastern shores of the Adriatic, where, near the seashore, are the ruins of the palace built by Diocletian. The kind of stone he wanted was in its walls.

Mr. Allward was struck by the beauty and durability of the stone. It is a pink buff, which, in the passing of years has ripened to a rich amber. He found on the hillside above the ruins the old quarries in which it had been cut. Since the last blocks had been quarried there in 305 they had not been worked.

They contained an abundant supply for his needs, and today native workers are chiseling out massive blocks and sliding them down the mountain side.

The Vimy memorial is 200 feet square. The top of the pylons will reach 140 feet above the ground level. Joints between the great blocks of stone are only one-sixteenth of an inch wide. Studios will be erected on the monument itself and the figures will be cut there.

The artists' conception of the memorial is that of a strongly walled defense. Through the walls appear the mouths of cannon. At the base of the walls are the defenders. One group depicts the breaking of the sword, the other the sympathy of the Canadians for the helpless. Standing in front of the main platform is Canada in the form of a hooded woman, her head bowed in sorrow over the graves. Below is suggested a tomb on which lie a helmet and laurels.

Behind the great tapering shafts of the pylons rise skyward. In the arch which they form is the Spirit of Sacrifice throwing the torch to a comrade. Issuing from the inner sides of the pillars are symbolic figures, their arms reaching upward. Around are shields of Britain, Canada and France.

Outside is the cross. The whole forms a memorial of majestic beauty, worthy of that fine material found by the sculptor.

All Are Remembered

At Arlington on Memorial day gay fragrant blossoms are heaped around the cold gray bases of imposing monuments to generals, and they also blanket the modest last resting places of the heroes of the Maine, where the little white headstones are as alike as the uniforms of the sailors who went down in Havana harbor so many years ago.

AMERICAN DEAD IN FRENCH SOIL

Suresnes, under the frowning ramparts of Fort Valerien just outside of Paris, has most of the graves of Americans who died of wounds in hospitals in Paris. All other cemeteries are on ground captured by the American troops. The dead buried in them either fell on this ground of in combat in the general region of which the cemetery is the center. By insistence on this rule, General Pershing, as chairman of the American battle monuments commission, gave the soldier burial on the battlefield on which he fought, with the exception of those killed in minor engagements. Incidentally, this has resulted in the cemeteries varying in size roughly in proportion to the importance of the battle.

The wooden grave markers originally erected in the cemeteries have been replaced by white marble headstones —a cross for those of Christian faith, a shield of David for those of Jewish faith. Each headstone has inscribed on it the full name of the soldier, his rank, regiment, division, state from which he came, and date of his death.

These headstones are more than three feet high and stand as individual and imperishable monuments to those who gave their lives. Here and there is a grave of one who remains unknown, the headstone bearing the inscription: "Here rests in honored glory an American soldier known but to God."

Nowhere else in the world can be found cemeteries more beautiful, more restful, more thoroughly cared for than these plots of consecrated soil to which mothers and widows make their pilgrimage. Flowers, trees and shrubbery laid out by skillful and sympathetic hands of trained landscape gardeners and nurtured with tender care, lend a quiet beauty to these final resting places of our hero dead. The American flag, symbol of the glorious tradition which inspired these men in life to offer themselves in their country's cause, floats in silent tribute over the graves. At each cemetery is an American caretaker, himself a veteran of the war, one who knows through what these men went and whose heart is in the duty he keeps. In addition to his routine, he extends a welcome to those who come to the cemetery seeking information and aids them in locating graves.

One of the points on which General Pershing has been particularly insistent is that besides rest rooms in each cemetery, there must be a chapel into which relatives can go to prayer and religious consolation. These memorial chapels are imposing structures, having been designed by some of the most prominent architects in the United States and the designs approved by the national commission of fine arts. The chapels will be monumental in nature, beautiful, restful and impressive. On the walls of the chapels will be inscriptions to the men who gave their lives. They will also bear individual inscriptions giving the name, rank, organization, date of death and the home state of men who still sleep in unknown graves.

there. The pastor of the Spencerville Lutheran Church would have charge of the services every other Sunday either in the afternoon or evening. For a while a young man from Hicksville would come on foot and hold services receiving whatever compensation the assembly would give.

On January 7, 1879, at the Center School House the following trustees were elected, John Leighty, John Widney, and Jas. Reed. A building committee of five persons was appointed as follows, Rev. E. W. Erick, J. D. Leighty, C. W. Goodale, John Dills, and O. H. Widney. A soliciting committee for the proposed church consisted of O. H. Widney, J. D. Leighty, John Engle, John Widney, and Gilbert Barbeau.

At a meetng held June 8, 1879, it was resolved that a building 32 feet wide, 48 feet long, and 16 feet high with three windows on each side be erected on a stone foundation. Any one furnishing timber was allowed $12.00 per thousand for oak, and not over $20.00 per thousand for poplar. The ground for the building was donated by John and J. D. Leighty who had purchased 100 acres of land with the intentions of starting a village and securing a station stop on the Baltimore and Ohio Railway which was then under construction. Others gave willingly of their money and time, and strength in manual labor.

The building was dedicated to the worship of the Triune God on May 9, 1880. The sermon was preached by Rev. H. C. Grossman after which Rev. E. W. Erick assumed charge of the meeting for the purpose of raising funds for the liquidation of the debt. After the services were continued to some length, it was decided to postpone further services until the evening when Rev. Grossman delivered another discourse. After this service sufficient funds were pledged to cover all indebtedness. Then the ritual service was conducted by the pastor, Rev. S. Kelso, assisted by Rev. E. W. Erick, and the church was solemnly dedicated to Almighty God.

In the early part of May, 1889, a few energetic members saw the need of improvements in the auditorium, and the advantages of an addition. It was decided to add to the South end of the church an addition of twenty by thirty feet with a cellar and furnace. The work was completed by October 13, 1889 at a cost of $1,000.00. The following day the re-dedication service was conducted by Rev. J. S. Barnett, of Goshen, Indiana, who was assisted by the pastor Rev. J. S. Nelson.

Again plans for remodeling the church building were gotten under way in 1904. After a "nice sum" had been pledged to carry on the work, it was begun. The building committee was composed of W. C. Patterson, M. T. Bishop and J. Y. Davis. The addition built in 1889 was removed. Six feet was added to the rear and 25 feet to the front of the auditorium under which was put a basement eleven feet in height. With the exception of a slight change in the choir and the substitution of electric lights for acetylene lights the church is practically the same today. The cost was about $5,000.00. During the remodeling the congregation worked very hard and in comparative harmony. Sunday School and church services were held in the Opera House until the basement was completed after which it was used until the completion of the church. In January, 1906, Rev. C. E. Rice, of Elkhart conducted the morning service assisted by the pastor, Rev. W. M. Habey. An amount sufficient to cover all indebtedness was secured at this service. In the evening the building was reconsecrated again to the service of Almighty God.

Household Uses for Lemons

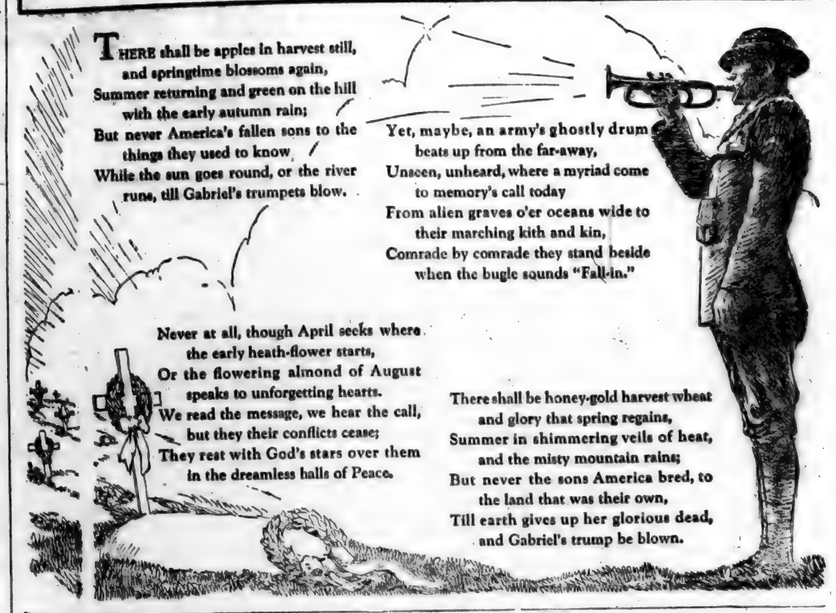
Lemon juice may be substituted for vinegar in any recipe that calls for the latter, except pickling.

Lemon juice added to sweet milk will sour it suitably for cooking.

Add a small amount of lemon juice and grated rind in stewing such dried fruits as prunes, figs, peaches and so on.

Tough meats will be made tender by adding a teaspoon of lemon juice to water on which they are boiled.

Our Hero Dead, Hail and Farewell!



THERE shall be apples in harvest still,
and springtime blossoms again,
Summer returning and green on the hill
with the early autumn rain;
But never America's fallen sons to the things they used to know
While the sun goes round, or the river runs, till Gabriel's trumpets blow.

Never at all, though April seeks where the early heath-flower starts,
Or the flowering almond of August speaks to unforgetting hearts.
We read the message, we hear the call,
but they their conflicts cease;
They rest with God's stars over them in the dreamless halls of Peace.

Yet, maybe, an army's ghostly drum beats up from the far-away,
Unseen, unheard, where a myriad come to memory's call today
From alien graves o'er oceans wide to their marching kith and kin,
Comrade by comrade they stand beside when the bugle sounds "Fall-in."

There shall be honey-gold harvest wheat and glory that spring regains,
Summer in shimmering veils of heat,
and the misty mountain rains;
But never the sons America bred, to the land that was their own,
Till earth gives up her glorious dead,
and Gabriel's trump be blown.

HERE'S
WHY THE HUNDREDS OF THOUSANDS OF USERS have not spent a cent for service

FLAWLESS mechanism—sealed in steel—makes the General Electric Refrigerating unit trouble-proof and service-free. Thousands of persons in hundreds of cities have seen it actually submerged in water—operating perfectly day after day. No other mechanical refrigerator could withstand such a gruelling test—a test which has dramatically shown why no owner—out of hundreds of thousands—has ever paid a cent for service.

General Electric Refrigerator gives you a perfect mechanism, permanently oiled, properly placed and hermetically sealed. Dust, dirt and moisture cannot get inside the steel-walled unit. Nothing—not even complete submersion in water—can halt faithful operation. This refrigerator serves you quietly, efficiently and unfailingly.

The cabinet, striking in modern beauty, is all steel, porcelain-lined and easily movable. Food-storage space is far greater. Let a refrigeration specialist show you the model that best meets your particular needs.

ST. JOE CHILDREN URGED TO BE CAREFUL

J. H. Leahy, the B. & O. patrolman for this division, made St. Joe a call a few days ago, and while looking about the company grounds, he came to The News office and made his business known, explaining just why he was interested in St. Joe from the standpoint of its children.

All along the line many children are killed each year, or injured by having an arm or leg cut off by trains, when they insist on playing on the company grounds. Mr Leahy had with him pictures of children who had fallen victims to train accidents, just because their parents did not know where they were and what they were doing.

No child has met with a misfortune in St. Joe, but hardly a week passes but what children are seen sitting on the tracks or playing about the cars on the side track.

A very striking picture was left at our office which we have posted in our window for the kiddies to read and discuss among themselves.

Here is the sad story told by this picture:

"The boy on the table is Bobbie Bond. His legs were cut off when he was playing around railroad tracks and tried to catch on a freight train for a ride. Thousands of boys have been killed or crippled doing the same thing. Bobbie wasn't killed, but he was crippled for life.

"The other boys in the picture have been arrested and taken before the Judge for playing on railroad tracks. They were arrested because it's wrong to hop trains or to play on the tracks. The trains and tracks belong to the railroad company. You have no more right to play on railroad tracks than the train has to run over your yard or your playground.

"To play around cars and tracks isn't fair to your parents, either, because they don't want you to do it; and it isn't fair to yourself, because you may be killed, or crippled like Bobbie Bond. Think of all the fun he is going to miss. He's got cork legs, but you can't be a good ball player or wrestler or any kind of an athlete with cork legs.

"The judge told these boys that hopping trains is cheating. Bobby and the other boys didn't know that. If they had, they would not have done it. But it's true. Playing around tracks and trains isn't fair to yourself or anybody else. Play hard, but play only where you have a right to play.

"Be fair and square to everybody!"

The police department is circulating some "Nevers" for children and we hope that parents will take time to read and explain them to their children:

Never cross the tracks by night or by day, without stopping to listen and look each way.

Never walk along the railroad ties—you can't always trust your ears and eyes.

Never hop a freight, for nothing quite heals the wound received under grinding wheels.

Never, on a hot or sunny day, sit beneath a box car to rest or play.

Never crawl under a car of freight, when the crossing's blocked—play safe and wait.

Never board, or alight from, a train that is moving, accidents daily its dangers are proving.

Never play games 'round the tracks at the station—there are much safer places to seek recreation.

Never leave on the rail any spikes or bars, because, in this way, you may wreck the cars.

Never a railroad bridge should you cross, a train may come and result in your loss.

Never pick up coal 'round the railroad yard, a train may catch you off your guard.

DR. WINGER GIVES SPLENDID ADDRESS

Dr. J. Oscar Winger, of North Manchester College, rendered a very valuable service to the community and to the graduating class Tuesday night, when he bore down on the present day needs and the part that those just commencing in life were to play.

The greatest need is for one to know himself, or in a plainer term the speaker said, "Do we know as much as we ought to know?"

The graduates of 1930 owe much to their community for their education, because of the present day equipment afforded them, and the greatest service that can be rendered the community, is for the individual to find the thing he can do best and then devote his whole life to it.

The greatest virtue of a person is the exercise of self control. Be strong, throw aside temptation, honor God in their life, walk uprightly, and do that which is right.

As a commencement, it is rightly named, as young people are just starting out in life to learn, and they will soon learn that their greatest resources are in the undeveloped self. The business of the school is to assist in the development of the individual talent.

The members of the class that appeared on the program were: Dorothy Knight, class history; Marguerite Wilson, piano solo; validictory, Virginia Ginther; class will, Grace Curie, together with County Superintendent Stallman and suerintendent Maxwell in appropriate remarks.

The school orchestra furnished the musical numbers.

The class colors, green and white were used in the decorating which was neat and attractive.

MAX R. WHITE TAKES NEW POST

Max R. White, a former teacher in the St. Joe school, of Knox, Indiana, has a note worthy position. We take the item from the South Bend Times, as follows:

"Max R. White, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry E. White, of Knox, Indiana, has resigned as instructor in the University of Texas to accept a research assistanceship in the University of Chicago. His work will be in the department of political science in connection with a study that Prof. Wooddy of that department is making for the Hoover commission."

PROPERTY STOLEN

Eight white oak plank were stolen from the Wearley saw mill at Spencerville, and identity of offender is known. Unless same are returned at once, prosecution will follow.

21t1. Olen Dermott, Owner.

Will be held at the Cimmunity Gym, St. Joe, on next Friday evening at 7:30 o'clock, Central Standard Time, and the entire populace is invited to attend the demonstration as indicated by the program below.

Three weeks of bible training will have been completed by this time, under volunteer leadership of those interested in the future generation, and representing the combined churches of the township.

Three weeks of service, taken from the busy routine of the housewife and those of other professions, represent a considerable sacrifice on their part, and yet many of the parents refuse to share their small part in making the school a success, by seeing to it that their child is present. But, in face of all this, the school has been a wonderful success and ought to reflect in the future life of the child, of a far greater value than any parent can imagine.

Bring your friends and neighbors and enjoy the closing of the school.

The work of the different classes will be on exhibit at this time, so come early and see the hand work.

At noon Friday a picnic dinner will be enjoyed by the pupils and teachers. Each one being requested to bring sandwiches and one other dish.

BACCALAUREATE SERVICES SUNDAY AFTERNOON

The baccalaureate services for the senior class were held Sunday afternoon at the Lutheran Church, with a fair attendance. The music for the occasion was rendered by the local choir and Rev. Stoll delivered the message. Rev. Mayfield of the Methodist Church assisted.

The message was directed to the class of young people, depicting the success of life not being measured by possessions but rather by the application of christian principles to their living. Education is good and necessary, but without God, it is a failure and a dangerous thing, not only for self, but society as a whole.

The class is composed of Hilda Morr, Grace Curie, Marguerite Wilson, Dorothy Knight, Ruth Bishop, Naomi Baker, Virginia Ginther and Clifton Draggoo.

MRS. MYRA MALONE-KELLER GETS DIVORCE

Myra Malone Keller, of near Mt. Pleasant secured a divorce from Dan Keller in the DeKalb circuit court Saturday.

Both parties had been previously married and had children and the plaintiff said the defendant cursed in the presence of her and their children. She said conditions became such that they could not live together any longer.

The couple were married Dec. 5, 1928, and separated last March 1. The defendant did not appear and the state was represented by Richard W. Sharpless, prosecuting attorney.

The court restored the plaintiff's former name, Myra Malone.

GOT A REAL KICK OUT OF RIDE

Ed Miser, Dan Leas and Gene Kelley, were the three DeKalb County citizens afforded special honors by the Standard Oil Co., at Fort Wayne last Friday, as their guests and given a free ride in their 14-passenger Ford, tri-motor plane "Standolin." After making a flight about Fort Wayne, the occupants were greeted by Mayor Hosey.

SUCCESS OF THE DRIVERS LICENSE LAW

For the first ten months of the operation of the drivers license law, there was a total revocation of 904 licenses as reported by Otto G. Fifield, Secretary of State.

Of this total number 612 licenses were suspended for drunkenness, with 50 now pending; 125 were suspended for from 30 to 180 days; 50 suspended for reckless speeding; 25 suspended for property damage; 25 licenses revoked by agreement; 10 drivers licenses denied and seven revoked for one year for petit larceny. Mr. Fifield says, "That the drivers license law is meeting with popular favor and many compliments are received on the diligent enforcement of the law."

WINS $2.00 CHECK FOR PRIZE LETTER

Little Miss Leila Hurni, age 7, was recipient Monday, of a $2.00 check, from the Chas. E. She has her plans all made as to what the money would be used for immediately.

Later we learned that Marcella Wiers was also awarded a $2.00 cash prize and that Mrs. Leon Kees, teacher, was given a check of $10.00 for her services.

PETERS ELECTED BY ONE VOTE

R. Earl Peters, of Fort Wayne, was re-elected democratic state chairman at a meeting of the democratic state committee in Indianapolis, Friday.

The vote was 13 to 12.

Peters was saved from a tie vote with Lee Bays of Sullivan, by an improperly made out proxy for Mrs. Nora Short of Salem, third district vice-chairman, carried by L. A. Smallwood, Oolitic, which would have been cast for Bays.

It was the first time Peters' reign as chairman of the democratic party in Indiana has been seriously challenged, since he took the helm.

Mrs. A. P. Flynn, Logansport, was re-elected vice-chairman, receiving 14 votes. Mrs. Carl E. Wood of Indianapolis, received eight, and Mrs. Inez Scholl of Connersville, three.

Charms of Malaga

Turkeys Driven to Market Through the Streets of Malaga.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

SPAIN is once again in the world's news because of its change of dictators, but it is chiefly the Spain of Madrid and the well beaten path between the easily accessible cities, that most tourists travel. Most travelers have their first experience with the Spanish carabinero either at the customhouse of Irun, south of Biarritz, or at Port Bou, on the Mediterranean side. Then they hasten to San Sebastian, on one end of the Pyrenees, or to Barcelona, on the other, and after a brief stay, proceed to Madrid. Later, if there is time, to Toledo, and southward to Seville and Granada.

Thus merely the high spots are touched, while the unlimited beauty and interest of Spain lying along the bypaths remain scarcely known—and are still waiting to delight the venturesome traveler.

In seeking little-known Spain one of the best places to start the quest is on the Spanish Riviera, along the Mediterranean coast from Gibraltar to Almeria. The center of this district is the seaport of Malaga, a city of 150,000 inhabitants, surrounded by a semicircle of mountains which forms a natural rampart against the cold from the north and gives to this delightful spot a mildness of winter climate unequaled in all Europe.

As a general description of Malaga today, one need employ only three words: clean, modern, charming. Polite traffic officers—perhaps one should say "bobbies," because they are dressed in neat uniforms of British pattern—direct the stream of automobiles just as they do in London. There are broad avenues, lovely villas, and well-kept parks, in which an endless variety of bright flowers is always in bloom.

Indeed, this Andalusian city, nestling on the blue Mediterranean, has ambition and is exerting effort toward its accomplishment—to attract the tourists, or at least some of them, who have grown tired of returning year after year to the French Riviera.

In the Market Place.

One center of interest is the market place, a large covered building built around a picturesque Moorish arch which serves as its entrance. There are aisles of stalls devoted to meat, fish, vegetables, and fruit; but the market has overflowed its banks and now extends out into the adjoining streets, where in open air there are rows of fruit and vegetable stalls in charge of peasant men and women.

Apart from the fruit stalls is a stand selling earthen water jugs, of various sizes, arranged along the sidewalk. These are open at the neck, but have a tiny spout in the side. The peasants drink by holding the jug well above their heads and letting the tiny stream of water fall into their open mouths. A novice at this method has considerable difficulty not only with the aim, but also with swallowing against the steady stream of liquid.

The crescent of mountains which surrounds Malaga is about 60 miles from point to point and is formed of five ranges. They still bear their quaint Moorish names: Sierra de Mijas, Sierra de Abdalagis, Sierra de Alhama, Sierra de Tejeda, and the Sierra de Almijara which drops suddenly into the sea near Almunecar.

The old word "sierra" means, in Spanish, a "saw," and it is vividly descriptive of these irregular sawtooth mountain lines along the sky. Each range is in itself cut and scarred into jagged peaks and precipitous chasms, the tops being of barren and forbidding rock. Then, lower down, is a covering of palmetto grass, thickly interspersed with aromatic herbs—thyme, rosemary, and lavender—and on the lower slopes, in symmetrical rows, like soldiers, thousands upon thousands of silver-green olive trees.

Here and there, on steeper slopes, the olives give place to almonds, and in January their pink and white blossoms, which appear before any of the green leaves, make a little picture of fairyland. The valleys are all yellows and greens—orange trees, lemon trees, grapevines, and sugar canes.

Everything Is "Paintable."

From almost any viewpoint in the valley, not one, but three or four, rugged mountain lines may be seen, one piled up back of the other. The last line, in the far distance, is in the most delicate of blues and purples; and yet, because of the brilliant atmosphere, it stands out clearly against the deep, cloudless sky. The tops of the nearer ranges take on deeper hues of blue and purple of startling beauty, and the foreground has its splashes of brilliant yellow, green, and orange in the sunshine.

As if still not satisfied with this lavish rainbow of bright colors, Nature has painted the cultivated soil a deep, rich Venetian red; so that even the ground work in this Andalusian land takes on a beauty and interest all its own.

Artists who see this lovely country for the first time exclaim that everything is "paintable"—every tree, every building, every mountain top.

The same is true of many of the lesser-known provinces of Spain, though each has its own strong provincial individuality, not only of landscape, but also in facial types and coloring, quaint Old World costumes, and even in the different trappings with which horses, mules, donkeys, and the huge bullocks are decked out.

Malaga has a daily paper, La Union Mercantil, of which in all justice it may be exceedingly proud. A large "double-deck" press of French make turns out its 12 to 16 pages every day. In the composing room four linotypes click busily all night long. Modernity in the extreme is the keynote of its production; yet in every issue there is a quarter column headed "On This Same Date." Thereunder appear items that have happened in the province on the date of issue, but in previous years. Generally, there are six or eight years picked at random by the well-informed chronologist, but often these go back before the discovery of America and refer to family names still existing in the city!

One reads in quite a matter-of-fact way:

December 9, 1466.—King Henry IV conferred the title of "Very Noble" upon the city of Antequera, Province of Malaga, showing proof of his affection and consideration for the heroic services rendered by its inhabitants.

December, 1618.—After more than a whole year of drought, it rained today in Antequera, but it was only a little shower, so the hunger and difficulties still continue.

And these little pictures themselves, sometimes gay, but more often grave, bring the distant centuries, with their odd customs and strange superstitions very near to us. The narrow streets in Malaga's center which one passes every day are mentioned time and again.

Where Phoenicians Lived.

In the very center of the city is the Gibralfaro, a miniature mountain, which rises straight out of Malaga's principal streets to a height of 500 feet. Halfway up the approach is the Alcazaba, which was the site of the original Phoenician settlement. It passed through the hands of Romans, Visigoths, and Moors, the latter capturing it in the year 711. They made this vantage spot half palace and half citadel, and it was not until August 18, 1487, that the Spanish standard was flown over its battlements. The Alcazaba was one of the very last of the Moorish strongholds on European soil.

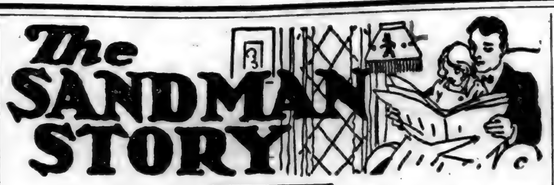
Today there are a few tortuous streets, steep and narrow, leading between old houses, many in ruins, and a group of gypsy huts. At one or two places the streets pass through archways with the houses built over them.

Formerly this part of Malaga, which is the most picturesque and interesting, was so dirty and the gypsies so menacing in their demands for "One penny, please," that tourists were advised to leave it out of their itinerary. Now it has been cleaned up to some extent and the inhabitants are less importunate.

In Malaga, as elsewhere in Spain, one sees many apprentice boys of twelve to fourteen years. Every plumber, carpenter, and electrician has a small boy to carry his tools and help with the job.

In many cases taxi drivers have a boy to do the cranking and other onerous tasks. The hairdresser's boy accompanies him to the house, carrying a little bag, and sits on the steps while Madame is being marcelled. In fact, even for the ordinary civilian, to carry a small parcel of any sort is not quite the proper thing. A boy should tag along behind, bearing the burden, however small.

The SANDMAN STORY



ABOUT WIND'S PALACE

TOMMY, the boy who was having adventures, was very much excited when he saw the place where the Wind went when the Wind died down.

He saw the Wind's Sleeping Palace which was in a sunny, hilly field, just off the edge of the woods. Above the Wind's Palace was the sky, for the Wind liked plenty of air when he slept.

There were many little creatures outside humming a low, soft melody which was very soothing and much like a lullaby. They did this for the wind, and there were katy-dids, bumblebees, humming birds in the chorus.

Just by the door of the palace there was a notice.

It begged those who came to pay attention to the notice and Tommy read it all. He was particularly interested in the part that said:

Tommy Jumped Upon the Wind, Riding Piggyback Fashion.

"When the Wind dies down and goes to his Sleeping Palace, it is so very quiet, and so very very, very still, and so very calm that even the earth people cannot feel any breeze. 'The Wind has completely died down,' they say. It is because we are keeping his Palace so quiet.

"Uphold these traditions.

"And remember!

"The Wind is tired. He has been off on a Gale Occasion. A Gale Occasion is the same with him as a Gala Occasion is with the Earth people.

"Remember the rules. Tread gently."

Just as Tommy finished reading the door of the Palace was opened and standing there were two little gentlemen dressed in fly-away coats of green.

They held the door back and one of them whispered to Tommy:

"We're the Breeze Brothers. We're keeping very quiet. If we began to get excited the Wind might want to see what was up."

Tommy walked on along the great hall. It was made of beautiful stones and small pine and fir trees stood in great green buckets on either side. As he walked along he saw the Tread Softly Cupboard and picked out a pair of Guaranteed-Not-to-Make-a-Sound Moss Slippers.

Then he turned down a corridor to the right and before long he was in the Royal Wardrobe room talking to the Wardrobe Chief.

What a wardrobe the Wind had! There were costumes for rainy-windy days, for windy-sunny days, for windy-cold days, for windy-mild days. There were wild costumes for hurricanes, gales, blizzards, storms and there was one costume which looked like a clown's costume which the Wardrobe Chief said was the costume the Wind wore when he went on his howling parties sometimes of a very windy evening.

"You've heard him howl at night?" the Wardrobe Chief asked Tommy and Tommy said he had.

"That's what he wears," the Wardrobe Chief said. It was the wildest costume—the sleeves and trousers all frazzled, the hood covered with bells and whistles and horns.

Tommy had no idea the Wind had so many costumes, yet he could see that there was a time when the Wind wore each of them.

And then he saw the Wind asleep. Above him was his sky roof and he had a bed which looked as though it had come from the deep, deep forest. The Wind was sound asleep. The chorus outside the Palace could be heard faintly, the sun was shining down and the Wind looked like a beautiful knight of old, or maybe a prince, slim and handsome and young and a brave, merry fellow too.

When the Wind caught sight of Tommy he laughed.

"Well upon my word as the Wind, so here you are. And now to pay me back for running off with your kite last week and your balloon two weeks before you have now discovered where the Wind goes when the Wind dies down!

"Good for you, Tommy. But come, jump on my back and I'll take you to the Mountain Top. If you've come this far that's where you must be going."

Tommy jumped upon the Wind and riding piggyback fashion they dashed off, the Wind flinging his windy-sunny day cape about him. And as they flew off the Palace began to sway, and the trees and the ferns all bowed again and again and everything which had been so still began to move.

"We're off," cried the now wide-awake Wind.

THE CENSUS

THE census which is being taken this year by the federal government will be more than a mere counting of noses. Twenty-four questions are asked of each person, among which the most interesting are: "Do you own your own home?" "Have you a radio?" "What is your age?" "When were you married?" "What is your occupation?" "Are you now employed?" When the figures are all compiled they will furnish most interesting and valuable information regarding many questions upon which public opinion seems to differ.

L. A. Barrett.

It has been estimated that in addition to the regular staff of 8,000 persons employed by the United States census bureau 100,000 persons will have been employed before the census is completed and the cost will be about forty million dollars. The first announcement will come about June first and will be a statement of the population. The task of tabulating all the information will take several years.

In the office of the census bureau at Washington there is a clock which records the estimated increase in population—"One birth every thirteen seconds, one death every twenty-three seconds, one immigrant entering the country every one and one-half minutes and one emigrant leaving the country every five minutes. The increase in population is one every thirty-three seconds."

The total population which the census will record has been estimated at 120 million. This will be an increase of about ten to fifteen million during the last ten years. The national bureau of economic research estimates that between 1909 and 1914 the increase was about eight million and between 1923 and 1928 about seven million. The rate of increase according to these figures would be about a million and a half a year.

President Hoover expressed the wish that every person would help to make the 1930 census a success. He said: "The values which flow from the census are of paramount importance from the point of view of both of economic advancement and of social determinations, and every person in this country has an interest in making it absolutely effective."

"In plain blunt words, Bill, your pipe smells like a 'Hot-Box'!"

ONLY an old and trusted friend would venture to speak so frankly.

A new pipe, or an old one carefully broken in with Sir Walter Raleigh's favorite smoking mixture, changes everything. And why shouldn't it? Sir Walter is milder and more fragrant. And it has the body and flavor found only in the finest of Burley, skillfully seasoned and blended. What more could we offer any pipe smoker? What more could he ask?

The five permanent members of the council of the League of Nations are France, Germany, Great Britain, Italy and Japan. The non-permanent members are nine and include Cuba, Finland, Canada, Spain, Venezuela, Persia, Peru, Poland and Jugoslavia. Both Brazil and Spain were asked to reconsider their resignation from the League. Spain accepted the offer and is a member of the council. Brazil refused to do so and her resignation became effective in June, 1928. Argentina withdrew but is taking steps to return. Costa Rica is deliberating.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

THE MILITARY SALUTE

ALL of us have seen the snappy lifting of the right hand to the forehead and return, which is known as the military salute. It is a sign of deference which is rooted in a custom prevailing perhaps 2,000 years ago.

The military salute is supposed to be a survival of a ceremony observed in Rome at the time of Julius Caesar.

Due to the large influx of foreigners largely as a result of conquests and to other causes, the Roman population was composed of many races and castes between whom at times relations were rather strained.

So, it was the custom when an inferior was in the position of returning a greeting of his social superior to raise his hand, palm outward, in order to show that his hand contained no dagger. This precaution against assassination was quite commonly taken by the so-called higher classes; and it is the movement of the hand in question which is said to have developed into the military salute.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

SUNDAY'S BABY

THERE are several current superstitions with regard to birth and babyhood which are clearly related to sun-worship. Some of them have already been noticed in this series. The superstition which is general in the United States, and is found also in England, which assigns Sunday as a propitious day on which to be born is one of these survivals from the days of our remote sun-worshiping ancestors.

The bairn that is born on fair Sunday
Is bonny and loving and blith and gay, is the way they put it in Massachusetts, and in New York they say:

The child that is born on the Sabbath day
Is blith and bonny, good and gay.

In many sections the saying runs: "Sunday's child shall never know want." This superstition is of close kin to the one which says that the baby must be taken first into the sun on Sunday. There is another common superstition which connects the sun with that important event in a person's life, his birth. It is the one which says that "Thursday has one lucky hour, just before sunrise, for birth." The superstition under discussion is a survival of the ancient idea that the child born on the day dedicated to the sun is under the special protection of the sun-god. We have dedicated the first and the second days of the week to the sun and the moon respectively, and the remaining five to other heathen gods; so it is not at all surprising that concommitant superstitions still exist in modern folk-lore.

Tea on Russian Trains

When a Russian goes on a railroad journey he takes his teakettle. And he takes his tongue, for the Russians appear to be constantly talking—at least on a train.

At every station, off jump the travelers with their kettles to make tea. The tea-making and the accompanying chatter usually last until the train begins to go, when the passengers rush on board, many after the train has started.—New York Times.

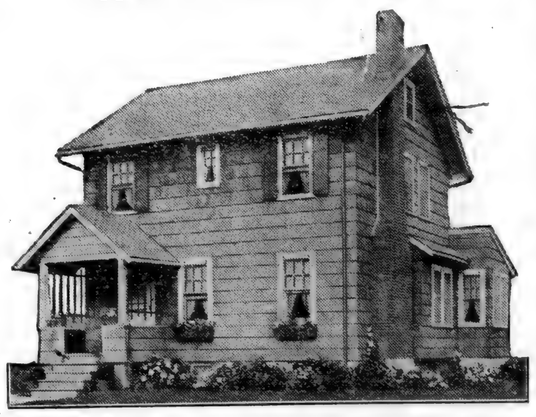
Type of Home Building That Will Appeal to Family of Small Means



This attractive colonial home is distinctive without being extreme; it bears the test of good taste, right principles. The floor plans are conveniently arranged, each room being allotted ideal dimensions.

By W. A. RADFORD

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to practical home building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as editor, author and manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 407 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

It requires only a slight addition to an otherwise plain home to make it attractive. A good example of this idea is shown in the home building design illustrated here. This is a plain rectangular two-gable house but by the addition of the porch, the outside fireplace and the irregular wall of the dining room, it has been made a home which in outward appearance is out of the ordinary.

This is the type of home building design which will appeal to those who want an attractive house at a comparatively small investment. It contains six good sized rooms and yet its dimensions are only 22 feet by 26 feet. Both the living room and dining room are unusually large and upstairs there are three good sized bedrooms, each a corner room, and a bathroom.

An attractive feature of the exterior of this house is the use of shingles on the outside walls. These are what are known as weathered shingles, and are reminiscent of the sea coast where the action of the salt sea air gives them a silvery tint which is unusually attractive.

How the rooms on both the first and second floors are arranged, and the size of each one are shown by the floor plans.

This is an unusually good design of a small low-cost home suitable for the average size family. It is of frame construction set on a concrete foundation and has a basement of the same dimensions as the house itself, where there is plenty of room for a basement heating plant and for storage.

What will appeal most about this design to the homemaker is the number and size of the closets, the convenient arrangement of the rooms and the manner in which the rooms have been connected.

Walls Hide Important Part of the Plumbing

A very important part of the plumbing of a house is hidden in the walls and under the floors, and for this reason the man who expects to build should deal only with plumbing contractors who can submit a list of homes in which they have installed plumbing that has given lasting satisfaction to the owners.

The usual specifications drawn up by an architect cover the fixtures very definitely, but are quite general with reference to the pipes, valves, and fittings—the essential yet concealed part of the plumbing system. It is in this part of the plumbing system that the owner must depend on the plumbing contractor.

It is in the concealed part of the plumbing system that quality is of the highest importance. Any breakdown in this part of the system necessitates the cutting of walls and subjects the family to a great deal of expense and inconvenience.

Therefore, to the man who is building this spring, this suggestion is offered: Deal with a responsible contractor so that first cost will be last cost in your plumbing system.

The reputable plumbing contractor will use pipes, valves, and fittings of good quality for his "roughing in" materials. He will not try to save money and thus come out even on a low bid by substituting inferior materials where they will not be seen.

Workmen employed by good contractors have been taught the mechanical installation of a plumbing system that will not be noisy in operation. For instance, the soil pipe which runs from the basement up to the roof of the house can be made sound proof with a one-inch thickness of hair felt.

The use of felt has another advantage in that it will absorb condensation and thus prevent unsightly spots on the walls of the house.

For this reason it is advisable to wrap the downspouts with felt if they are placed in the walls of the building.

A good contractor knows how to install a system that will be free from the noisy water hammer. He will so install his pipes that there will be perfect circulation of hot water. Furthermore, a good master plumber will insulate the hot-water pipes in the walls and under the floors, thus saving approximately 25 per cent in fuel in a circulating system. Usually specifications call for insulation of pipes in the basement only.

The good contractor will see to it that his workmen ream all cuts of pipes to remove burs before these pipes are threaded. Good contractors will also see to it that all pipes are laid to such a grade that the water will drain out of them when the plugs are opened. This is essential in case the house is to stand unoccupied. An adequate number of cleanouts in waste pipes will always be installed by dependable workmen.

Most of these points which are so essential to the efficient and trouble-free operation of a plumbing system are not mentioned in specifications but must be left to the judgment of the contractor.

Wall Shingles Exposed More Than Those on Roof

You do not need as many shingles to the square on the side walls as you do on the roof, for more of their length can be exposed to the weather. You can show as much as seven and a half inches, as against four and a half on the roof. The choice of woods is wide, but red and white cedar, cypress and redwood are considered the most durable and satisfactory.

There are, of course, different grades of shingles, just as with most building materials. For example, cedar shingles are to be obtained in four grades, A, B, C and D. The first grade is suited to houses of quality, since in it only edged grain wood is used, which is the nearest the sawed shingles come to the old hand-split shingle in durability. The lengths which are common are 16, 18 and 24 inches.

The widths vary, but the smallest permitted is three inches. They are sold in bundles of a thousand. In the best grades they are parallel, uniform in thickness and free from feather tips.

Welded Steel Structures Have Great Strength

"Noiseless buildings" are now commercially practicable. The United States bureau of standards has said so. After an exhaustive test of electrically welded steel building frame joints, made last year, the bureau announced that the weld was as strong as the steel members. Such welds are taking the place of noisy riveting as a means of erecting structural steel. A number of electrically welded buildings are now in process of construction. The welding process is much swifter than riveting, and judging by experience of contractors in Canton, Ohio, the cost is less.

BILL, THE BUS DRIVER SAYS

"The middle of the block is no-man's-land, where many a healthy human gets mowed down for keeps."

(By MARCUS A. DOW.)

"Are walkers human?" a drivin' fool once asked that question. Read this one and answer it yourself:

The scene is Fifth avenue in little old New York. "Superb, Majestic, Inspiring," some poet called this expensive lane which runs for a few miles up and down Manhattan. As an inspiration it's a flat tire to me, but as a hustlin' transportin' highway it's a wow. Traffic in this lane durin' busy hours runs in three lines each way.

I was standin' on the west side of the well known avenue watchin' autos roll by about four o'clock in the afternoon. A simple-minded lookin' egg wearin' a silly grin all over his face decides he wants to come across the street right there in the middle of the block. He looks, sees a car comin' toward him next to the curb. He starts across in front of it, gets clear, but runs in front a flivver and to escape the disgrace of bein' bumped off by a road louse, makes a half acrobatic hop-skip-and-jump due west, clearin' the lizzie, also a tourin' car comin' in the third line. He had generated so much steam he had a h—l of a time diggin' his heels into the asphalt deep enough and quick enough to keep from skiddin' into a gas buggy goin' the opposite way. A couple more lucky, agile and funny movements puts him on the curb near where I was standin'. So I just watched him—and the crazy yap walked over to a store in front of where he had made his successful trans-boulevard flight and stood there five minutes lookin' over a display of ladies' stockin's on wooden legs in the window.

That yap only thought he was in a hurry. He just couldn't wait ten seconds until he got to the next crossin' to cross. Hurry causes a lot of accidents and the funny part is folks ain't in the hurry they thinks they are.

Small Villages Tire of Through Traffic Scheme

The danger of picking out the main street of a town and arbitrarily making it a through street, as pointed out in recent studies made by the National Safety council, has recently been emphasized in several Illinois towns.

Petitions have been received by the state highway commission, at Springfield, from representatives of small towns and villages asking that state roads, around which many of them have been built, be re-routed so that the constant stream of traffic may be diverted from their centers.

According to the representatives, it was once thought advantageous to bring as much traffic into the main street as possible, for transient trade meant increased business.

The flow of cars, however, has become so great and the speed at which they travel so rapid that few stop at all. The increased volume has reached a stage where it endangers the lives of the inhabitants.

Even large cities are now finding that the most successful system shunts nonstop traffic around the business district to avoid congestion in the downtown centers.

Important Suggestion on Prevention of Wear

Spatterings of oil found on the garage floor or on the pavement where the car has been parked usually indicate loose oil line connections or loose crankcase bolts. After adjustments are made, the oil filter should be serviced if it has been used 10,000 miles. Attention to these important items means oil economy and prevention of wear on the automobile engine.

THE MOTOR QUIZ

(How Many Can You Answer?)

Q. How many passenger automobiles are on farms in United States?

Ans. Approximately 4,750,000.

Q. What states lead in the number of passenger cars on farms?

Ans. Texas, Illinois, Iowa, Ohio, Wisconsin, Pennsylvania, Minnesota, Missouri and New York, in the order named.

Brakes Are Subjected to Most Terrific Heat

Due to the excessive heats developed in bringing an automobile to a stop, brake linings have to be of such composition that they will not break down or burn up under these high temperatures.

When a vehicle weighing 5,000 pounds is brought to a stop from a speed of fifty miles per hour in approximately four seconds, as it is quite possible to do with the present four-wheel brakes, there is about 450,000 foot pounds of kinetic energy to be converted into heat that has to be absorbed, or dissipated, through the brake lining and brake drums.

The average brake drum wearing surface on cars of such weight is only about three hundred square inches. If many quick stops like this are made in a short time, it can readily be seen that this surface cannot possibly dissipate such an enormous amount of heat and as a result the brake drums would soon be red-hot. Many times, when driving in heavy traffic or in hilly country, the brake drums are often at a temperature of 300 degrees Fahrenheit for considerable periods of time.

Moslem Faith Kept by Tatars in Lithuania

More than 500 years ago when Vytautas the Great was ruling over the grand principality of Lithuania, then at the height of its power and prosperity, he brought back as prisoners from one of his campaigns in the southeast several hundred Tatars. They remained in Lithuania intermarried with the native women, but did not give up their Moslem faith and customs.

United with the remnants of the Tatar troops lent by the grand khan to the Lithuanian grand duke, most of whom fell in the wars with the Teutonic knights, these faithful followers of Mahomet planted the banner of the crescent in these northern regions and their descendants have kept it flying right down to today.

In connection with the solemn celebration this year in all Lithuania of the 500th anniversary of the death of Vytautas the Great, the League of Lithuanian Tatars recently held a meeting in Kovno (Kaunas) and decided to build a central mosque in the capital city.

"Used in Our Family For Three Generations"

Mrs. Etta Miller

Spencer, Ind. — "I can heartily recommend Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It has been used in our family for three generations. My mother used it in expectant periods, at one time she felt she could never live through the ordeal again so began taking the 'Prescription'; used it right up to the last. Her family physician asked why she was so much better this time than ever before. She told him, and he said, 'It is a good medicine.'

"I have used the 'Prescription' and it keeps me from being so nervous.

"My two daughters also have used it with very best results."—Mrs. Etta Miller, Route 1, Box 98. All dealers.

Doctor's PRESCRIPTION when system is sluggish; costs nothing to try

When your bowels need help, the mildest thing that will do the work is always the sensible choice. Take a laxative that a family doctor has used for all sorts of cases of constipation. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is so pleasant to the taste, so gentle in its action, it is given children of tender age and yet it is just as thorough and effective as stronger preparations. Pure senna, and harmless laxative herbs; ingredients that soon start a gentle muscular action. Avoid a coated tongue, bad breath, bilious headaches, etc. Every drug store has Dr. Caldwell's famous prescription in big bottles. Or just write Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, Monticello, Ill., for a free trial bottle.

Easter's Meaning

Easter was meaning very little else to little Junior except Easter rabbits and colored Easter eggs.

"Now, why do we celebrate Easter?" the Sunday school teacher asked the class of tots.

"I don't know but it might be all the little baby chicks' birthday," was an unexpected reply from Junior.

Giant Drug Store

If Baby has COLIC

A cry in the night may be the first warning that Baby has colic. No cause for alarm if Castoria is handy! This pure vegetable preparation brings quick comfort, and can never do the slightest harm. Always keep a bottle in the house. It is the safe and sensible thing when children are ailing. Whether it's the stomach, or the little bowels; colic or constipation; or diarrhea. When tiny tongues are coated, or the breath is bad. Whenever there's need of gentle regulation. Children love the taste of Castoria, and its mildness makes it suitable for the tiniest infant, and for frequent use.

And a more liberal dose of Castoria is always better for growing children than some needlessly strong medicine meant only for adult use. Genuine Castoria always has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper. Prescribed by doctors!

When in America do as the Americans do. Come on up to date.

There are some young men in town that think Liberalism is a Scotchman having a complete change of heart.

One of our town philosophers said the other day that when beaks speak then things begin to go round and round. Furnish your own translation.

"Is prohibition worth keeping?" asks a certain person. Well, is the opposite to prohibition worth keeping, asks another. We have to have one or the other.

One of the most intelligent business men in town said that he thot that the Fatted Calf spoken of in the Prodigal Son's home run, was a heavy set one legged man.

Now they tell us that Chicago has gone on the blink politically and financially. Lots of shooting would make any town blink. The Fourth of July will be a love feast compared to the rest of the year.

Senator Morrow of New Jersey will enter senatorial nomination race in his state and if elected he will use his influence to remove the 18th amendment. It is the opinion of many far seeing educators of today that Mr. Morrow's dream will come true to-morrow —tomorrow never comes.

The child mind: A little girl entered one of our business places here and said that she had been bit by a bumble bee. This child was not concerned about which end of the bee was responsible for the hurt, the fact that she and the bee had had a transaction was the main point of discussion.

"Give to the world the best that you have and the best will come back to you," are the words of some good old sage. What bothers most of us is that he didn't say when the best would come back to us. He no doubt meant that this "best" would be found done up in the kit with our harps.

Its an indisputable fact that the individual who advocates a change for the better in any line is rated as a quitter and a departer from the orthodox way of doing things. Among the social laws of good breeding and unbiased thinking is one that deserves our attention. Do not be the first to indorse the new, nor the last to forsake the old ways of doing things. We must deal with facts as they are now—right now.

Well, Al Capone is again in jail. How does it come all these liberty loving Americans and loyal friends of the Constitution of the United States are known as Al.

Corners are the principal topic of discussion now days—corner on wheat, corner on hogs, the four corners of the earth, prosperity just around the corner, in arguments you get cornered, and in Sunday School they sing "Brighten the corner where you are"—watch your corner.

The Christian Science Monitor editorially asks, Is farm relief really wanted? What the farmer wants to impress on the country is that farm grief and farm relief can be cured by farm belief by legislator and farmer alike. The fact that the farmer is not organized as is all other branch of industries argues nothing. The fact that farmers have never been able to think alike long enough to stay in an organization long enough to get anywhere is no reason why the rest of the world should take advantage of the pioneers of our civilization. The time may come when the legislative branch of our government will give the farmer his day but when that day comes the farmer will be called on to be able to stand prosperity and save his money. There are plenty of millionaires now.

What kind of support besides your taxes are you willing to give to your town?

About 99% of our hard times are the result of buying things that we don't need. The spicefulness of life plays on our fancy streak and crazy bone. Now do you know of any one who wants to buy a perfectly good elephant. All the big shows have them.

The Methodist Protestant Board of Publication had for last Sunday's Sunday School lesson theme "Who is a Good Citizen?" That is a question that 's hardly ever discussed except when "two or three are gathered together in His name" and then it is always settled by the little word Me.

The Illinois Central Railroad Co., has announced that Dr. Hutton has been appointed by the company to treat their employes for glandular trouble which is said to produce ill health and low efficiency of all class of labor. The main purpose of the treatments is to speed up industry and make the workers more peppy and on the job. The treatment is known as endocrinology and is the first time in medical history to treat people for better health preparatry to getting more work out of them. About the next thing we hear about will be some negro emancipator rising up to set free the white man. In some industries men are worked so fast that they get dizzy —mass production means more than the liberty of human beings.

Siamese Twins One Person

Daisy and Violet Hilton, of San Antonio, Texas, Siamese Twins, were taken in as one person by the census enumerator. The twins explained that they were counted as two in restaurants and hotels, when they rode street cars and railroads or any place where money was needed, but when the government at Washington handed down instructions in their case two noses had to go in as one.

Wear A Poppy

When we go out on the streets Saturday afternoon, May 24, we will find the women of the American Legion Auxiliary, Post 97, there before us with baskets of bright red poppies. They will approach us, smiling, and will offer us one of the little flowers to wear on our coat. We will accept the poppy gladly and will reach into our pocket or purse for a coin to drop into their coin holder.

That little red poppy glowing on our coat all day will stir feelings of sympathy and pride. It will bring us remembrances of those fine boys who left this town more than a dozen year ago and marched bravely to their death in defense of their country. Its presence above the hearts will show that we still remember those boys and that we still honor the great sacrifice they made.

The wearing of the poppy is the individual act of tribute to the war dead. It is something which we can all do. The Auxilliary fixes no price for the little flowers. The newsboy with his penny can obtain one just as easily as the business man with his dollar. There is a real American democracy about the poppy. It is worn on coats of smooth broadcloth and threadbare coats of shoddy just as in 1917 and '18 the poppies grew alike about the graves of the boys from the boulevards and the boys from the factory streets. By wearing the poppy everyone can express their veneration for the memory of the World War dead.

Thoughts of the men who lost their lives in the war naturally bring thoughts of those who were not killed but came back to face years of suffering and hardships, often worse than death. The poppy sale will give the people of St. Joe an opportunity to do something for these men and their families. Every penny of the money which is dropped into the coin boxes of the poppy sellers will be used by the Legion and Auxiliary to ease the distress of the disabled veterans and the dependents of the dead and disabled.

Those women whom we will see on the streets Saturday, May 24, with their baskets of poppies will be working both to honor the dead and to serve the living. We all should give them our ready and generous support.

HAGENBECK–WALLACE CIRCUS SEASON OF 1930

Ever on the alert for new sensations, the Hagenbeck–Wallace Circus has engaged "The Great Wilno" who is astually shot with violent velocity from the mouth of a monster cannon. Wilno's death-defying deed will take place twice daily, and will be a part of the regular performance.

In addition to the feat of "Wilno" there will be other innumerable thrillers when the Hagenbeck–Wallace Circus comes to Auburn on May 22. Prominent among the displays will be Clyde Beatty with over thirty fighting African lions and Bengal and Siberian tigers. This is the largest group ever subjugated by an American and represents the pinnacle of wild animal training. Another savage and ferocious number will be presented by Aage Christiansen, a famous European trainer.

Demands of the juvenile patrons have not been overlooked and dumb actors from ponyland, monkeyland, bearland and dogland will participate in many novelties. Such well known trainers as Roy Rush, Bob Norton, Austin King, Cheerful Gardner and Alen Hauser will present groups of horses, zebras, llamas, elephants, camels, and other semi-domestic animals.

"The Golden Orient," a bewitching spectacle of old Japan, will open the lengthy performances. This spectacle is said to be one of the most beautiful and gorgeous ever produced, and requires an extensive cast of characters as well as a vocal chorus. Costumes and wardrobe, as well as properties, scenery and electrical effects cost thousands of dollars.

JUDGE SCORES MOTHER FATHER GETS 90 DAYS

Her two little children saved Mrs. Lela Ayers of Orangeville, Concord Township, from the necessity of serving time for violation of the liquor laws.

She and her husband, Donald Ayers, were arrested May 9, following a raid by Sheriff John C. Armstrong and other officers. Ayers pleaded guilty to the possession of liquor and was given a 90-day sentence to the penal farm. His wife entered a plea of not guilty, but she appeared before Judge Endicott in the circuit court and changed her plea to guilty.

Judge Endicott told her that he was informed by officers that she was running a disorderly house in addition to a bootlegging joint; that young boys and girls had been permitted to congregate there and dance in scant clothing. The court told her he was showing mercy because of her children, but if she does not conduct herself properly in the future she will be taken to the woman's prison at Indianapolis to serve six months. She was fined $100 and the costs, which she paid.

Ayers was taken to the penal farm last Friday by Deputy Sheriff Art Zimmerman.

Caskets and funeral goods are in the "style" class now. The introduction of timely colors and designs in this field came in response to a demand from the public, which insisted on the same high standards here as are maintained in other details of modern life.

But this style element lays another responsibility on the shoulders of the modern funeral director. It is his duty to his patrons to offer them a complete choice of merchandise to suit both taste and purse. And to do so, he must keep constantly informed as to the latest trends in color and design.

This establishment accepts the new responsibility. We have a representative offering of merchandise in our display rooms, and are prepared to give expert advice for the guidance of our patrons.

WINONA AND HER SUMMER PROGRAM

Winona Lake, Indiana, May 21, 1930.—A new attendance record is expected to be established this season at Winona Lake. The new open-gate policy, adopted for the first time this year, is expected to bring thousands of new visitors to this famous educational, religious and recreational center of northern Indiana. James Heaton, who this year assumes the duties of Executive Manager after many years of service as program and platform manager, announces unusual interest in Winona. This is manifested through an increased number of inquiries regarding cottages and hotel reservations, and requests for program information, coming from all parts of the United States.

For thirty-five years, since the founding of Winona Assembly, the gates to the park have been closed during the chautauqua season and admission has been by ticket only. This year entrance to the park will be free and charge will be made only for the admission to the great tabernacle or auditorium where entertainments are given.

With the adoption of the open-gate policy, Warsaw citizens have indicated an increased interest and the Warsaw Chamber of Commerce has guaranteed in Warsaw alone, the sale of 1200 season tickets to the entertainments.

An unusually strong program has been arranged for the chautauqua, which opens June 29th and continues for six weeks, ending August 10th. Bachman's Million Dollar Band, one of the most colorful band organizations of the country, will be an outstanding attraction during the first week, playing two concerts daily on July 3, 4 and 5. On the Fourth of July there will also be an interesting program of sports.

The season is crowded full of unusual features. Almost every week will find conventions and conferences of national scope in progress and throughout the season summer schools of almost every character and of accredited standing will be in session. The great Bible Conference will open August 15 and conclude August 24. Noted speakers from all parts of the world will appear on the program.

Wind is a Close Second to Fire

In destuction and damage to property, high winds are almost as culpable as fire. A wind need not be of tornado force to do serious damage; nor is wind damage a hazard peculiar to any section of the country. Exceedingly high and dangerous wind movements have occurred in almost every section of the country and history will undoubtedly repeat itself. Windstorm Insurance is very moderate in cost.

Facts For Farm Folks
Written by AGRICULTURAL AUTHORITIES

PROF. H. D. MUNROE

CULLING

The culling of the laying flock has been talked about, and written about and practiced so much that it has been over done. Many good birds have been sold. Many poor pullets have been kept over so that the poultry houses would be filled for winter. So much has been said about culling that many farmers and poultrymen think it is a very complicated thing and only for experts to practice. I hope that I may be able to simplify this business.

Of course, culling should be practiced from the time the chick is hatched, every day until all the pullets are eventually sold as hens. Many poultry raisers have been taught that one culling a year is enough. Every laying flock should be culled in the spring when the price of eggs is low and the price of fowls is high. There are always some undesirable birds to be sold at this time. As soon as the hatching season is over the males should be sold. This saves feed and unfertile eggs are best for the market.

It is best to cull often and to start as early in the summer as the egg production begins to drop off. Culling the heavy breeds is easy if done right. As soon as the brood hens begin to show up in the spring, begin to sell them. With the breeds such as Rocks, Reds and Wyandottes keep up culling in this manner until two-thirds of the flock is sold. Keep the other third over the second year. There is a belief among some people that a broody hen is not good to eat. Keep this in mind. Nature has built up this bird's system so that she might set for 3 weeks with but little to eat. The first time a hen goes broody she is in the best condition that she is going to be in for a long time. Some say that the goo deating. Some say that the fever makes them unfit for eating purposes. A broody hen's temperature is subnormal.

Culling the Leghorn flock is nearly as easy. As soon as the production begins to drop off in the spring, start culling. One night every two weeks, or oftener, go over the flock while they are on the roost. Remove all birds with a dry, shrunken, rough comb and put them in a crate. The next morning look them over carefully. They will be the birds that have stopped laying. Continue this until half the laying flock is sold. Keep the other half over the next winter.

There are several reasons for early culling. It saves feed, the hens sell at a higher price, and it makes room for the early hatched pullets. Hand in hand with early culling goes careful feeding as a means of making money from the laying flock.

Careful feeding means dry laying mash before the birds at all times—lots of feeding space; lots of green feed; not too much scratch grain. Feed scratch once each day. Starting in May the birds should be fed twelve pounds of scratch per hundred each day. Each month reduce this 2 pounds per hundred per day. A moist laying mash mixed with milk will produce more eggs than any one thing. Give the birds all they will clean up in 15 minutes each day.

Culling is easy, if it is thoroughly understood.

Salute

They wave a tattered flag and fondle dusty prints
That hold for them the memories of days long since
Forgotten by the men who know a stranger war,
And men who said that peace would reign forever more.

With rusty sabers dangling on their hips they come
And hardly stir the breeze with the beat of their drum,
They lead a line of younger men. Soon these pass by
With quicker step, and singing with their heads held high.

O men of Gettysburg! O men of Grant and Lee!
Your drums are hardly heard, but we, who crossed the sea,
Salute you in the comradeship of this last day.
Give us your flag, for we shall march ahead some day!

Dispute Over Question of World War "Firsts"

The question of who and what was first killed in the World war is disputed, just as it is in anything else.

The first American killed in that struggle according to records, was Edward Mandell Stone, who died February 15, 1915, while fighting with the French. The American Legion has so honored him as the first American to fall. Also killed before we declared war was a sailor—John Eopolucci of Washington, D. C. He was drowned when the American steamer Aztec was submarined off France, April 1, 1917.

The first combatant American soldier killed in the war, and the one honored by President Harding as "the first American killed in the war" and who has had a bridge dedicated to his memory as such, was Private James B. Gresham, who fell in action at Berthelemont, France, November 2, 1917.

The first American officer killed in the war is said to have been Lieut. W. T. Fitzsimmons of St. Mary's, Kan.

An army nurse has the distinction of being the first officially recorded wounded American in the World war. She is Beatrice McDonald, a New York nurse trained at the Presbyterian hospital. She lost an eye when hit by shrapnel. She was awarded the coveted D. S. C.

The very first soldier killed in the war, say the French, was Corporal Jules Peugeot, shot while resisting advancing German troops on August 2, 1914, 30 hours before war was officially declared. A monument stands in his honor at Joncherey, near Belfort, Alsace.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Meade Tardily Given His Place in History

That General Meade was not honored with a statue long ago, in place of some who played a less conspicuous part, was largely because the value of his services was not fully recognized in the earlier years following the war. But the tributes of Grant and Lee to his military skill, the record of his long and faithful service prior to and following the battle of Gettysburg, a fuller recognition of the greatness of his chief victory when he had been but three days in command of the Army of the Potomac, together with his unblemished character, have served to give him his rightful place in the history of the nation and the admiration of his brother Americans.—Exchange.

Deserve National Tribute

The observance of Memorial day strikes a responsive chord in the heart of every true American citizen.

We cannot do too much for our soldiers, living and dead.

They are the men who represented us—yea, many of them died for us in the great crises of the world's history.

They made the supreme sacrifice for the safety and blessing of generations living, and generations yet unborn.

It is quite fitting that the nation should halt in its usual industrial rush for one entire day in order to pay fitting tribute to our worthy dead, soldiers in all our great American wars.

Practically every voter endorsed the scheme after studying the model, which is considered one of the finest ever contemplated by a small city.

JESUS DESCRIBES THE FUTURE OF THE KINGDOM

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 24:1-25:13 (Print 25:1-13).

GOLDEN TEXT—Take ye heed, watch and pray; for ye know not when the time is.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Being Ready to Help.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Being Ready.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Being Ready.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Christian Preparedness.

1. The Prophetic View of the Course of Time from Christ's Crucifixion to His Second Coming. (24:1-51).

The order of events in this time are in general as follows:

1. The moral condition of the world during Christ's absence. (vv. 1-14).

This is the period covered by the parables of chapter 13.

2. The appearance of the Antichrist (vv. 15-26).

3. The great advent (vv. 27-31).

In connection with this advent there will be mighty convulsions of nature, the mourning of the tribes of the earth, and the gathering of the elect.

4. Warnings to God's people in view of the great advent (vv. 32-51).

The time of this advent is unknown and on the part of many unexpected.

5. Instruction to believers in view of the unexpectedness of Christ's coming (25:1-30).

II. Behavior of Believers in View of the Coming of the Lord (25:1-13).

The teaching in the parable of the ten virgins has continuous application in the present time (I Thess. 16:18; Titus 2:11-13).

1. The equipment of the virgins (vv. 1-5).

(1) The foolish virgins took lamps, but no oil with them (v. 3). Lamps signify Christian profession (Matt. 5:16) and oil the Holy Spirit (Zech. 14). Having lamps but no oil shows that they were professors of religion, without possessing its reality. The Christian life is sustained by the Holy Spirit. As soon as a man is regenerated, the Holy Spirit takes up His abode with him. The Spirit's indwelling therefore, is an advance work upon regeneration. The proof that one is a child of God is that he has the Holy Spirit dwelling within him. (Rom. 8:9). The foolish virgins were professors, but not possessors. (2). The wise virgins possessed both lamps and oil (v. 4). They backed their profession with a real life of righteousness. Both the wise and the foolish virgins slumbered and slept. This shows that as the present age lengthens, the real and the professing church will cease looking for the coming of the Lord. It is unspeakably sad that so many, even of God's chosen—the wise virgins—should give up the expectancy of the return of the Lord.

2. The coming of the bridegroom (vv. 6-12).

(1) The midnight cry (v. 6). In the midst of the night when all the virgins were asleep the cry was heard, "Behold the bridegroom cometh." Who knows but that the time of this cry is now close upon us? (2) Activity of the virgins (v. 7). They all arose and trimmed their lamps. There will be great activity when the Lord comes on the part of both believers and those who only make a profession. It will be a day when the reality of one's faith will be tested. (3) The foolish virgins' request of the wise to share their oil (vv. 8, 9). The revelation of Christ will make manifest the genuineness of our faith and expose the folly of mere profession. When the Lord comes, it will be too late to mend one's ways. (4) The wise enter to the marriage (v. 10). While the foolish were seeking to amend their ways—trying to buy oil—the bridegroom came, and those who were ready were admitted to the marriage. (5) The pitiful petition of the foolish virgins (v. 11). They begged the Lord to open the door. (6). The awful judgment (v. 12). The Lord declared, "I know you not."

3. The solemn obligation (v. 13).

"Watch, for ye know not the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh." Two solemn facts should engage the attention of every one. (1) Entering with Christ to the marriage depends upon faithfulness to the end. If oil and light be wanting when Christ comes, no admittance will be granted to the heavenly banquet. (2) Borrowed religion will not avail at that day. Despite the value of godly companions and associates, they can render no service in the day of Jesus Christ. Personal contact with the Lord Jesus through faith in His blood is the absolute essential.

Those Who Do Not Sleep

De Rivera's Hoodoo

The late Primo de Rivera had to lose. Any Spanish gypsy could have told him so right off. His name was composed of 13 letters, the kingdom he set out to save was that of Alfonso Thirteenth and he began his task on a thirteenth day of September. Therefore Primo's fall before his recent death came when he had been 76 months at the helm—7 plus 6 are 13; or, if you will, after 6 years, 4 months and 13 days. Or, again, after 2326 days—2 plus 3 plus 2 plus 6 are 13. Of the year 1930—1 plus 9 plus 3 plus 0 are 13.

Primo appointed 13 ministers. Put it as you will, Primo was doomed. His day would come according to his horoscope, said the superstitious Andalusians, Primo's countrymen, who cross their fingers hastily at the sight of a one-eyed man or a lizard and invoke Saint Maria to protect them.

"New"

With the coming of spring in North Salem each of the first grade girls was telling the teacher about their new clothes.

Mary, a new resident in the town, was not to be outdone and this is what she told:

"My mother said I already have enough clothes, and anyway, mother said they would be new to the people here."

TIRED WHEN SHE GOT UP

Strengthened by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

St. Paul, Minn.—"I used to be as tired when I got up in the morning as when I went to bed. I had fainting spells and palpitation. Of course it was my age. I read a Lydia E. Pinkham booklet and started taking the Vegetable Compound three times a day. I am now a well woman. Three of my neighbors know what it did for me so they are taking it too. I will write to any woman if Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help her as it did me. I feel like a young woman now and I thank you."—Mrs. H. C. Henry, 286 Fuller Ave., St. Paul, Minnesota.

THE STORY

Floyd Unwin and Howard Bettington take dinner with an old college chum, Alfred Gibbons, financial magnate. Unwin produces a written pledge taken by the three at college to help each other in adversity, explaining that he needs financial assistance to educate his son Bob and laughter Mary. Gibbons agrees to make a place for the daughter in his organization. Mary Unwin is stenographer to a wealthy debauchee, Elgar Radway. Calling at Gibbons' office, as arranged, Mary is asked to betray her employer's secrets and refuses. Radway plans an ocean voyage to recover from the effects of dissipation. Mary is to go as secretary, her brother to accompany her. Bettington, painting on the Maine coast, is kidnaped, and taken aboard Radway's yacht. His clothes are found by Gibbs, a fugitive from justice, who dons them and goes to Bettington's studio, and there falls to his death. Bettington is questioned by a man known as the "Boss." He is shown an account of Gibbs' death, the body being identified as Bettington. The "Boss" intends to hold Radway for $1,000,000 ransom. Bettington is told he will be forced to assist. Radway becomes desperately ill and dies.

"She'll pay?" Bettington thought it would seem odd if he made no comment on a decision which meant a great deal of money to him. He started on his career of deception by smiling at the man he would gladly have strangled.

"It was Mary Unwin who really decided her. I played those two trump cards, Sam and Metzger. Metzger was watching her like a hawk all through the burial service, and she noticed him. Metzger has been less fortunate than I; he cannot conceal his emotions. I shall seem to avoid you, but will come to your room when dinner is over."

Never had Bettington experienced the sense of shame so keenly as when he left Clements and entered the library. Evelyn Radway was walking up and down. She crossed quickly to him as he entered and looked into his eyes without speaking. Then with a little sudden, spontaneous gesture she put out her hands to him.

"I believe you are really my friend," she said.

"No one lives who is more anxious to help you," he answered. Was not this the moment, he wondered, to risk all and tell her of his knowledge of the plot? Then, suddenly, he called to mind how Clements had used a dictagraph to trap those whom he suspected. Clements might be listening now.

He listened to her description of the interview with the steward. He tried to affect wrath and indignation, but achieved only inarticulate sounds. Clements had been right in assuring him that deception would be easy for the reason Evelyn Radway believed in him.

"It's robbery!" he declared. "It's unheard of. Captain Hallett—"

"He must not be told of it," she retorted. "I want you to promise me that. Can't you see the danger of letting him know?"

Bettington listened to himself, as to another man and a stranger, assuring her that he was forced to agree with the wisdom of her course.

"In view of the sort of men they are," he warned gravely, "you should be very careful. Have you a weapon of any sort?"

"No. Do you really think there is danger?"

"I will lend you an automatic. It is better to take every precaution." He wondered if his words would be carried to Clements. They could not be construed into meaning he was playing false with him. Although Bettington felt for Clements an intense loathing he believed that, while the crew was under his orders, the women would be safe. There would be money and feminine consolation at the end of the voyage. At most four days would take them back into New York harbor.

He looked so long at Mrs. Radway that her eyes fell before his gaze. She could not doubt his meaning. He loved her. She felt surrounded by new senses of strength and security.

"I would give my life for you," he said in a low tone, his voice a little husky. "No matter how strange my behavior may seem, always believe that."

His words went to her heart. She was conscious of a closer communion with him than she had before experienced. Not for years had she been so physically strengthless. She felt that but for this interview with Bettington she would have broken down. She knew herself for a woman who would never experience the wholeness and completeness of life, unless she could love and trust.

"Thank you," she said, in that low distinct voice which had always charmed him. "I shall not easily doubt you." She hesitated a moment. "I thought of asking Captain Hallett, his nephew and young Unwin to dinner. Could you come, too? I know it is asking a lot, because the captain is certain to be unpleasant; but on the other hand, you might get on better than I expect and, after all, you four men are united against those others."

"I'll come gladly," he said, "and if you want me to turn my cheek to Hallett's buffets, I'll do so. If we can pull together there will be four men against almost a dozen."

As Bettington went to his own quarters he saw that Hallett was having his dunnage moved into the large rooms formerly occupied by Clements. The steward was not to be seen. The captain looked at the ship's doctor with a sneer.

"I guess you'll miss your friend."

What personal grudge, Bettington wondered, did this bellicose mariner bear against him? He had always liked sailors and been liked by them. Hallett was a new type to him, he supposed. Then he remembered his instructions to enlist the captain's sympathies.

"I may have a more congenial neighbor in you," he said pleasantly.

"Congenial? Me? H—l, no!" Hallett flared. "I'm commander here and I'll have those under me keep their places."

"Admirable," Bettington returned. "I see no objection to that; but I am not under you, Captain. My duties do not conflict with yours, nor am I here to aid in working the ship."

Hallett grunted in reply. There was no answer to this.

Tragedy on the High Seas

Never had a day, which was to end in tragedy, dawned more brightly. Evelyn Radway was early on deck and found Bettington already there. She discovered herself to be free from much of the awkwardness of the day before and greeted the doctor as a friend to whom one need make no explanations or expect any.

Bettington was irritated by finding Slivers at his side. Any interruption at such a time was annoying. "Well?" he said. "What is it?"

"Mr. Clements says, will you kindly look at his throat."

"I suppose I had better go," he said, when the lad was gone.

The name of the steward had brought a troubled look to Mrs. Radway's face. For a moment she had forgotten his existence.

"Certainly," she cried, "and do not let him think I want to evade the monetary payment."

Clements was in the room formerly occupied by the captain.

"My throat's all right," he said, "that was an excuse. I left you all alone last night, because I hoped you might learn something that wouldn't have been said had I been there."

Bettington wondered whether he had not some dictagraphic contrivance which would already have put him in possession of what had passed.

"The most important thing is that Mrs. Radway wants you to know she isn't going to evade paying the ransom."

"That's good," Clements cried. "We must arrange some way in which it can be paid through you. It will be safe to let them use the wireless. Tell Sam that Graumann is to put the instrument in order. I'd better not be seen near the wireless house."

Sam looked doubtful when he heard Clements' instructions.

"Graumann's got at some of the cook's rum," he explained, "and he's not in any condition to monkey with machinery, but I'll see about it."

Graumann, drunk, had a sullen bravado, which Graumann, sober, dared not show. He walked up and down the forecastle to prove his sobriety. It would not take a minute, he declared, to make the necessary adjustments.

"It's Robbery!" He Declared. "It's Unheard of. Captain Hallett—"

He had the misfortune to meet the captain face to face as he crossed the deck. His unsteady step and the odor of rum arrested the skipper's attention.

"You've been drinking, you swine," said Hallett, gripping his arm.

"I'm not too drunk to fix the wireless your fool nephew can't."

Bettington saw that there might be a disagreeable scene.

"Go below," he whispered to Mrs. Radway. "This may frighten Mary."

Graumann laughed aloud. He was stricken with amusement to think he had for days duped this detestable commander. It was the best joke he had ever heard. He wanted everybody to know. It seemed a pity that his victim should remain in ignorance. He felt gifted above other men with a sense of power. He was too full of rebellion and rum to be cautious.

"Then you could have fixed it long ago if you'd wanted to?"

"Any time at all," Graumann boasted, "but I wasn't taking my orders from you. I was obeying the man higher up."

"So there's a man higher up, is there?" said Hallett. "Do the rest of you take orders from him?"

"All of 'em," said Graumann with a comprehensive gesture.

"Then you're a clever fellow," said Hallett with ominous quiet. "You're cleverer than I gave you credit for being, eh?"

"You bet I am," Graumann retorted enthusiastically. Then he laughed aloud. "And you think you're boss here. It's a h—l of a boss you are. You! Huh!"

"If I'm not the boss," Hallett said, with an air of frank inquiry, "who is?"

"You know," Graumann retorted, with sudden suspicion, "you know d—n well who's the real skipper."

Sam had rushed down the companion and implored Clements' aid. "For G—d's sake," he cried, "come and stop Graumann. He's drunk and spilling things to Hallett."

Hallett looked at Clements and Sam with a frown.

"You come at a good time, steward," he said grimly.

"For what?" Clements demanded.

Graumann turned at the well-known voice.

"There's the real captain," he asserted. "He's the man I take off my hat to."

"He ought to be put in irons," Clements said, looking at the man severely. "He's just babbling drunk."

"There's a few more particulars I want from him before that. He thinks I'm not boss aboard the Albatross. Boys," he added, as Bob and Crosby hurried toward the group, "you'd better be witness to what's going on. I'm getting the truth out of this drunken dog here at last and it's going to be interesting, mighty interesting."

Bettington strolled over to the excited men.

"What's happened?" he asked.

Graumann bowed low as he heard the doctor's voice.

"There's another real gentleman," he said. "I take off my hat to him. Him and the Boss is just playing with you till the time comes to strike."

"He's one of you, is he?" Hallett asked. Graumann was wholly unconscious of the tenseness of the situation. He could only realize that he was insulting the man he hated.

"Sure he is," said Graumann. "We're all together." He was in a mood for boasting.

"The man is talking wildly," Bettington said, as calmly as he could. He and Clements alone realized to what perils Graumann's talk was leading them.

"He's talked you both into irons," Hallett cried. "I've suspected this all along and now I know it. Crosby, wireless for government help."

"Do you mean to tell me you are taking these drunken ravings seriously?" It was Clements who spoke.

"I mean I'll have a gunboat alongside by noon; that's what I mean. Go below." He advanced threateningly to Clements. Bettington interposed. He tried the calm, conciliatory tone.

"I shall be cleared of these absurd charges," he began, "but—"

"What charges have I made?" Hallett snapped, interrupting.

"Well, haven't you threatened to put me in irons?"

"You can't mean to call in outside aid," Clements said.

"Why not?"

"What would people say? You'd be laughed at in every port."

"Be reasonable," Bettington broke in. He understood the danger of the moment too well. "You're right to be angry with this fool's chatter, but what you propose to do is too despotic and arbitrary. You must have Mrs. Radway's authorization first."

"You'd talk her over too d—n quick to suit me. You're the kind who's used to hiding behind petticoats. There's a short and ugly word to describe your kind of crook."

Suddenly the sharp hiss of the wireless cut the air. Hallett smiled in triumph. "That settles you birds, I think."

"Sam!" Clements called shrilly.

"Here, Boss," Sam said, materializing.

"Let no message be sent. Smash the instrument if necessary."

In a twinkling Sam had hurled himself into the wireless room. The hissing was stilled. Then the two lads were thrown violently out. Bob rose instantly, but Crosby Todd lay motionless. Hallett looked about him and saw the sinister faces of those who made up his crew. They had come upon him unawares. The deck seemed alive with them.

Todd rose painfully from the deck and stood with Bob at the captain's side. These three opposed the rest, conscious of the hazard which was involved, yet clinging to a hope that authority could quell insurrection.

Bettington stood apart from these two groups. He had seen the coming of tragedy when Graumann's drunken babble had turned Hallett's justifiable suspicion into certain knowledge. No action or word of his could avert the destiny he feared. He watched the men grouping themselves behind Clements. He could see that they were awaiting his word.

Hallett, obstinate, unseeing and blindly at the mercy of his own prejudices, showed, in this fearful moment, his quality of courage. Not for a moment was he led to think of compromise. He was captain and would not be a lesser man.

"By G—d," he cried. "this is mutiny!"

The spectacle of Clements stirred him into violent action.

"You grinning dock rat," he shouted, "I've got the right sort of medicine for mutineers."

With that he pulled a revolver from his left-hand breast pocket and shot the steward through the chest. The little smiling man pitched forward on his face.

Leary made a leap at his captain, a belaying pin upraised. But he was not to catch Hallett so easily. Leary fell across the body of his leader.

"Back to the companion, boys," Hallett yelled.

Menacing the crowd with the weapon, the three sought the companion. It was Hallett's misfortune, born of his hatred to retreat, that he lingered a few seconds too long. It gave Sam time to pull the automatic from Clements' pocket and fire twice. It was a difficult shot for so short-barreled a weapon, and Bettington thought the bullets must have gone wide. He saw that as Sam leveled the gun, Hallett recognized the danger and turned.

"Well, Doc?" Sam demanded, when Bettington had knelt by Clements.

"Not a chance," he returned. "He was killed instantly."

None bothered about Leary, who had followed his chief in death, as in life. For the moment none realized in the greater loss that there was no other member of the yacht's crew competent to work out reckonings or set a course.

When Mrs. Radway at Bettington's suggestion went below with Mary, she experienced a sudden nervousness and uncertainty which she tried to keep from the girl.

Very calmly she seated herself at the grand piano and began to play.

"It will be all right," she assured Mary. "One of the men had been drinking, that was all."

As she spoke there were the sounds of many steps, and men, upon whom the women had not before cast their eyes, came crowding one upon the other. Only one looked at them. Mrs. Radway shuddered at his gaze. It was the insolent scrutiny to which she had been subjected at her husband's burial service. Metzger stood there with what he felt was an attitude that must impress them. His eyes blazed with some internal excitement. Sam had told him the fat was in the fire. He took off his cap with a sweep, smiled and passed to the upper deck.

"What a horrible man," Mary whispered as he disappeared.

She had never seen such a high color in her companion's cheek.

Then two pistol shots rang out.

"Quick," said Mrs. Radway, "they will be coming this way."

Hardly had they crossed to the door leading to the sleeping quarters of the owner and guests, before two more reports were heard. Hastily they closed the steel partition and waited. Steps, hurried steps, were heard and there was a hammering on the door.

"It's Bob's voice," said Mary. She opened the door and her brother, Crosby Todd, and the captain entered.

"Mutiny!" said Bob. He felt himself thrill as he uttered the word which on shipboard may have so disastrous a meaning.

Mrs. Radway wondered why the captain made no report to her. Was he the sort of man to be silent in the presence, on his own ship, of such dangers as these? And, while the rest were standing, he had dropped heavily to a settee in the corridor. There was a terrifying lack of resentment and courage in his face. And as she looked closer, she saw that the ruddy color had faded. She knew in that moment he was badly hurt.

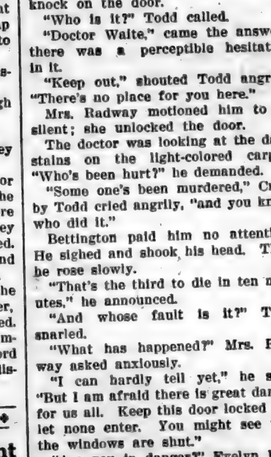
"Oh, what is it?" she cried, wringing her hands.

"They got me, ma'am," he said slowly. "Two balls in the back and one of 'em pierced a lung." There was blood and froth on his paling lips. He pitched face foremost to the ground.

"Doctor Waite must be fetched," Mrs. Radway exclaimed.

"Not him, not him," said Hallett faintly. "He's one of them. God knows I warned you about him, ma'am. Two of a kind, I said, and I was right."

In a few moments he was dead. Courageous, faithful and wholly honest, he had done more harm in his dying than in all his life before. Unwittingly he had given his employer and Mary to the mercy of those who had not Clements' restraint or calculated humanity.



Leary Fell Across the Body of His Leader.

That his aspersions of the surgeon were semi-delirious ravings induced by old prejudices was Mrs. Radway's simple and unhesitating belief.

She noticed with surprise that Crosby Todd was talking almost angrily to Mary.

"Now," he said bitterly, "perhaps you'll believe I was right. I knew he was not what he pretended to be."

"Really, Mr. Todd," Mrs. Radway said, with a touch of hauteur, "you must not let this trouble make you unjust."

"Unjust!" he cried. "Unjust! Mrs. Radway, there's no other explanation. Ask Bob, if you won't believe me. Didn't he stand there alone, watching the whole thing as if he'd planned it?"

Mrs. Radway turned to the younger lad. He had never seen her look so sternly. "Well?" she demanded.

"It did look that way," Bob stammered. There had been, from his way of thinking, some justification for his friend's outburst. The doctor had not sprung to their side when the two opposing groups had formed. But he had not joined the mutineers either.

They all started when there was a knock on the door.

"Who is it?" Todd called.

"Doctor Waite," came the answer; there was a perceptible hesitation in it.

"Keep out," shouted Todd angrily. "There's no place for you here."

Mrs. Radway motioned him to be silent; she unlocked the door.

The doctor was looking at the dark stains on the light-colored carpet. "Who's been hurt?" he demanded.

"Some one's been murdered," Crosby Todd cried angrily, "and you know who did it."

Bettington paid him no attention. He sighed and shook his head. Then he rose slowly.

"That's the third to die in ten minutes," he announced.

"And whose fault is it?" Todd snarled.

"What has happened?" Mrs. Radway asked anxiously.

"I can hardly tell yet," he said. "But I am afraid there is great danger for us all. Keep this door locked and let none enter. You might see that the windows are shut."

"Are you in danger?" Evelyn Radway asked. There was a look in her eyes which told of anxiety for his safety.

"Not yet," he said; "they think I am with them; but hunting with the hounds and running with the fox is a dangerous game." There was a tenderness in his smile which he had not dared to show before.

Perhaps he was aware that this flaming antagonism of the wireless operator was not to be fought successfully, for he neither spoke to him nor looked in his direction. But he turned to the younger man.

"Bob," he said gravely, "there are two women for you to protect. You must take no foolish risks. Stay here until I come back. Start by seeing after the windows if your friend won't do it."

Very cautiously he unlocked the door and left them. For all Bettington knew he was going to his death, and who would there be to look after the four he had just left?

Johnson Used Proverb to Drive Home Point

"He who would bring home the wealth of the Indies must carry the wealth of the Indies with him" is taken from an observation made by Dr. Samuel Johnson, as recorded by James Boswell. Boswell says: "I said to him that it was certainly true, as my friend Dempster had observed in his letter to me upon the subject, that a great part of what was in his Journey to the Western Islands of Scotland had been in his mind before he left London. Johnson: 'Why yes, sir, the topics were; any book of travels will be good in proportion to what a man has previously in his mind; his knowing what to observe; his power of contrasting one mode of life with another. As the Spanish proverb says, "He who would bring home the wealth of the Indies must carry the wealth of the Indies with him." So it is in knowledge.' Boswell: 'The proverb, I suppose, sir, means, he must carry a large stock with him to trade with.' Johnson: 'Yes, sir.'"—Pathfinder Magazine.

Fear to Fish

Along the headwaters of the Orinoco river in Venezuela a race of Indians live whose religious beliefs make them fear to fish or eat the flesh of any animal. They believe human souls are present in the animals and fish.—New York Telegram.

Lumber Has Enemies Too

There is one insect that takes heavy annual toll in lumber. This is the termite, or white ant, says the Forestry Primer. These insects penetrate into the wood of floorings and walls and foundation. They eat their way through the wood, weakening it. They can, in most instances, be kept out by proper precautions.

Earthquake's Vagaries

An earthquake irrigated a cantaloupe field at Brawley, Calif., recently when a tremblor caused small geysers to spout five inches high over the 160-acre field owned by the S. A. Gerrard company. The water irrigated the entire field and then flooded adjacent areas before subsiding. Small sand piles were left in the wake of unusual inundation, and a beet field nearby was completely covered by new sand.

Nation One in Services of Memorial

An order, issued by General Logan, as head of the Grand Army of the Republic, dated May 5, 1868, set aside May 30 for the strewing of flowers or otherwise decorating the graves of dead comrades in every part of the land. This order, which was penned by N. P. Chipman, then adjutant general of the Grand Army, is known as No. 11 and is always read with Lincoln's Gettysburg address at services held by the Grand Army on Memorial day, Rufus R. Wilson writes, in the New York Herald Tribune.

General Logan's order was generally obeyed by the then existing Grand Army posts. On May 30, 1868, the ceremony was observed through New England and the middle and western states, while in the South the day was celebrated by a considerable number of Grand Army posts. At Arlington, Va., the services were especially impressive. Gen. James A. Garfield, then a member of congress, being the principal speaker. He reached what was regarded by those who heard it as his finest oratorical achievement, at least on a subject not political. Another year found Memorial day firmly established as a national institution.

"The Blue and the Gray."

A poem, written and published in 1867, gave impetus to the idea of Memorial day. The poem was "The Blue and the Gray," and its author, Francis Miles Finch, a then little-known lawyer of forty, living on the shores of Lake Cayuga at Ithaca, N. Y. The morrow of Lee's surrender found both North and South weary of conflict and longing for peace. In a thousand pulpits an oft-used text was the words from Micah: "They shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." In each of a million homes there was at least one vacant chair. Hatred still smoldered, a hatred made more intense in the North by Lincoln's assassination and rekindled in the South by the "carpet-bag" government which followed it, and by the course of President Johnson, which led to his impeachment.

And so counsels of moderation and forgiveness only served to temper, not to appease, the bitter recollections of four years of strife and carnage. It remained for Finch, by appealing to the memory of the dead in his verses, "The Blue and the Gray," to strike the note of reconciliation. Written at Ithaca and published first in the Atlantic Monthly, the poem instantly touched the popular heart. Within a month it was being reprinted and quoted in every part of the land.

National Cemetery Idea.

Another man who deserves an honored place in this brief chronicle is Thomas Brougham Baker, father of the national cemetery idea, which preceded its national companion thought, Memorial day. Baker was born of theatrical parents in New York in 1834, and acted with Laura Keene and John Brougham, his adopted father, and in 1861 was a member of the stock company which played in the Washington theater. Among his close friends at that period was Capt. E. L. Hartz, an assistant to Col. D. H. Rucker, depot quartermaster.

One day Baker and Hartz while riding in Seventh street, Washington, witnessed the burial, just off that thoroughfare, of a soldier of the Sixth Massachusetts volunteers. On the instant the thought came to Baker that there should be in every large city a cemetery for the burial of soldiers, owned or controlled by the government, and that there should be a bureau to keep a record of the buried.

Hartz disapproved the idea, declaring that a soldier should be buried where he fell, and that Baker's plan was an impracticable one. Baker received a like answer when he laid his suggestion before Simon Cameron, then secretary of war. Cameron listened impatiently, then brusquely dismissed his caller with a declaration that such a plan had never been adopted by any country and never would be; that soldiers should rest where they fell, and that civilian cemeteries supplied graves for those who did not fall in battle.

Arlington Established.

Baker did not give up the fight for his idea, and finally found a wholehearted supporter in General Nichols, later Sherman's chief-of-staff. They worked together and when Edwin M. Stanton succeeded Cameron, Baker's plan was laid before him. He approved of it. Six acres in the rear of the Old Soldier's home at Washington were set aside as a national cemetery, and the first burial was made on August 3, 1862, although the formal order making it a national cemetery was not issued until 1864.

Baker was appointed a clerk in the quartermaster's office with charge of the burial records of the army and held that post until 1869. Later for eight years he was employed in and around Richmond, compiling cemetery records and inspecting matters connected with the burial corps. Then he was transferred to a clerkship in the quartermaster's office at Chicago.

Eighty-four National Cemeteries.

Before he died Baker saw the system spread to thirty-one states and territories and across the border to Mexico. National cemeteries now number eighty-four. There are seventeen in Virginia, seven in Tennessee, six in Kentucky, four each in North Carolina, Louisiana and Illinois; three each in Maryland, Mississippi, Arkansas and Missouri; two each in the District of Columbia, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Texas, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Indiana and Kansas, and one each in Alabama, West Virginia, Oklahoma, Nebraska, New Mexico, Montana, California and Alaska. The eighty-fourth cemetery is in Mexico City, where are buried the soldiers who fell in the war with Mexico.

They contain the graves of a great army composed of 249,279 known and 153,116 unidentified soldiers. In France, Belgium and England there sleep 30,513 soldiers killed in the World war, so that in these latter times the observance of Memorial day has become a ceremony of international significance, sacred to the memory of all our soldiers who died in defense of the nation.

Beauty Tempers Sadness.

Arlington is easily the most beautiful of all our national cemeteries. Nor is it an altogether mournful place. The breeze always sings through its trees, most days bring sunshine in their train, the view of the river and distant capital moves and appeals, and the birds make it their home in all seasons, for they know in cemeteries they are safe. The Kentucky cardinal is there winter and summer, whistling as cheerily as any fife at reveille, and with it, an equally joyous sprite, is the tufted titmouse in its Confederate gray.

Gettysburg, in addition to its use as a national cemetery, is probably the most clearly defined of any of the great battlefields of the world. Nearly all of the regiments and brigades which fought there long ago located with monuments the precise positions held by them at the most critical moments of three doubtful and momentous days, so that it is now easy, even for a layman, to trace the course of the conflict which marked high tide for the Confederacy and the beginning of the end of the war between the states.

The Unknown

There is to be erected an elaborate addition to the grave of the Unknown Soldier.

No chiseled marble can enhance
The Unknown Soldier's fame;
An eager nation fain would write
On Stars and Stripes his name.
Above the eagle's dizzy heights
His soul its vigil keeps
Until life's ringing reveille
Through death's long bivouac sweeps.

O stricken heart that long has claimed
As thine the great Unknown,
With undimmed vision pierce the veil
That hides thee from thine own,
Then pray for those, the vast unknown
Whose dirge the low wind sings,
For those beside whose wooden cross
Peace folds her blood-stained wings.

REPUBLICAN STATE CONVENTION JUNE 5

With the primary election a thing of the past and the State Convention less than thirty days ahead candidates for nomination for state offices today were centering their attention on obtaining support from delegates to the biennial convention at Indianapolis, June 5th.

Party leaders generally are elated over the strength of the county tickets named in the primary and feel they are entering the campaign preceding the general election with chances for success equally as great as those preceding the Presidential election of 1928.

Although an off-year convention provides little of the spectacular, yet some interesting contests are seen in the scrambles for state nomination. Chief among these are the contests for Judge of the Supreme Court in the First District, for which three candidates are entered; for State Treasurer, and for Superintendent of Public Instruction.

Only a few offices are to be filled and oratory will form the biggest order of the day. No contests are in prospect over the nomination for Secretary of State, for which Otto G. Fifield ,incumbent is a candidate. The Auditor of State also is expecting to go by acclaimation in accordance with the custom long established by renominating two years officers whose records have been good.

Party leaders are seeking selection of the strongest possible ticket at the Convention in order to assure success next November and uphold Governor Harry G. Leslie and President Hoover in their policies of constructive government.

NATIONAL SWINE SHOW AGAIN AT INDIANAPOLIS

The Indiana Board of Agriculture has again made it possible to hold the National Swine Show in connection with the Indiana State Fair this year from August 30 to September 5. $24,969.00 will be paid out for premiums in the swine department.

This being the second year the National has been held in connection with the Indiana State Fair, it may be that it will be the last time this will be possible for a few years, inasmuch as the Directors of the National Swine Growers' Association want this show to be held in connection with the different state fairs in order that all those interested in swine in the United States may have the privilege of attending and showing at the great National Swine Show.

In that case, all Hoosiers should make a great effort to feed out a few good hogs to show this year and plan to attend the wonderful show that will be held from August 30 to September 5. Those who atended this show last year stated that it was the greatest exhibit of swine they had ever seen. The superintendent of this department, Mr. O. L. Reddish of Waveland, expects an even larger show this year.

BLUE AND OLD GOLD 1931 PLATE COLORS

By an act of the 1929 legislature, automobile plates for 1931 are now being made at the Michigan City penitentiary, under the authority of state supervision and not by contract as heretofore.

The act provided that an appropriation of $50,000 be made for the purchase of machinery, subject to the order of the prison trustees. A complete plant has been purchased and installed with all modern conveniences for $40,000 being $10,000 less than the appropriation.

Otto G. Fifield, Secretary of State, has taken personal charge of the manufacture of automobile plates, and by his keen insight and economic methods of transacting business he has succeeded in making a great saving in the quality of the material and cost of manufacture of plates. The law provides that the purchase of material must be made in the open market and manufacturers are anxious to sell to the state at prices heretofore unknown.

Mr. Fifield estimated that it will require 940,700 automobile plates for the year 1931, the plates being made of 24 U. S. gauge cold rolled steel and to be first class in every particular. It is interesting to figure on the automobile plates for Indiana. It will require nearly a million pounds of steel to make the automobile plates that will be carried on cars in Indiana next year. It would require a train load of twenty-three cars to haul all plates if shipped at one time. It will take 8,000 gallons of background and numeral enamel to cover or paint all the plates. If all the plates were laid end to end, it would cover the state, seven inches wide from Lake Michigan to the Ohio River and from Terre Haute to Richmond across the state. The color scheme for 1931 will be blue numerals and old gold background.

UNCONQUERED ETHIOPIA

Young Ethiopian Nobles.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

ETHIOPIA (or Abyssinia), where the world's newest emperor, Ras Taffari, has just taken his throne, is the one sizable and climatically desirable region of Africa which is not under European influence.

It sits aloof on its elevated plateau, unconquered, little known, and almost unsung. Its autonomous position, however, is not for lack of interest, since it is larger than the republic of France; it has a delightful and healthful climate, and its economic resources have large possibilities. It is rather because it has natural strategic advantages of location and because it is inhabited by a wonderfully patriotic and warlike people, who have defended it against all comers.

If we are not too particular in our analogies, Ethiopia might be called the Tibet of Africa. It has no Dalai Lama and no forbidden city of Lhasa, with its monasteries, but it does have a numerous religious people, ancient and isolated, living in a mountain stronghold on the top of a continent.

It is not now exactly a closed territory in the way that Tibet is, but it has been practically closed for long periods in the past and foreign travel within its borders has always been very limited. In order to enter it, one must ask permission of the Ethiopians (Abyssinians) themselves, rather than of some European power. With Afghanistan and Siam, it is one of the three absolute monarchies left in the world.

The beginnings of Ethiopia go back to times of myth and legend. Unlike Egypt, with which some of its early history was doubtless connected, it has left only scanty and very imperfect records. That it was peopled from the north, perhaps from ancient Judea, with additions from Egypt and Arabia, is evident. The people, therefore, are Hamitic and Semitic in origin.

Rulers Descended From Solomon.

One of their most cherished traditions is that of the descent of their line of rulers from the offspring of Solomon and the mysterious queen Makeda, or, as now designated, the Queen of Sheba, who is supposed to have visited King Solomon at Jerusalem about 1,000 B. C. From this time on for some three thousand years their dynasty is believed to have continued, and it is certain that, in spite of many civil, religious, tribal and foreign conflicts, they have maintained themselves as a free and independent people.

Their territory has expanded or contracted from time to time, but its essential integrity has persisted. Their civil and social customs, language, and their outlook upon the rest of the world also have remained largely unchanged; so today they stand as anachronisms in a world which is moving at bewildering speed.

Although surrounded by negro tribes and having some admixture of negro blood brought in through centuries of slave-holding, the Ethiopian is by no means a negro. He is dark-skinned, with hair usually kinky and lips frequently thick, but he has a good high-bridged nose, well-set eyes, and a firm chin. To this he adds a proud and dignified bearing and a warlike, patriotic spirit, which mark him in an outstanding manner.

His principal language is Amharic, an ancient Semitic tongue, but many languages and dialects are spoken. There is no literature in Amharic and only priests can read and write in Geez, also of Semitic origin, but a dead language no longer spoken.

Has a Feudal Government.

The government is an old-fashioned feudalism, such as flourished in Europe in the Middle ages. Theoretically, the hereditary ruler is all-powerful, with the life or death of every man in his hands. All are subject to his call to arms and, through a system of provincial governors, overlords, and petty chiefs, to taxation and other forms of service.

Practically, the system is subject to some variation; for, in a country with poor communication and many physical barriers, might can make right here as elsewhere, and it is sometimes possible for a man to rise to comparative power through his own effort. Under the feudal system, as in days of old, the vast majority of the people are vassals in one degree or another.

Every little village has its chief, or shum, and around him are his retainers. When he travels or appears in public they tag at his heels, and when he is at home they lie about his courtyard like so many hunting dogs, waiting to be called. If he is a big chief, they may number hundreds or, on special occasions, thousands; if he is of minor importance, they may be only two or three; but every one who can muster as much as one small boy to act as his attendant will take great pains to do so.

In addition to serfdom, slavery has existed for hundreds of years, and, although the present government is making a sincere effort to mitigate and diminish it, there is little hope that it can soon be entirely abolished.

Long before our European ancestors had heard of Jesus of Nazareth, Ethiopians were devout Christians, and Christians they have remained to this day. They are Christians of the Coptic, or Monophysite, branch, which originated in Egypt and is supposed to have reached Ethiopia early in the Fourth century. The priesthood is very numerous and very powerful and numbers nearly one-fourth of the male population.

Ras Taffari and his court in Addis Ababa are a mixture of the old and new. Outside the capital city there is nothing modern and the customs of the people have not changed for centuries.

Much Beautiful Scenery.

Much of the country is beautiful beyond description. Mountains and valleys, forests and meadows, lakes and rivers, deep-cut gorges and sheer-walled canyons, all combine to furnish such a variety of natural conditions as is rarely to be found.

Although a large part of the country is thickly inhabited, the people live in small, round, grass-thatched huts, known as tukuls, which are built in small clusters on the tops of knolls or so nestled into the sides of the hills that they seem always to have been there. Since there are no fences or roads, no telegraph lines, and no wheeled vehicles of any kind, the appearance of smiling virgin nature is everywhere maintained.

An expedition of scientists recently spent seven months traveling in Ethiopia. They covered nearly two thousand miles of territory and made nearly two hundred camps. There was scarcely one of these that did not provide an atttractive setting and all practical requirements—level ground for the tents, water and forage for the mules, shade, firewood, and opportunity to collect specimens of mammals and birds.

Ethiopia offers as delightful conditions for outdoor life as can be found anywhere in the world. In the dry season, there is practically no danger of fever, and insect pests, with the exception of fleas in the settlements, offer little or no annoyance.

The Mountain Nyala.

A most interesting Ethiopian animal is the mountain nyala, one of the largest and handsomest of African antelopes and one of the rarest. It is also called giant bushbuck, and on account of its strictly Ethiopian distribution and its great beauty the suggestion has been made that it be rechristened "Queen of Sheba's antelope."

Like its relative, the ordinary bushbuck, it skulks and is given to lying in close concealment. Considering its size, its ability to hide in relatively open country is remarkable.

Fortunately for the hunter, the nyala does at times appear in the open on high ridges or at the edges of mountain glades. In such places he presents a magnificent sight.

The natives met in southern Ethiopia are mainly Gallas, belonging to the most important of the so-called subject tribes. There are various branches of them, some of which have extended into the central and even the northern part of the country, and have become so powerful and so numerous they may almost be regarded as assimilated. They are probably of Hamitic origin and are lighter in color than the old Ethiopians. Although mostly pagan, some have embraced Christianity, while others, especially in the southeast, are Mohammedans.

The SANDMAN STORY

HER VERY OWN ROOM

NOW Mahalia hadn't had a room all, entirely, completely her own. She had had parts of other people's rooms.

She had slept in a room by herself. But during the daytime that room had been used as a sewing room.

She had kept her toys in another room, but that room was also used as a storeroom and when a visitor came little Mahalia had to take her toys into another part of the house, so the visitor's trunk could go in the storeroom.

She could only take some of her things along with her as she only had a little space in which to play in this other part of the house where the back hall ended. That was one of her playing places.

Then She Arranged Her Things All About the Room.

Then she kept her everyday dresses in the room where she slept and her best dresses she kept in her mother's closet.

Her hat and coat and rubbers were kept in a corner of the downstairs hall which was hidden by a heavy curtain. This was where many of the outdoor clothes of the family were kept.

She had never had a place at all, entirely, completely her own.

But now at last she was going to have one.

She had heard the members of the family talking about it.

"Don't you think Mahalia could have a room of her own?"

"She's old enough for a room of her own now."

"It would be nice if the child could have a place she could call her very own, where she could keep everything together, instead of being moved from one spot to another."

"Yes, she is bundled this way and that. Whenever anyone comes here Mahalia has to make a room for the visitor, and her things are put under the bed, or in closets or on shelves because she hasn't any one place to keep them."

And then it was decided.

Up at the top of the house was a room. It had been used as a room where old things were put which were of no special use anywhere and yet which no one wanted to throw away.

There was a bureau there and an old table, three large pictures, two chairs, a washstand and set of dishes.

Really, there was no reason why this room couldn't be fixed up prettily for Mahalia. It could be made pretty with so little trouble.

Oh, what fun it was to fix it up. What a pleasure in getting ready.

Mahalia pulled out her things from this place and from that. It was amazing how much she had in one place or another.

Pretty curtains were put up at the windows, the bureau was given a nice bureau cover, as was the table, and the three pictures were hung on the wall instead of left standing against the wall.

The washstand was put into a corner, instead of standing out in the middle of the floor, and then Mahalia's bed was brought from downstairs.

Her clothes were all put into the closet—everything was in the same closet now. The bureau looked quite fine with a pretty cover, and the bureau drawers were all Mahalia's own.

Then she arranged her things all about the room. There was plenty of space for her toys.

It was remarkable what could be done with a room when things were put into corners and arranged, instead of all standing about, looking in the way.

Mahalia kept working for days, pulling out this and that from some place or other that belonged to her—and all going to the one big room which was now to be hers.

There would be no moving about now. She would have a place all her own.

It was like having a little house of one's own. Oh, it was so nice.

She was so proud of it, so happy about it. She felt like a whole person instead of a person of different parts as she had sometimes felt when part of her belonged in one room, it seemed, and another part in another room.

It was enough to make anyone happy.

And she was happy, beautifully, beautifully happy.

Dear Editor:

THE reason why I pay less and less attention to advice is that so often it's purely negative.

I wrote a piece for a club paper once and showed it to a fellow member. "I'd be afraid of it," he urged, so I tore it up. Later I was sorry. Good-hearted impulses so rarely see the light!

The difference between a scolding mother and a Boy Scout troop is that the mother hushes her boys all the time and the scout leader gives them something positive to do. One says no, the other says yes.

I've often thought the Ten Commandments would have been more effective if they had been positive instead of negative. We get too many don'ts in this world! More and more I want to write as I feel, to act as my good heart directs, to be natural. It takes courage, but the results are glorifying.—FRED BARTON.

Moon Like Volcanic Ash

The moon is composed of some porous material similar to volcanic ash found on the earth. Such is the opinion expressed by Dr. Paul Epstein, of the California Institute of Technology, who based his conclusions on data obtained during a recent eclipse. —Pathfinder Magazine.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

DANDELIONS

A COMMON practice among children is to take a dandelion which has gone to seed and by blowing upon it three times find out "If my mother wants me." If the round, white moon-like ball of fluffy seeds is entirely blown away by the three puffs the child resumes his play, confident that his mother is not becoming anxious for his return home. But if any of the delicate down-like seed spindles remain fixed in their base he knows that "his mother wants him."

In this simple childish custom we find a survival of that worship of the heavenly bodies which, far back in the morning of time, became formulated into the highest, most complicated and most intellectual of heathen cults. The dandelion was one of the plants gathered in the fields of northern and middle Europe on midsummer eve in the days when the worship of Freyja had not yet disappeared. It is now so gathered in many remote parts of these same lands. The sun at his pitch of highest power imparted to it certain mystic qualities. But by midsummer eve most dangelion flowers are gone to seed and resemble a moon, rather than a sun. So, following the trail through the sun gods and moon goddesses of barbarous and classic time, we arrive at last where so many trails end, on the banks of the Nile.

Isis was the moon goddess but she was also the mother of Horus, the sun god. Like Diana and the other goddesses whose origin has been traced back to her, her usual symbol was two horns, or a crescent moon. But the full moon was also a symbol of Isis and in her pictures and statues when she is represented as suckling Horus she is represented with both the orb and the horns on her head—the old moon in the new moon's arms. And the greatest title of Isis was "The Mother of the World." It is easy to see then why in the primitive mind, the idea of motherhood attaches itself to the moon-like orb of the dandelion gone to seed, and why the child performs a rite to Isis to "See if his mother wants him."

For Meditation

NARCOTICS

THE sale of illicit narcotics in the United States has greatly increased within the last ten years. In the city of New York alone there are not less then ten thousand addicts. The total number in the entire United States is wholly a matter of conjecture, as it is almost impossible to create methods by which a definite estimate can be obtained. Perhaps a quarter of a million would not be excessive.

L. A. Barrett.

Two causes explain this large traffic in narcotics. The first is financial. The very large profit appeals strongly to the traders. These narcotics are manufactured in Germany and Switzerland, and to a small extent in Holland. The nominal cost is from $90 to $100 a pound. After they have been smuggled into this country they are diluted with water and drugs until the original pound has been increased to several times the amount. In its adulterated form it sells for at least eight times the cost price, or about $640 per pound. The net profit derived is from 600 to 700 per cent on the original investment. Fabulous fortunes have been made by the professional traders in narcotics. It has been estimated that these profits exceed proportionally the profits derived from bootlegging.

The second reason for this enormous traffic is the large domestic demand for these narcotics. This demand comes from persons who have become enslaved by them and whose hunger for them is irresistible—in many cases absolutely beyond control. This condition is found mostly among the more fortunate people financially, the cost of the article being excessive. It is very common for a person to spend as much as five dollars daily for his illicit drugs.

Strenuous efforts are being made to subdue this traffic and ultimately to eliminate it. A world conference on narcotics will be held this year in Switzerland where these problems will be considered.

The assistant district attorney for New York in a recent address, said: "Smuggling of dope into the United States has become such a formidable problem that only the concerted efforts of nations in which the narcotics are produced and shipped can serve to impede the traffic. A sweeping investigation will be inaugurated and we hope to strike at the roots of the largest combines ever formed for smuggling."
